FREEDOM OF CONTRACT IN SALE OF GOODS LEGISLATION.

By

V. RAMESHAN, M.A., M.L.,

Lecturer in Mercantile Law, University of Madras.

The Sale of Goods Act was the product of law—gives trained in laissez-faire philosophy and it bears substantial evidence of their allegiance to that theory of Social and Economic Organisation. The statutory provisions are applicable in crucial matters like the conditions in a contract of sale of goods only in absence of terms in the bargain of parties to the contrary. In a closely related field, namely, in the field of hire-purchase, however which has been the subject of legislation in England in this century against the background of a changed social philosophy, we find restrictions on these very same matters upon the power to contract out of its provisions.¹ This freedom under the Sale of Goods Legislation of the parties is particularly out of place in the modern days of adhesion contracts in which the bargaining power of one of the parties is ex hypothesi unequal to that of the other party. One of the chief weapons in the armoury of the Courts, in the absence, of specific legislation to mitigate, if not to undo altogether, the mischief of such contracts, has been the doctrine of fundamental obligation.² In the case of contracts of sale of goods, two or three matters must be held to be fundamental and falling out of parties' power to bargain, which, if such contracts are made on a mass scale and therefore become subject to the defects of adhesion contracts, can be effected only by means of such a doctrine. The alleviation even by such a doctrine is rendered all the more difficult by the presence in the existing Sale of Goods Legislation of a clause providing, such power in the parties to bargain away even those matters. From what follows the need for a change in the law will become apparent.

Condition as to title.

A contract of sale of goods is, as per the definition³, a contract whereby the seller transfers or agrees to transfer the property in goods to the buyer for a price. And

1. Hire-purchase Act, 1938.

2. This doctrine, is, by now in the West, a judicially recognised subject of controversy; if not of importance, in its own right. Cf., The Swiss Atlantique Case, (1966) 2 W.L.R. 944 (H.L.). In India it has not been fully explored, though the possibilities seem to be quite assuring. See my article, Fundamental obligation and the Indian Law of Contract, in the Journal of the Indian Law Institute, (1968) Vol. 10, p. 331.

3. In section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1930.

property means according to section 2 (11) a general property in goods and not merely a special property. In other words, under a contract of sale of goods, it is of the essence of the transaction that there should be a transfer of ownership of the goods from the seller to the buyer. It is pertinent to observe here that such a transfer of ownership lies at the root of the transaction and cannot be considered merely to be a necessary and implied condition of the contract. Yet this is what the Sale of Goods Act says in section 14 (a) which reads as follows :

“In a contract of sale, unless the circumstances of the transfer are such as to show a different intention there is,

(a) an implied condition on the part of the seller that in the case of a sale, he has a right to sell the goods and that in the case of an agreement to sell, he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property is to pass :”

And although this is stated to be a condition which is a stipulation “essential to the main purpose of the contract the breach of which gives rise to a right to treat the contract as repudiated”⁴, the buyer cannot reject the goods and repudiate the contract in case of breach of the condition under two sets of circumstances :

(1) Where the contract of sale is not severable and the buyer has accepted the goods or part thereof :

(2) Where the contract is for specific goods the property in which has passed to the buyer.⁵

Property in specific goods passes under normal circumstances to the buyer when the contract is made, and it is immaterial whether payment of the price or delivery of goods or both is postponed.⁶ Under the above provisions, suppose there is a contract of sale of a motor car, the title to the car passes to the buyer from the moment of the making of the contract. After he receives delivery of the car, suppose, it is found that it was a stolen car and the seller had no title to it, the buyer cannot repudiate the transaction but has merely to seek damages from the seller as if there has been breach of merely a warranty and not a condition. Apart from this, there is also the freedom given to the parties in section 14 to exclude this condition altogether. Hence under the present position, a seller may exclude his liability for lack of his title to the goods, although he purports to transfer such title under his contract.

Cheshire and Fifoot have drawn attention to this anomalous position under the English Sale of Goods Act on which our Indian enactment is based.⁷ The learned authors have pointed out the inadequacy of the law and also urged that the condition as to title cannot be contracted out. They observe that to suppose that a clause in a contract of sale of goods can absolve the seller from his obligation to convey title would be “to admit a hopeless incongruity. On the one hand he would be promising to sell the goods, and on the other insisting that he was not passing the property and therefore not making a sale.” Mr. A. H. Hudson has however raised at least three objections⁸ to the argument of Cheshire and Fifoot.

First, Cheshire and Fifoot have relied on *Rowland v. Divall*⁹ for their theory but that case did not decide that the condition as to title could not be contracted out and that was not the question in issue. Rather Scrutton, J. recognised in his judgment in that case the possibility of such exclusion, when he observed that the buyer would demand a return of the purchase price, "unless he has with knowledge of the facts held on to the bargain so as to waive the condition."¹⁰

Second, since a contract of sale of goods can be absolute or conditional¹¹, a seller can aver, under his contract that property may pass but refuse to guarantee that it will, "why should not a contract be a contract of sale within the Act simply because the seller's offer was, 'I will sell you this car which I believe to be mine : but if I should prove to have no title to it, you shall not be entitled to sue for me for return of the price or damages ?'" In such a case the contract can be an "emptio spei" the purchase of a chance of obtaining the goods.

Third, the argument of Cheshire and Fifoot seems to run contrary to a fairly considerable body of authority both pre and post Act cases and opinion of text-writers as well as the opinion in other jurisdictions. As examples of the former, *Eichholz v. Bannister*¹², and *Niblett v. Confectioners Materials*¹³, and the opinions of *Chalmers*¹⁴ and *Benjamin*¹⁵, are cited. Authorities from the U. S. as well as Australia are also cited in support of the view that exclusion of the condition as to title is permissible in a contract of sale of goods.

In the face of such sharp difference of opinion in England, the position in India is not any the less confusing. There seems to be the authority of *Dorab Ally v. Abdool Aziz*¹⁶, which lays down that there is no warranty of title in the case of sales by pawnbrokers of unredeemed pledges. Further, in *Radha Krishan v. Ganga Bizhan*¹⁷, the plaintiff purchased certain ornaments from the defendant which were subsequently held by a criminal Court to be stolen property ; as a consequence the plaintiff was deprived of the ornaments under the orders of the criminal Court. Plaintiff brought thereupon a suit against the seller defendant for the price of the ornaments. On the suit being dismissed by the trial Court, as there was no evidence other than the judgment of the criminal Court to prove that the ornaments were stolen property, the Lahore High Court in revision held that "the onus is on the seller to prove his title¹⁸ because of the implied warranty in section 109 of the Contract Act. Hence the case was remanded to the trial Court which was directed to give the seller opportunity to adduce evidence in support of his title. This is a short judgment and we cannot seek much guidance from it. We can perhaps infer that if the seller did not prove his title, the buyer could repudiate the contract on the ground that there was a fundamental breach although presumably he had had some use of the goods before being deprived of them for lack of seller's title to the goods. We can only suggest that in view of its likely abuse in adhesion contracts, this freedom to exclude condition as to title given under the existing legislation, must at least be restricted by providing, for example, that sufficient notice of the exclusion, if any, must be given to the buyer by bold type letters or otherwise.

Section 15 says where there is a contract of sale goods by description, there is an implied condition that the goods shall correspond with the description. It is recognised to be a condition which goes to the root of the contract and the breach of it entitles the buyer to reject the goods. The oftquoted observation of Lord Abinger in *Chanter v. Hopkins*¹⁹, puts the matter in an expressive manner: "If you contract to sell peas, you cannot oblige a party to take beans."

But the matter for enquiry here is whether (1) this condition can be excluded by contract, and (2) whether it sinks to the level of a warranty as per the provisions of section 13 (2) already quoted. (See note 5).

Prima facie, as this is stated to be an implied condition in the section, it can be excluded by an express term in the contract. But it has been recognised in England to belong to the case of the contract²⁰ and cannot possibly be excluded. That is, notwithstanding any express provision in the contract, a buyer will have his rights against the seller in case the goods do not correspond with their description in the contract. There seems to be no authority on this aspect of the question in India except for one solitary exception. In *Bombay-Baroda and Central Indian Railway v. Firm Nihal Chand Jagan Nath*²¹, the Lahore High Court allowed the seller to go without liability for lack of correspondence of the goods with the description because "although the company (seller) intimated that they believed the goods to be of mild steel, they did not wish to give any guarantee and made it clear that if it turned out to be a case of misdescription, they would not be liable for damages. In the circumstances it must be held that the plaintiffs took delivery of the goods at their own risk."²²

But as regards the latter question, namely, whether such a condition sinks to the level of warranty as per section 13 (2) in much the same fashion as other implied conditions, we have the authority of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts for the proposition that it does not so sink merely on the ground that property in a contract for sale of specific goods has passed to the buyer. In *Mitchell Reid & Co. v. Buldeo Doss Khettry*²³, the Calcutta High Court held that if the goods are not in accordance with the description in the contract, the buyer is entitled to reject the goods, whether the property in them has passed to him or not. In a more recent case²⁴, Mr. Justice Ramachandra Iyer (as he then was) pertinently observed: "the passing of property in the goods is not the test of this right (of the buyer to reject the goods in case the goods are not of the contract description) if the goods do not conform to the description, there is no performance of the contract at all.....the default of the seller goes to the root of the transaction."

The buyer will however lose his right to reject the goods although they are not according to contract description, if he accepts or can be deemed to accept the goods. As per section 42, he is deemed to have accepted the goods either when he intimates to the seller that he has accepted them or when on receiving delivery of the goods he does any act in relation to them which is inconsistent with the ownership of the seller or when after the lapse of a reasonable time he retains the goods without intimating to the seller that he has rejected them. And on the facts of the case in *National Traders v. Hindusthan Soap Works*²⁴, it was in fact held that the buyer was entitled only to damages and not to a refund of the price as he had accepted the goods.

In summing up the points made in the above discussion, we find that the two sets of obligations cast upon the seller under a contract of sale of goods are the sine qua non or such contracts. If the evil of adhesion contracts lies in the abuse of the party in superior bargaining position of his power to extract maximum conditions of non-liability from the other, the minimum safeguard in favour of the latter that the law can provide is to prescribe such obligations to be beyond the pale of negotiation by the parties. In any reform of the Sale of Goods Legislation, the need to categorise these obligations on the part of the seller as fundamental would seem to be imperative. And such a reform will fill up a lacuna in the present law of sale of goods which is all the more significant in that in other fields like law of carriage and bailment there has already been laid down minima of liability which cannot be contracted out.²⁵⁻¹

On this subject we may very well take the cue from the development in the U. S. A. where the Uniform Commercial Code adopted in a number of states (now section 2.302 of the Code) empowers a Court to refuse the enforcement of a sales contract where it finds the contract or any clause therein to be unconscionable at the time it was made. This is by far the most controversial provision in the entire code as it violates the principle of freedom of contract and strikes at the security of transactions by allowing the Court to remake a contract. On the other hand, the protagonists have supported it on the very same ground of freedom of contract by pointing out that it applies only where the element of free choice is absent and that it will contribute and not hinder the freedom of contract in that the 'private autonomy' of contracting parties will be kept within bounds.² If we cannot bring ourselves to bear the shock of such a sudden and far-reaching change in our law, trained as we are in the traditions of strict adherence to freedom of contract, we should at least make a beginning, here and now, to lay down the obligations above stated as fundamental in suitable statutory provisions.

THE PROBLEM OF SOVEREIGNTY IN OUTER SPACE AND CELESTIAL BODIES.

By

V. G. GOSWAMI, M.A., LL.M. Advocate.

The present century has seen two related developments of outstanding importance to the future of humanity. One is the amazingly rapid advance in science and technology ; the other almost equally remarkable, is the growth of the willingness of Governments to undertake projects involving research and production on a stupendous scale. In view of these developments the possibility that space travel may become a reality within a few decades cannot be lightly dismissed, and interest in what would be mankind's greatest adventure has recently been stimulated by the work on high altitude rockets and by the announcement that artificial satellites are to be launched during the International Geophysical Year.¹

The space science has turned the dreams of men to fly in sky, true. The space scientists have contributed much in this field. They have enabled men to penetrate greater and greater distances into space beyond the earth's atmosphere and have opened the way for the use of Outer Space for scientific purposes and telecommunications by means of rockets and artificial satellites equipped with scientific instruments and even by manned rockets. Indeed, they have brought within contemplation the landing of man on other planets.²

Since the sounding rocket is relatively small and inexpensive, it gave developing nations an opportunity to participate in space research without economic hardship. At present more than 70 nations participate in some form of space activity construction of flights equipments and vehicles, operation of ground stations, or training of technicians for projects³. India with its Thumbu arange is participating in space experiments with U. S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration. It may be recalled that the United Nations adopted a resolution sponsoring Thumba Equatorial Launching Site as an international range for scientific research open to all U.N. member states⁴. It is worth noting that the Prime Minister of India agreed to provide international research facilities at Thumba site which has begun functioning regularly.

Some years ago what was only talked about in legends has proved to be reality and who knows what is still in abeyance may not come to be a fact within a few decades. The Soviet Union and the United States have launched manned vehicles with marked success in the field of space exploration. The nature of recent developments and projects indicated a shift towards direct planetary activities. The aim is to explore Moon, Mars and Venus and to put man on the moon by 1969.⁵

It is remarkable that landing men on the moon this year has proved to be the greatest and most daring scientific feat yet in history. This great achievement of the United States has been hailed around the world as a triumph for all mankind.

"Eight days of triumph for mankind", as one newspaper described the Apollo 11 mission, had a fitting climax on 24th July when the men who left their mark on the moon returned to earth in the view of a global television audience and a well done reception from President Richard M. Nixon.⁶ He termed their moon expedition as the greatest work in the history of the world since creation and said that as a result of what happened in this week the world is bigger, infinitely.⁷

The Prime Minister Indira Gandhi paid tribute to the space men and said "Armstrong and Aldrin, who walked on the moon, are delegates of the irrepresible spirit or man the spirit which discovered fire and thought, song and science, the spirit which crosses oceans on a bundle of reeds and leaps from one celestial body to another in a small vehicle of its own making." She further added: "Let us direct this power of man which soars starward into strengthening the bonds of peace and brotherhood on earth."⁸

The triumphs of human spirit over nature by means of space instrumentalities tend to revolutionize the thinking of men on our planet. The launching of the maiden sputnik was considered to be the beginning of new challenges, new problems and new prospects for human civilization. The launching of earth satellites and space rockets has its repercussions on International Law. A new concept has evolved the 'Law of Outer Space'⁹

Space research has slowly advanced from the stage of exploration of outer space to that of military exploitation. The conqueror of space may become the conqueror of the whole universe. Thus there started race and rivalry between the Space Powers. As a result, international jurists contemplated fear of cosmic war.¹⁰ Outer space would be one more arena for virulent forms of nationalism, powerfully reinforced by the clash of ideologies, suspicions, ever greater militarism and perhaps in the end world war third.¹¹

The advent of space exploration gave rise to a number of problems, such as the limits of national sovereignty in outer space above a country's territory and its territorial waters: liability for the damage or injury, and even such highly problematic questions as to the correct behaviour to be adopted towards any living beings which man might meet on the moon.¹² Dr. Jenks classifying such problems in three groups also termed, relations with intelligent life encountered in other worlds as one of the remote problems.¹³

Moreover, the problems such as definition of Outer Space, the limit of Air Space, fixing of boundary line between the two the formulation of law applicable to outer space and the problem of compensation to third states are also knocking at the doors of jurists for their best and just solutions.

After the achievement by the United States in the field of space exploration, the problem of sovereignty over moon is apt to rise as the space men have marked their footprints on the soil of the moon for the first time in the history of mankind and have placed the flag of the United States on the moon. Time alone can show whether American Government will stake a claim of sovereignty over moon by the well-known theory of Flag symbol in international law.

The present article is an attempt to examine the cardinal problem of sovereignty in its different aspects. The main questions in this sphere are as to how far State sovereignty extends in Outer Space? What is Outer Space? What are the criteria to limit territorial Air Space in Outer Space? Where does Outer Space begin from? Where should a boundary line between Air Space and Outer Space be drawn? What are the views of International Jurists in this respect? What are the views of Space Powers on this issue? What does the state practice, if any, of the United States, the Soviet Union and the smaller countries show? How far International Space Treaty has solved the problem in question? How far has the United Nations succeeded in keeping Outer Space and Celestial Bodies immune from the concept of State sovereignty?

The Space age may be taken to have commenced on 4th October, 1957, when the first satellite was launched by the Soviet Union and since then a number of satellites have followed. The United States has won the space race to the moon. It is expected that whatever benefits will come from the moon programme, they will reach every nation of the world and would prove to be to the advantage of the whole mankind. The space research is going on and other planets are also the object of it, more particularly the Mars.

Before the day when the flight above the earth's surface became a reality it was generally believed that Air Space was free for peaceful uses. Grotius refers incidentally to the air and seems to suggest that in his opinion it should be linked to open sea and be incapable of appropriation.¹⁴

The opposite view is that the subjacent state has an absolute right of sovereignty over the entire superincumbent aerial domain without regard to height.¹⁵ Some writers maintain the general principle of the freedom of air; some others allow the subjacent state a certain right of control for purposes of protection and conservation upto a certain height or inverting the order maintain the right of control for purposes of conservation as the general rule subject to the right of innocent passage. Among the exponents of this view are, Fauchille, Rolland, Garies, Oppenheim and many others. Perhaps a majority of recent writers adopt this general view of the right of the states over Air space.¹⁶ The Air space is within the sovereignty of the state subject to a servitude of innocent passage for foreign civil but not military air craft.¹⁷ But these theories as to Air space have tended to become outmoded in recent times. The concept of full and absolute sovereignty of each state in the Air space above its territories found universal agreement after the First World War.¹⁸

An appreciable amount of literature on space law has considered the question of the extent of sovereignty as a cardinal problem of the day. As a point of departure for such discussion is usually the existing law relating to sovereignty in the Air space under the provisions of the municipal legislation of at least fifty countries¹⁹ and under the terms of International Conventions concluded at Paris (1919) and Chicago (1944) it is recognized that a State has complete and exclusive sovereignty over the Air Space above its territory.²⁰ This recognition has crystalized into a rule of customary International Law. However, the difficulty is to determine the meaning and extent of the word 'Air space'²¹ on which the question of sovereignty depends.

The Opinion of International Jurists as to criteria to determine Boundary Line between Air Space and Outer Space.

One school of thought interprets Air Space in terms of 'aerodynamic lift' and maintains that a State may claim sovereignty over the height upto which air craft can ascend. Cooper points out: "After many years of careful research, I am convinced that the term 'Air Space' as used in Paris Convention, was there meant to include only those parts of the atmosphere above the surface of the earth where gaseous air is sufficiently found dense to support balloons and airplanes, the only type of aircraft then in existence."²² Such height would be not more than 20 miles. As far as performance of the existing conventional aircraft is guide to the definition of Air Space, the term 'Jet' which makes more efficient use of air as is available, can breathe at greater height than jet or piston engined aircraft, but 25 miles is probably the outside limit of effective aerodynamic lift.

This theory stems from a recognition of the fact that until the launching of the first sputnik, customary and conventional law of the air had been developed exclusively in relation to flight of aircraft and that despite the flight of a few V. 2's prior to the drafting of the Chicago Convention, the existence of rockets and satellites in the Air Space had neither been provided for nor envisaged.

The merits of such a common sense approach are quite evident, However, it fails to offer a sufficiently precise criterion for drawing the line in Air Space and is rendered less useful by the hybrid craft as the X-15 which possesses characteristics of both, aircraft and spacecraft and can attain a height of upto 47 miles.²³ It is also unlikely that States will be content to restrict their claims to sovereignty to 20 miles when they might claim substantially more without unduly interfering with exploration of outer space by other States. Thus a State might claim the lowest height at which it was possible to put a satellite into orbit (about 70-100 miles.)²⁴

Other factors which might induce a State to claim sovereignty above 20 miles would be the increasing ability of States to exercise effective control over greater heights and that Air Space only begins to lose its character as a continuous medium when a height of 50-55 miles is reached²⁵.

A number of writers invoking what they call the natural interpretation maintain that Air Space is synonymous with 'atmospheric space' and includes any space where air is to be found. This approach has been suggested by Professor Goedhuis in his article 'Some trends in political and legal thinking on the conquest of Space' published in April, 1962. Writers who share the opinion of the writer of this article that Air Space in the International Conventions and National Laws, is synonymous with atmospheric space, include Mayer, W.H. Prince of Hanover, Aaronson, Jenks, Pepin and Cheng.¹

The above approach which seeks to interpret Air Space in terms of atmosphere rather than in terms of aircraft, is open to several criticisms.

(a) One cannot place exclusive emphasis on the natural meaning of the word 'Air Space' without any reference to the actual context in which the word has been used for the past 40 years. Fitzmaurice points out that particular words and phrases are to be given their normal, natural and unstrained meaning in the context in which they occur. It can only be displaced by direct evidence that the terms used are to be understood in another sense than the natural and ordinary one.² The context in which the word was employed during this period in International Conventions, Customary and National Legislation, clearly indicates that it was used in relation to the flight of aircraft. To extract the term Air Space from such a context and to inflate it to prevent height upto the limit of the atmosphere is to give it wholly an artificial meaning.

(b) The natural geographical links are not necessarily juridical links, even though a natural link may sometimes be one factor, inter alia, for putting forward a claim to sovereignty, for example the territorial sea and the continental Shelf.³

(c) As traces of air may be found in the atmosphere upto 10,000 miles, where is one to draw the line?. If such a theory allows the line to be drawn anywhere between 100 and 10,000 miles, it becomes so accommodating that it ceases to have any recognizable identity.

(d) Such an approach implies that every satellite that has been launched violated and continues to violate the Air Space over every country through which it passes. Yet not one State has protested or reserved its position on this matter; on the contrary both individually and collectively, they have propounded the view that outer space is free for the use of all states and its exploration is not to be paralysed by the veto of any one State.⁴

A third approach, representing an even more exaggerated view than the one above maintains that State sovereignty extends 'usque ad infinitum.'⁵

Such a view may be more accurately characterised as 'usque ad absurdum' as Dr. Jenks submitted that the upward extent of territorial sovereignty is not unlimited. He rightly observed the difficulties: "There are, however, more fundamental difficulties. The first is that any projection of territorial sovereignty into space beyond the atmosphere would be inconsistent with the basic astronomical facts. The revolution of the earth on its axis, its rotation around the sun and the motions of the sun and planets through the galaxy, all require that relationship of particular sovereignties on the surface of the earth to space beyond the atmosphere is never consistent for the smallest conceivable fraction of time, such a projection into space of sovereignties based on particular areas of the earth's surface would give us a series of adjacent irregularly shaped cones with a constantly changing content. Celestial bodies would move in and out of these cones all the time. In these circumstances the concept of space cone of sovereignty is meaningless and dangerous abstraction. The second difficulty is that missiles, space stations and space ships moving in space would be constantly changing their positions in relation to subjacent territorial sovereignties at such high speed that whatever relationship of control might subsist between earth and such objects in space would have no territorial aspect analogous to the control exerted by a State in its Air Space or territorial waters—by reason of the astronomical facts—space beyond the atmosphere of the earth is and must always be 'a res extra commercium' incapable of appropriation by the projection into such space of any particular sovereignty based on a fraction of the earth's surface."⁶

Thus this view is contrary to astronomical facts and it is also contrary to any meaningful concept of sovereignty and contrary to State practice.⁷

Some thinkers namely, Cooper⁸ and Kopal⁹ proceeding by the analogy to the law of the sea, suggest the drawing of several lines rather than one. It has been proposed that a State should exercise full sovereignty upto the height to which aircraft can ascend ; that then there should be a second area of upto 300 miles, designated as a 'contiguous zone' and allowing for a right of transit through this zone for all non-military flight instrumentalities and that finally there should be Outer Space, free to all. More recently it has been suggested¹⁰ that there be established a 'neutral zone' between the upper limits of Air Space and the lower limits of Outer Space to be known as 'Neutralia' in which the right of innocent passage would be recognized. Such an attempt to divide space up into sectors and zones would seem to be too impracticable and artificial to commend itself.

Many other proposals have also been made. They suggest more or less arbitrary criteria. One may note the suggestion that sovereignty should extend as far out as the subjacent State could exercise effective control.¹¹

This theory is open to certain criticisms. The main one levelled against it is that under this theory there would be not one single boundary but several boundary lines, since some States were more technically proficient than others and secondly that the boundary would keep going up as science added new techniques for controlling space activities. For these reasons the proposals seems unlikely to be acceptable to many States.¹²

The next proposal suggesting a slight modified criterion has been advocated, that is the so-called Karman Jurisdiction line which would extend upto about 53 miles. Haley observed, "As practical guide for space age, the weight of authority favours a measure of the sort, I have termed the Karman Primary Jurisdiction Line—simply stated the Karman Jurisdiction boundary falls approximately 275,000 feet (53 km.) where an object travelling at 25,000 feet (7 km.) per second loses its aerodynamic lift and centrifugal force takes over, the resulting boundary line would be about 53 miles."¹³

Finally, the proposal is that instead of drawing a demarcation line between Air Space and Outer Space, there should be one doctrine, namely freedom of all inclusive space subject to agreed restrictions.¹⁴

A more sensible approach would be the suggestion that a State should only exercise sovereignty over that area whose boundary is the lowest altitude at which an artificial satellite may be put in orbit at least once around the earth.¹⁵ It would seem that the maximum altitude required to do this would be between 70 and 100 miles.¹⁶

The advantage of such an approach is that it takes cognizance of State practice since the launching of the first sputnik and it recognizes the legality of those satellites already in orbit and may easily be reconciled with claims to sovereignty upto the height of aerodynamic lift or even upto 70 miles. This view may be taken as a reasonable one.

Most of the above theories pre-suppose that a demarcation line must be drawn somewhere in space and the problem is to determine where. However the General Assembly of the United Nations has requested the U.N. Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to work out a definition of Outer Space. This issue was included in the agenda of the 6th Session of the Legal Sub-Committee of the U.N. Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, held in Geneva in 1967 in accordance with a suggestion made by France. Giving his reasons for the necessity of defining Outer Space, the French representative stressed that the countries should have a clear idea of the limits of their sovereignty in extra-terrestrial space. He said that the definition of Outer Space should conform to the interests of every State's security and at the same time should not hamper their space exploration efforts.¹⁷

The Indian delegate said that a ban on military activities in Space would facilitate the problem of Space definition and asked the Sub-committee to consider the various aspects of the issue very carefully. The Soviet representative pointed out the complicated nature of the problem and observed that International law experts appeared to be holding opposite views in this regard. The main problem is whether it is necessary and possible to set upper limits of a State's sovereignty in Outer Space.¹⁸

At present there are no such limits on State sovereignty in Outer Space. Some writers while considering the prospects of space law have offered the most diverse criteria for defining Outer Space. While some hold the view that the sphere of State sovereignty is identical with that of the earth's atmosphere, others have sought to identify it with height that an aircraft or an artificial satellite could reach. Some lawyers identify the sphere of State sovereignty with the part of space effectively controlled by a State, or with the sphere of earth's gravitation. Having failed to find the criteria, physical or technological, necessary for finding a solution to the problem of the upper limit of State sovereignty, many lawyers have plainly rejected the necessity of setting such a limit at all. Outer Space is not merely part of the universe but a medium where the universe exists and where all celestial bodies are in constant movement. In that case one cannot but agree with Albert Einstein that Outer Space is a limitless medium in which heavenly bodies moved.¹⁹

In such conflicting circumstances it would be reasonable to support the view that a State should only exercise its sovereignty over that area whose boundary is the lowest altitude at which an artificial satellite may be placed into orbit at least once around the earth. The view is advantageous in the sense that it takes in view the State practice concerning the flights of earth satellites.

In order to have clear conception of Outer Space it would be proper to consider the views of Space Powers in relation to their State practice. As smaller countries are also involved in this problem their views and practice are quite relevant on the question of State sovereignty in Outer Space. This article presents the views and practice of Soviet Union, the United States and other countries.

The Russian view Point.

During the first five years of space age the Soviet Space Law developed from a collection of principles hastily adopted as a defensive measure against Soviet Space encroachments.²⁰

Many of the view points discussed above have been advanced and adopted at one time or the other by Soviet writers. A new legal posture or difference is apparent in almost every article, for example in the article entitled 'Artificial Satellites and International Law' where the authors mention (a) A aerodynamic lift, (b) Security and (c) Effective Control, as suitable criteria for determining the sovereignty of State in space.²¹

The Russian Jurist Korovin in his book viewed that territorial Air Space comprises the atmosphere over the land and waters of a State to an unrestricted height. It includes the entire atmosphere, lower layers (Troposphere) and upper layers (stratosphere). States as a rule do not fix any upper limit for their Air Space.²² Professor Korovin observed that the Paris, Chicago and related conventions were inapplicable to cosmic space and that National Law did not go to that extent and that analogies drawn from sea or Air Law were not pertinent either. He insisted that all universally accepted rules of International Law, including the protection of foreign citizens, the ban on the use of force and inter-governmental responsibility for losses due to Government action, apply to Outer Space.²³

On the basis of the criteria expounded above the first Soviet sputnik would have violated the space of every country over which it passed. It is not strange therefore to read shortly after the launching of the first sputnik, a Soviet article propounding that in practice, however, hitherto the question of sovereignty over air space has been concerned only with the lower layers of the atmosphere to the extent of 20-30 kilometres from the earth, within the limits of maximum ascent ceiling of present airplanes, and the Soviet earth satellite does not violate the air sovereignty of any State.²⁴

The view basing sovereignty on aerodynamic lift was strongly criticised on the ground that it failed to provide an adequate safeguard for State security.²⁵ The Soviet jurists Kovalev and Cheprov also affirmed this view and gave importance to State security.¹

The principle of effective control has also been advanced by the Soviet jurists after the flight of the first sputnik justifying the freedom of Outer Space. It has its own defects as developed countries might effectively control their Air Space to a greater extent than the undeveloped countries with negligible technical resources. This view thus had a very short lease of life.²

It would be worth-noting that Soviet writers have been propounding new criteria and rejecting the old ones. Even the principle of security has now been abandoned in view of the fact that State security can only be guaranteed by an international agreement prohibiting certain activities in space whenever they occur and not by an unlimited extension of State sovereignty.³

Zhukov in 1959 wrote, "In any case in my opinion, the extent of State sovereignty should not include the space where the first sputnik travelled the majority of the authors stand. more correctly in my view, for a limited interpretation of the notion of 'Air Space'. Some consider that sovereignty in space ends where the area of satellite orbits starts."⁴

The Soviet Union has reserved its freedom of action with respect to claims in Outer Space.⁵ It would be submitted that Soviet writers have accepted in the last the freedom of Outer Space and rejected extensive projection of State sovereignty into Outer Space.

The representatives of the Soviet Government at the meeting of the Legal Subcommittee on Peaceful uses of Outer Space held in Geneva in 1962 appear to have come very close to expressing the view that the resolution adopted by the General Assembly, recommending that Outer Space and celestial bodies are free for exploration and use by all States⁶, has the force of law. The resolution laid down certain principles which were binding upon all States with respect to activities in Outer Space. The Soviet Union took her success in Outer Space as an achievement not only of the Soviet people but of all mankind.

Russian Practice.

The practice is obvious that the Soviet Union on no occasion sought permission beforehand from those States over which its satellites were to pass and on no occasion has it protested against the passage of American satellites on Russian territory. It is thus clear that State sovereignty does not extend "ad infinitum" and the Soviet Union gives way to other States satellites by not claiming its air space to the height where it is possible to place a satellite in orbit as indicated by the Soviet jurists, by Government representatives and by the practice of the Soviet Government.

The above mentioned view has been reaffirmed by the Soviet Union adopting the Resolution 1962 (XVIII) indicating that Outer Space and Celestial bodies are free for exploration and use by all States.⁷

The declaration was welcomed as the first chapter in the book of Space Law. It was felt necessary to embody the principles contained therein in a binding treaty. Thus the draft treaty agreed upon in the Sub-committee was approved by the general Assembly in a unanimously adopted Resolution 2222 (XII) of 19th December, 1966.⁸

The treaty provides that Outer Space including the Moon and other celestial bodies shall be free for exploration and use by all States without discrimination of any kind on a basis of equality.⁹

Therefore the Space treaty has established that Outer Space and Celestial bodies are not subject to control and sovereignty of any one State. As the Soviet Union is one of the parties to the present treaty, her intention seems clear on this point.

The American View Point.

The silence of the Governments of the world on the question of sovereignty and other questions relating to rights in Outer Space has vanished. The view of the American Government is embodied in various statements of Mr. Loftis Becker during his legal advisership of the U. S. Government.¹⁰ Thus his statements before a number of congressional committees may be worth considering.

Mr. O. J. Lissitzyn¹¹, in his article has critically examined his statements. The legal position indicated by Mr. Becker seems to be designed mainly to reserve for the United States the greatest possible bargaining in any future negotiation on Outer Space. In the first place the author has given a summary of statements and then levelled certain criticisms against the statements. One of the striking features of his statements is that they lend no support to the suggestions that Outer Space is 'Res Communis' which like the high seas is incapable of being appropriated by any State. On the other hand there is little indication that the United States has recognized no limit to its sovereignty.

11. 'American position on Outer Space and Antarctica' 53 A.J.I.L. (1959) pages 126-131.

The suggestion that the United States has already engaged in activities in Outer Space which might serve as the foundation for a claim of sovereignty is not consistent with the suggestion that the Air Space as distinct from Outer Space subject to the sovereignty of the United States may extend 10,000 miles upward, for as Mr. Becker recognized all of the satellites upto the time of his remarks, had been orbiting below this altitude, and there is no information indicating that the United States had engaged in any activities in the space above 10,000 miles¹². The two suggestion are thus divergent.

If Mr. Becker's view is accepted then as the United States and the Soviet Union are only engaged in such activities in what may be regarded as Outer Space, the same ought to be divided in between these two Powers only.¹²

The analogy drawn by Mr. Becker between Antarctica and Outer Space is not altogether convincing. There are some clear out differences between the two concepts.¹³ However, the present view of the United States is that Outer Space shall be used for scientific and peaceful purposes. This view has been confirmed by the U. S. Government by adopting the Resolutions 1721 (XVI), 1962 (XVIII) and 1884 (XIII).

The U. S. Deputy Secretary of State for International Organizations Affairs, recognized that the boundary line between Air Space and Outer Space was still undetermined. However, he stated that it was the general view that the satellites so far placed in orbit have been operating in Outer Space. In other words it would seem to imply that the boundary line would be drawn below the height at which it was possible to place a satellite in orbit.¹⁴

Mr. Johnson (then Senator) expressed the same view, Today the space is free. It is unscattered by conflict. No nation holds a concession there. It must remain this way".¹⁵

Mr. Plimson speaking before the Committee on Peaceful Uses of Outer Space observed, "We have rejected the concept of national sovereignty in Outer Space No Moon, no planet shall ever fly a single nation's flag."¹⁶

The most important proposal made by the then President Eisenhower¹⁷ before the General Assembly needs careful consideration. He proposed,

1. I agree that the celestial bodies are not subject to national appropriation by any claim of sovereignty.

2. We press forward with a programme of international co-operation for constructive peaceful uses of Outer Space under the United Nations.

Those principles have been established by way of resolutions of the General Assembly of the United Nations. Under the circumstances to put the claims of sovereignty in Outer Space in the manner adopted by Mr. Becker is to help to demonstrate the absurdity of claims of national sovereignty in Outer Space.¹⁸

Mr. Johnson, the former President remarked, "It is underscored by the fact that in the earliest days of space age, the United States formally insisted that the exploration of space should be a joint adventure of nations with the express objective of fostering peaceful uses. This has been and continues to be our position in word and deed. He further said, "It is my conviction that space can be mankind's first real avenue to peace by giving all men and all nations a common self interest and joint adventure."¹⁹

Consequently the current views sound that the United States also does not project its claim of sovereignty infinitely. An International Space treaty has been concluded to which the United States is one of the parties. It provides that Outer Space including moon and other celestial bodies, is not subject to national appropriation by claim of sovereignty, by means of use or occupation, or by any other means. It further provides that the exploration and use of Outer Space including the moon and other celestial bodies shall be carried out for the benefit of and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind. Outer Space including the moon and other celestial bodies, shall be free for exploration and use by all States without discrimination of any kind.²⁰

Thus the treaty gives recognition to the principle of sovereign equality of States and categorically eliminates all possibility of discrimination.²¹

It would be proper to consider the recent triumph of the United States in order to conclude the practice of the Space Power in discussion. The United States has planted its flag on the surface of the moon. It has sent its citizens on the moon according to scheduled programme. The question arises whether the United States may change its position on the issue of claim of sovereignty.

The Space men have left a message on the moon which is very appreciable and suggestive of intention of the Government of the United States. The message reads ²², "Here men from the planet earth, first set foot upon the moon, July, 1969. We came in peace for all mankind."

The message suggests that the United States does not intend to claim sovereignty over the moon but the success of the United States is to be treated as the success of the whole mankind. The message bears the signature of the President of the United States which suggests that the message is an authoritative one and it embodies the clear intention of the U.S. Government.

The message is in accordance with the provisions of the Space Treaty. It is expected that all nations will comply with the provisions of the treaty in the same spirit as the United States has complied with it at a very critical moment when it is in position to claim sovereignty over the moon. It has been reported that the first men on the moon, Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin did not claim the moon for the United States. ²³

Practice and Views of other States.

Since December 1958, when the debate in the political Committee of the U.N. General Assembly was held a majority of the states expressed that Outer Space did not belong to any one state. The debate further showed the complexity of problems with regard to Outer Space. The international character of Outer Space as 'Res Communis Omnium' seems to have been generally accepted.²⁴ and this has subsequently been confirmed by the unanimous adoption of Resolution 1721 (XVI) both in the Political Committee of the United Nations and in the General Assembly stating that Outer Space is to be free for exploration and use by all States.²⁵

Some representatives pointed out that Outer Space, unlike the Seas, which are finite in nature, was indivisible and hence not subject to national sovereignty. Delegates of several small nations cited the lack of protest at the passage overhead of the Russian and American satellites as proof of the non-existence of national sovereignty at these altitudes.¹

For instance, the representative of Iran stated in the first Committee of the General Assembly, thus, "Furthermore, lack of objection of any State to the free orbiting of satellites seems to be a tacit acknowledgment that territorial sovereignty does not extend beyond any State's own 'Air Space'. These developments point towards the possibility of abiding by the rule of 'Res Communis Omnium' in Outer Space and the free use of Outer Space by all states. Certain analogies may be drawn from the law of Sea, Air Law and the Law of polar regions. Such analogies may be useful only in that they provide a general pattern for action; it would, of course, be a mistake to push them too far in their technicalities."²

The concept that Outer Space was 'Res Nullius' and therefore subject to acquisition, was rejected by several representatives of smaller nations who termed the appropriation of Outer Space or heavenly bodies, impossible or at least improper, while others argued that, the space, the moon and other heavenly bodies were owned or belonged to or were the common domain or common property of all nations and all peoples.

The delegate of Canada suggested that while Outer Space might belong to the world as a whole, jurisdiction over Outer Space and its contents was properly in the United Nations.³ The Italian delegate asserted that Outer Space belonged to all the states of the world and that it was equally the property of all other communities of thinking and organized beings living on other planets.⁴

Most of those who discussed this point noted that rights of free use by all would be feasible only under international control due to danger to the rest of the world of abuse of such rights.⁵

The representative of Peru insisted that there should be jurisdiction of the international community in Outer Space and over celestial bodies. He observed, "So that I am going beyond the theory of 'Res Communis', to the theory of the jurisdiction of international community, I know full well that this jurisdiction must be expressed in the stipulation of a treaty."⁶

The United Kingdom has shown her willingness by adopting the Resolution 1721 (XVI) maintaining that the Outer Space and Celestial Bodies are free for exploration and use by all states in conformity with International Law and are not subject to national appropriation.⁷

Consequently one might find that the statements by the delegates of Great Britain, Argentina, Australia, Italy, Peru, Poland, Iran, Spain, Brazil, Sweden, Cuba, Yugoslavia, Austria, France, Japan and Canada who have unanimously adopted the Resolution 1721 (XVI) maintaining that Outer Space is free for use of all States and is not subject to appropriation by one State, are to the same effect.

The practice of States is also obvious when they adopted the Resolution 1962 (XVIII) on 13th December, 1963 which re-affirmed and re-stated with slight modifications the principles promulgated in the Resolution 1721 (XVI). Thus claims of sovereignty in Outer Space and Celestial Bodies are not recognized by these smaller States too. It is also affirmed that Outer Space and Celestial Bodies should be explored for the betterment of whole mankind and benefit of all States irrespective of their economic and scientific developments. "The conference of eminent lawyers of 108 countries has recommended the United Nations control over Outer Space."⁸

The problem of sovereignty seems however, to have been solved since an International Space Treaty has been concluded providing that there shall be freedom of exploration and use of Outer Space and Celestial Bodies for all States on a basis of equality barring the claims of sovereignty and national appropriation.⁹

From the fact that the United States had landed its citizens on the moon with the message that they have gone there for all mankind, it becomes clear that the conqueror of the new planet intends not to claim sovereignty over the moon and this attitude is consistent with the spirit of the Space Treaty and in consonance with the world opinion. It is expected that the Space Powers will comply with the provisions of the Space Treaty to keep the balance of power in the world arena of today.

Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), section 33-C (2) and the Minimum Wages Act (XI of 1948), section 20 (1)—Interpretation—Claim for wages for overtime and for payment for work done on days of rest—No dispute as to rates—Applications under section 33-C (2)—Jurisdiction of the Labour Court, if barred by the remedy under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act.

Limitation Act (XXXVI of 1963), section 137 and third division of the Schedule—Interpretation—Ejusdem generis—Meaning of the word “other”—Other Articles in the third division has reference to applications under Civil Procedure Code with the exception of applications under the Arbitration Act and also under the Criminal Procedure Code—Applications to be to Courts to be governed by the Articles in the third division and not to Industrial Tribunal or Labour Court.

The language used in section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act shows that the Authority appointed under that provision of law is to exercise jurisdiction for deciding claims which relate to rates of wages, rates for payment of work done on days of rest and overtime rates. If there be no dispute as to rates between the employer and the employees, section 20 (1) would not be attracted. The purpose of section 20 (1) seems to be ensure that the rates prescribed under the Minimum Wages Act are complied with by the employer in making payment and, if any attempt is made to make payments at lower rates, the workmen are given the right to invoke the aid of the Authority appointed under section 20 (1). In cases where there is no dispute as to rates of wages, and the only question is whether a particular payment at the agreed rate in respect of minimum wages, overtime or work on off-days is due to a workman or not, the appropriate remedy is provided in the Payment of Wages Act. If the payment is withheld beyond the time permitted by the Payment of Wages Act even on the ground that the amount claimed by the workman is not due, or if the amount claimed by the workman is not paid on the ground that deductions are to be made by the employer, the employee can seek his remedy by an application under section 15 (1) of the Payment of Wages Act. In cases where section 15 of the Payment of Wages Act may not provide adequate remedy, the remedy can be sought either under section 33-C of the Industrial Disputes Act or by raising an industrial disputes under the Act and having it decided under the various provisions of that Act. In these circumstances, the contention on behalf of the appellant that section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act should not be interpreted as intended to cover all claims in respect of minimum wages or overtime payment or payment for days of rest even though there may be no dispute as to the rates at which those payments are to be claimed could not be accepted. It is true that, under section 20 (3), power is given to the Authority dealing with an application under section 20 (1) to direct payment of the actual amount found due; but this is only an incidental power granted to that Authority, so that the directions made by the Authority under section 20 (1) may be effectively carried out and there may not be unnecessary multiplicity of proceedings. The power to make orders for payment of actual amount due to an employee under section 20 (3) cannot, therefore, be interpreted as indicating that the jurisdiction to the Authority under section 20 (1) has been given for the purpose of enforcement of payment of amounts and not for the purpose of ensuring compliance by the employer with the various rates fixed under that Act.

In the present case there was no dispute relating to the rates. It is true that, in their applications, the workmen did plead the rates at which their claims had to be computed; but it was nowhere stated that those rates were being disputed by the appellant. Even in the pleadings put forward on behalf of the appellant as incorporated in the order of the Labour Court, there was no pleading that the claims of the workmen were payable at a rate different from the rates claimed by them. The only question that arose was whether there were any rates at all fixed under the Minimum Wages Act for overtime and for payment for work done on days of rest. Such a question does not relate to a dispute as to the rates enforceable between the parties so that the remedy under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act could not have been sought by the applicants in any of these application. No question can therefore arise of the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to entertain these application under section 33-C (2) of the Act being barred because of the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act.

The language of Article 137, Limitation Act, 1963 is only slightly different from that of the earlier Article 181 inasmuch as when prescribing the three years period of limitation the first column giving the description of the application reads as "any other application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this division." In fact, the addition of the word "other" between the words "any" and "application" would indicate that the Legislature wanted to make it clear that the principle of interpretation of Article 181 of Act IX of 1908, on the basis of ejusdem generis should be applied when interpreting the new Article 137. This word "other" implies a reference to earlier articles and, consequently, in interpreting this article, regard must be had to the provisions contained in all the earlier articles. The other articles in the third division to the schedule refer to applications under the Civil Procedure Code, with the exception of application under the Arbitration Act and also in two cases applications under the Criminal Procedure Code. The effect of introduction in the third division of the schedule of reference to applications under the Arbitration Act in the old Limitation Act has already been considered in the case of Sha Mulchand & Co., Ltd., (1953) S.C.J. 68. On the same principle, it must be held that even the further alteration made in the articles contained in the third division of the schedule to the new Limitation Act containing references to applications under the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be held to have materially altered the scope of the residuary Article 137 which deals with other applications. It is not possible to hold that the intention of the Legislature was to drastically alter the scope of this article so as to include within it all applications, irrespective of the fact whether they had any reference to the Civil Procedure Code.

This point may be looked at from another angle also. When this Court earlier held that all the articles in the third division to the schedule, including Article 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 governed applications under the Civil Procedure Code only, it clearly implied that the applications must be presented to a Court governed by the Civil Procedure Code. Even the applications under the Arbitration Act that were included within the third division by amendment of Articles 158 and 178 were to be presented to Courts whose proceedings were governed by the Civil Procedure Code. At best, the further amendment now made enlarges the scope of the third division of the schedule so also to include some applications presented to Courts governed by the Criminal Procedure Code. One factor at least remains constant and that is that the applications must be to Courts to be governed by the articles in this division. The scope of the various articles in this division cannot be held to have been so enlarged as to include within them applications to bodies other than Courts, such as a quasi-judicial tribunal, or even an executive authority. An Industrial Tribunal or a Labour Court dealing with applications or references under the Act are not Courts and they are in no way governed either by the Civil Procedure Code or the Criminal Procedure Code. It is difficult, therefore, to accept the submission made that this article will apply even to applications made to an Industrial Tribunal or a Labour Court. The alterations made in the article and in the new Act cannot justify the interpretation that even applications presented to bodies, other than Courts, are now to be governed for purposes of limitation by Article 137.

Appeals by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 25th August, 1967 of the Mysore High Court in Writ Petitions Nos. 741, 973, 974 and 975 of 1956.

B. Sen, Senior Advocate (S. N. Prasad and R. B. Dattar, Advocates, with him), for Appellant (In all the Appeals.)

Jayardan Sharma, Advocate, for Respondents Nos. 4 to 14 (In C.A.No. 170 of 1968), Respondents Nos. 4 to 24 and 26 to 53 (In C.A. No. 171 of 1968), Respondent No. 4 (In C.A. No. 172 of 1968) and Respondents Nos. 4 to 17 (In C.A. No. 173 of 1968).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by Bhargava, J.—These four connected appeals have been filed, by Special Leave, by the Town Municipal Council, Athani, and are directed against a common judgment of the High Court of Mysore in four writ petitions filed by the appellant under Article 226 of the Constitution, dismissing the writ petitions. The circumstances in which these appeals have arisen may be briefly stated.

Four different applications under section 33-G (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act XIV of 1947 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") were filed in the Labour Court, Hubli, by various workmen of the appellant. Application (LCH) No. 139 of 1965 was filed by eleven workmen on 28th July, 1965, seeking computation of their claim for overtime work for the period between 1st April, 1955 and 31st December, 1957, and for work done on weekly off-days for the period between 1st April, 1955 and 31st December, 1960. The amount claimed by each workman was separately indicated in the application under each head. The total claim of all workmen was computed at Rs. 62,420.82 P. according to the workmen themselves. The second application (LCH) No. 138 of 1965 was presented by 50 workmen on 23rd July, 1965, putting forward a claim for washing allowance at Rs. 36 each from 1st January, 1964 to 30th June, 1965, and cost of uniform at Rs. 40 each from 1st January, 1964 to 30th June, 1965 in respect of 18 of those 50 workmen. The third application (LCH) No. 101 of 1965 was filed by one workman alone on 19th April, 1965, claiming a sum of Rs. 8,910.72P. in respect of his overtime work and compensation for work done on weekly off-days. The fourth application (LCH) No. 140 of 1965 was filed on 26th July, 1965 by 14 workmen making a total claim of Rs. 17,302.60 P. for work done on weekly off-days during the period from 1st December, 1960 to 30th June, 1965. 13 of the workmen claimed that they were entitled to payment at Rs. 1,190 each, while one workman's claim was to the extent of Rs. 1,832.60 P.

The Labour Court at Hubli entertained all these applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act, computed the amounts due to the various workmen who had filed the applications, and directed the appellant to make payment of the amounts found due. Thereupon, the appellant challenged the decision of the Labour Court before the High Court of Mysore by four different writ petitions under Article 226 of the Constitution. The order in Application (LCH) No. 139 of 1965 was challenged in Writ Petition No. 741 of 1966, that in Application (LCH) No. 138 of 1965 in Writ Petition No. 973 of 1966 ; that in Application (LCH) No. 101 of 1965 in Writ Petition No. 974 of 1966 ; and that in Application (LCH) No. 140 of 1965 in Writ Petition No. 975 of 1966. The principal ground for challenging the decision of the Labour Court was that all these amounts could have been claimed by the workmen by filing applications under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act XI of 1948 ; and, since that Act was a self-contained Act making provision for relief in such cases, the jurisdiction of the Labour Court under the general Act, viz., the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 was taken away and excluded. It was further pleaded that the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to deal with the claims under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act had become time-barred and such claims, which had become time-barred, could not be entertained by the Labour Court under section 33-C (2) of the Act. Some other pleas were also taken in the writ petitions which we need not mention as they have not been raised before us. The High Court did not accept the plea put forward on behalf of the appellant and dismissed the writ petitions by a common order, dated 25th August, 1967. These four appeals are directed against that common order dismissing the four writ petitions. Civil Appeals Nos. 170, 171, 172 and 173 of 1968 are directed against the order governing Writ Petitions Nos. 741 of 1966, 973 of 1966, 974 of 1966 and 975 of 1966 respectively.

In these appeals in this Court also, the principal point urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant was the same which was raised before the High Court in the Writ Petitions, viz., that the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to deal with the claims of the workmen under section 33-C (2) of the Act was barred by the fact that the same relief could have been claimed by the workmen under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act. In the course of the arguments, however, learned Counsel conceded that he could not press this point in Civil Appeal No. 171 of 1968 arising out of Writ Petition No. 973 of 1966 which was directed against the order of the Labour Court in Application (LCH) No. 138 of 1965, because the claim in that application before the Labour Court was confined to washing allowance and cost of uniform which are items not governed by the Minimum Wages Act at all. His submissions have, therefore, been confined before us to the other three appeals in which the claim of the workmen was for computation of their benefit in respect of overtime work and work done on weekly off-days.

It may be mentioned that the objection to the jurisdiction of the Labour Court was raised on behalf of the appellant not only in the writ petitions before the High Court, but even before the Labour Court itself when that Court took up the hearing of the applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act. However, the ground for challenging the jurisdiction of the Labour Court was confined to the point mentioned by us above. It was not contended either before the Labour Court or in the writ petitions before the High Court that the applications were not covered by the provisions of section 33-C (2) of the Act. The plea taken was that, even though the applications could be made under section 33-C (2) of the Act, the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to proceed under that provisions of law was barred by the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act. Mr. B. Sen, appearing on behalf of the appellant, wanted permission to raise the question whether these applications before the Labour Court were at all included within the scope of section 33-C (2) of the Act ; but, on the objection of learned Counsel for the respondents, the permission sought was refused. As we have mentioned earlier, the jurisdiction of the Labour Court on this ground was not challenged either before the Labour Court itself or before the High Court. No such ground was raised even in the Special Leave petition, nor was it raised at any earlier stage by any application. It was sought to be raised by Mr. Sen for the first time in the course of the arguments in the appeals at the time of final hearing. We did not consider it correct to allow such a new point to be raised at this late stage. However, another new point, which had not been raised before the Labour Court and in the writ petitions before the High Court, was permitted to be argued, because it was raised by a separate application, presented before the hearing, seeking permission to raise it. The new question sought to be raised is that, even if the applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act were competent and not barred by the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act, they were time-barred when presented under Article 137 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act XXXVI of 1963. The question of limitation was incidentally mentioned before the Labour Court as well as the High Court, relying on the circumstance that applications under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act could only have been presented within period of six months from the date when the claims arose. At that stage, reliance was not placed on Article 137 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act; but well before the final hearing, a written application was presented on behalf of the appellant seeking permission to raise this plea of limitation on these appeals. Notice of that application was served on the respondents well in time, so that by the time the appeals came up for hearing, they knew that this point was sought to be raised by the appellant. A question of limitation raises a plea of want of jurisdiction and, in these cases, this question could be decided on the basis of the facts on the record, being a pure question of law. It is in this background that we have permitted this question also to be raised in these appeals, though it was not put forward either in the High Court or before the Labour Court. Thus, we are concerned in these appeals with the two aspects relating to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to entertain application under section 33-C (2) of the Act because of the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act, and the plea that the applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act were time-barred or at least part of the claims under the applications were time-barred in view of Article 137 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1963.

On the first question both the Labour Court and the High Court held that the contention raised on behalf of the appellant that the jurisdiction of the Labour was excluded because of section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act has no force on the assumption that the claims made in these applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act could have been presented before the Labour Court under section 20(1) of the Minimum Wages Act. In our view this assumption was not justified. As we shall indicate hereafter, the claims made by the workmen in the applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act could not have been made before the Labour Court under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act, so that it is not necessary for us to decide the general question of law whether an application under section 33-C(2) of the Act can or cannot be competently entertained by a Labour Court if an application for the same relief is entertainable by the Labour Court under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act.

The long title and the preamble to the Minimum Wages Act show that this Act was passed with the object of making provision for fixing minimum rates of wages in certain employments. The word "wages" has been given a wide meaning in its definition in section 2(h) of that Act and, quite clearly, includes payment in respect of overtime and for work done on weekly off-days which are required to be given by any employer to the workmen under the provisions of that Act itself. Section 13 (1), which deals with weekly off-days, and section 14 (1), which deals with overtime, are as follows :—

" 13. (1) In regard to any scheduled employment minimum rates of wages in respect of which have been fixed under this Act, the appropriate Government may—

(a) fix the number of hours of work which shall constitute a normal working day, inclusive of one or more specified intervals ;

(b) provide for a day of rest in every period of seven days which shall be allowed to all employees or to any specified class of employees and for the payment of remuneration in respect of such days of rest ;

(c) provide for payment for work on a day of rest at a rate not less than the overtime rate."

" 14. (1) Where an employee, whose minimum rate of wages is fixed under this Act by the hour, by the day or by such a longer wage-period as may be prescribed, works on any day in excess of the number of hours constituting a normal working day, the employer shall pay him for every hour or for part of an hour so worked in excess at the overtime rate fixed under this Act or under any law of the appropriate Government for the time being in force, whichever is higher."

In order to provide a remedy against breach of orders made under sections 13 (1) and 14 (1), that Act provides a forum and the manner of seeking the remedy in section 20 which is as follows :—

" 20. (1) The appropriate Government may by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint any Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation or any officer of the Central Government exercising functions as a Labour Commissioner for any region, or any officer of the State Government not below the rank of Labour Commissioner or any other officer with experience as a Judge of a Civil Court or as a stipendiary Magistrate to be the Authority to hear and decide for any specified area all claims arising out of payment of less than the minimum rates of wages or in respect of the payment of remuneration for days of rest or for work done on such days under clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 13 or of wages at the overtime rate under section 14 to employees employed or paid in that area.

(2) Where an employee has any claim of the nature referred to in sub-section (1) the employee himself or any legal practitioner or any official of a registered trade union authorised in writing to act on his behalf or any Inspector, or any person acting with the permission of the Authority appointed under sub-section (1) may apply to such Authority for a direction under sub-section (3) :

Provided that every such application shall be presented within six months from the date on which the minimum wages or other amount became payable :

Provided further that any application may be admitted after the said period of six months when the applicant satisfies the Authority that he had sufficient cause for not making the application within such period.

(3) When any application under sub-section (2) is entertained, the Authority shall hear the applicant and the employer, or give them an opportunity of being heard and after such further inquiry, if any, as it may consider necessary, may, without prejudice to any other penalty to which the employer may be liable under this Act, direct—

(i) in the case of a claim arising out of payment of less than the minimum rates of wages the payment to the employee of the amount by which the minimum wages payable to him exceed the amount actually paid together with the payment of such compensation as the Authority may think fit not exceeding ten times the amount of such excess ;

(ii) in any other case, the payment of the amount due to the employee, together with the payment of such compensation as the Authority may think fit, not exceeding ten rupees ;

and the Authority may direct payment of such compensation in cases where the excess or the amount due is paid by the employer to the employee before the disposal of the application.

(4) If the Authority hearing any application under this section is satisfied that it was either malicious or vexatious it may direct that a penalty not exceeding fifty rupees be paid to the employer by the person presenting the application.

(5) Any amount directed to be paid under this section may be recovered—

(a) if the Authority is a Magistrate by the Authority as if it were a fine imposed by the Authority as a Magistrate, or

(b) if the Authority is not a Magistrate, by any Magistrate to whom the Authority makes application in this behalf, as if it were a fine imposed by such Magistrate.

(6) Every direction of the Authority under this section shall be final.

(7) Every Authority appointed under sub-section (1) shall have all the powers of a civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the purpose of taking evidence and of enforcing the attendance of witnesses and compelling the production of documents, and every such Authority shall be deemed to be a civil Court for all the purposes of section 195 and Chapter XXXV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898."

We have mentioned these provisions of the Minimum Wages Act, because the language used at all stages in that Act leads to the clear inference that that Act is primarily concerned with fixing of rates—rates of minimum wages, overtime rates, rate for payment for work on a day of rest—and is not really intended to be an Act for enforcement of payment of wages for which provision is made in other laws, such as the Payment of Wages Act IV of 1936, and the Industrial Disputes Act XIV of 1947. In section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act also, provision is made for seeking remedy in respect of claims arising out of payment of less than the minimum rates of wages or in respect of payment of remuneration for days of rest or for work done on such days under clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 13 or of wages at the overtime rate under section 14. This language used in section 20 (1) shows that the Authority appointed under that provision of law is to exercise jurisdiction for deciding claims which relates to rates of wages, rates for payment of work done on days of rest and overtime rates. If there be no dispute as to rates between the employer and the employees, section 20 (1) would not be attracted. The purpose of section 20 (1) seems to be to ensure that the rates prescribed under the Minimum Wages Act are complied with by the employer in making payments and, if any attempt is made to make payments at lower rates, the workmen are given the right to invoke the aid of the Authority appointed under section 20 (1). In cases where there is no dispute as to rates of wages, and the only question is whether a particular payment at the agreed rate in respect of minimum wages, overtime or work on off-days is due to a workman or not, the appropriate remedy is provided in the Payment of Wages Act. If the payment is withheld beyond the time permitted by the Payment of Wages Act even on the ground that the amount claimed by the workman is not due, or if the amount claimed by the workman is not paid on the ground that deductions are to be made by the employer, the employee can seek his remedy by an application under section 15 (1) of the Payment of Wages Act. In cases where section 15 of the Payment of Wages Act may not provide adequate remedy, the remedy can be sought either under section 33-C of the Act or by raising an industrial dispute under the Act and having it decided under the various provisions of that Act. In these circumstances, we are unable to accept the submission made by Mr. Sen on behalf of the appellant that section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act should be interpreted as intended to cover all claims in respect of minimum wages or overtime payment or payment for days of rest even though there may be no dispute as to the rates at which those payments are to be claimed. It is true that, under section 20 (3), power is given to the Authority dealing with an application under section 20 (1) to direct payment of the actual amount found due; but this, it appears to us, is only an incidental power granted to that Authority, so that the directions made by the Authority under section 20 (1) may be effectively carried out and there may not be unnecessary multiplicity of proceedings. The power to make orders for payment of actual amount due to an employee under section 20 (3) cannot, therefore, be interputed as indicating that the jurisdiction to the Authority under section 20 (1) has been given for the purpose of enforcement of payment of amounts and for the purpose of ensuring compliance by the employer with the various rates fixed under that Act. This interpretation in our opinion, also harmonises the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act with the provisions of the Payment of Wages Act which was already in existence when the Minimum Wages Act was passed. In the present appeals, therefore, we have to see whether the claims which were made by the workmen in the various applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act were of such a nature that they could have been brought before the Authority under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act inasmuch as they raised disputes relating to the rates for payment of overtime and for work done on weekly off days.

We have examined the applications which were presented before the Labour Court under section 33-C (2) of the Act in these appeals and have also taken into account the pleadings which were put forward on behalf of the appellant in contesting those applications and we are unable to find that there was any dispute relating to the rates. It is true that, in their applications, the workmen did plead the rates at which their claims had to be computed ; but it was nowhere stated that those rates were being disputed by the appellant. Even in the pleadings put forward on behalf of the appellant as incorporated in the order of the Labour Court, there was no pleading that the claims of the workmen were payable at a rate different from the rates claimed by them. It does appear that, in one case, there was a pleading on behalf of the appellant that no rates at all had been prescribed by the Mysore Government. That pleading did not mean that it became a dispute as to the rates at which the payments were to be made by the appellant. The only question that arose was whether there were any rates at all fixed under the Minimum Wages Act for overtime and for payment for work done on days of rest. Such a question does not relate to a dispute as to the rates enforceable between the parties, so that the remedy under section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act could not have been sought by the applicants in any of these applications. No question can, therefore, arise of the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to entertain these applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act being barred because of the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act. The first point raised on behalf of the appellant thus fails.

In dealing with the second question relating to the applicability of Article 137 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, 1963 to applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act, we may first take notice of two decisions of this Court on the scope of the parallel provision contained in Article 181 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act IX of 1908. Article 181 of that Schedule laid down that the period of limitation for an application, for which no period of limitation was provided elsewhere in the schedule or by section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, would be three years, and the time from which the period would begin to run would be when the right to apply accrued. The scope of this article was considered first by this Court in *Sha Mulchand & Co., Ltd. (In Liquidation) v. Jawahar Mills Ltd.*¹, where the Court had to consider the question whether this article would govern an application made by the Official Receiver under section 38 of the Indian Companies Act for rectification of the register of a limited company. The Court noted the fact that the advocate appearing in the case relied strongly on Article 181 of the Limitation Act and, thereafter, took notice of the fact that that article had, in a long series of decisions of most, if not all, of the High Courts been held to govern only applications under the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court also dealt with the argument advanced that the reason for holding that Article 181 was confined to applications under the Code was that the article should be construed ejusdem generis and that as all the articles in the third division of the schedule to the Limitation Act related to applications under the Code Article 181 which was the residuary article must be limited to applications under the Code. That reasoning it was pointed out was no longer applicable because of the amendment of the Limitation Act by the introduction of Articles 158 and 178 which governed applications under the Arbitration Act and not thus under the Code. The Court then considered the views expressed by the various High Courts in a number of cases and held :—

“It does not appear to us quite convincing without further argument that the mere amendment of Articles 158 and 178 can ipso facto alter the meaning which as a result of a long series of judicial decisions of the different High Courts in India came to be attached to the language used in Article 181. This long catena of decisions may well be said to have as it were added the words ‘under the Code’ in the first column of that article. If those words had actually been used in that column then a subsequent amendment of Articles 158 and 178 certainly would not have affected the meaning of that article. If however as a result of judicial construction those words have come to be read into the first column as if those words actually occurred therein we are not of opinion as at present advised that the subsequent amendment of Articles 158 and 178 must necessarily and automatically have the effect of altering the long acquired meaning of Article 181 on the sole and simple ground that after the amendment the reason on which the old construction was founded is no longer available.”

This earlier decision was relied upon by this Court in *Bombay Gas Co., Ltd. v. Gopal Bhiva and others*¹ where the Court had to deal with the argument that applications under section 33-C of the Act will be governed by three years’ limitation provided by Article 181 of the Limitation Act. The Court in dealing with this argument held :

“In our opinion this argument is one of desperation. It is well settled that Article 181 applies only to applications which are made under the Code of Civil Procedure and so its extension to applications made under section 33-C (2) of the Act would not be justified. As early as 1880 the Bombay High Court had held in *Rai Manekbai v. Manekji Kavāsji*² that Article 181 only relates to applications under the Code of Civil Procedure in which case no period of limitation has been prescribed for the application, and the consensus of judicial opinion on this point had been noticed by the Privy Council in *Hansraj Gupta v. Official Liquidators, Dehra Dun Mussoorie Electric Tramway Company Ltd.*³ An attempt was no doubt made in the case of *Sha Mulchand & Co. Ltd. v. Jawahar Mills Ltd.*⁴, to suggest that the amendment of Article 158 and 178 ipso facto altered the meaning which had been attached to the words in Article 181 by judicial decisions, but this attempt failed, because this Court held “that the long catena of decisions under Article 181 may well be said to have, as it were added the words ‘under the Code’ in the first column of that Article. Therefore, it is not possible to accede to the argument that the limitation prescribed by Article 181 can be invoked in dealing with applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act.”

It appears to us that the view expressed by this Court in those cases must be held to be applicable, even when considering the scope and applicability of Article 137 in the new Limitation Act of 1963. The language of Article 137 is only slightly different from that of the earlier Article 181 inasmuch as, when prescribing the three years period of limitation, the first column giving the description of the application reads as “any other application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this division”. In fact, the addition of the word “other” between the words “any” and “application” would indicate that the Legislature wanted to make it clear that the principle of interpretation of Article 181 on the basis of ejusdem generis should be applied when interpreting the new Article 137. This word “other” implies a reference to earlier articles and, consequently, in interpreting this article, regard must be had to the provisions contained in all the earlier articles. The other articles in the third division to the schedule refer to applications under the Code of Civil Procedure, with the exception of applications under the Arbitration Act and also in two cases applications under the Code of Criminal Procedure. The effect of introduction in the third division of the schedule of reference to applications under the Arbitration Act in the old Limitation Act has already been considered by this Court in the case of *Sha Mulchand & Co., Ltd.*¹. We think that, on the same principle, it must be held that even the further alteration made in the Articles contained in the third division of the schedule to the new Limitation Act containing references to applications under the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be held to have materially altered the scope of the residuary Article 137 which deals with other applications. It is not possible to hold that the intention of the Legislature was to drastically alter the scope of this article so as to include within it all applications, irrespective of the fact whether they had any reference to the Code of Civil Procedure.

This point in our opinion, may be looked at from another angle also. When this Court earlier held that all the articles in the third division to the schedule, including Article 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 governed applications under the Code of Civil Procedure only it clearly implied that the applications must be presented to a Court governed by the Code of Civil Procedure. Even the applications under the Arbitration Act that were included within the third division by amendment of Articles 158 and 178 were to be presented to Courts whose proceedings were governed by the Code of Civil Procedure. At best, the further amendment now made enlarges the scope of the third division of the schedule so as also to include some applications presented to Courts governed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. One factor at least remains constant and that is that the applications must be to Courts to be governed by the articles in this division. The scope of the various articles in this division cannot be held to have been so enlarged as to include within them applications to bodies other than Courts, such as a quasi-judicial tribunal, or even an executive authority. An Industrial Tribunal or a Labour Court dealing with applications or references under the Act are not Courts and they are in no way governed either by the Code of Civil Procedure or the Code of Criminal Procedure. We cannot, therefore, accept the submission made that this article will apply even to applications made to an Industrial Tribunal or a Labour Court. The alterations made in the article and in the new Act cannot, in our opinion, justify the interpretation that even applications presented to bodies, other than Courts, are now to be governed for purposes of limitation by Article 137.

Reliance in this connection was placed by learned Counsel for the appellant primarily on the decision of the Bombay High Court in *The Manager, M/s. P.K. Porwall v. The Labour Court of Nagpur*². We are unable to agree with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in that case. The High Court ignored the circumstance that the provisions of Article 137 were sought to be applied to an application which was presented not to a Court but to a Labour Court dealing with an application under section 33-C (2) of the Act and that such a Labour Court is not governed by any procedural code relating to civil or criminal proceedings. That Court appears to have been considerably impressed by the fact that, in the new Limitation Act of 1963, an alteration was made in the Long Title which has been incorrectly described by that Court as Preamble. Under the old Limitation Act, no doubt, the long title was "An Act to consolidate and amend the law for the limitation of suits and for other purposes", while in the new Act of 1963 the long title is "An Act to consolidate and amend the law for the limitation of suits and other proceedings and for purposes connected therewith." In the long title thus the words "other proceedings" have been added; but we do not think that this addition necessarily implies that the limitation Act is intended to govern proceedings before any authority whether executive or quasi-judicial when earlier the old Act was intended to govern proceedings before civil Courts only. It is also true that the Preamble which existed in the old Limitation Act of 1908 has been omitted in the new Act of 1963. The omission of the preamble does not however indicate that there was any intention of the Legislature to change the purposes for which the Limitation Act has been enforced. The Bombay High Court also attached importance to the circumstance that the scope of the new Limitation Act has been enlarged by changing the definition of "applicant" in section 2 (a) of the new Act so as to include even a petitioner and the word "application" so as to include a petition. The question still remains whether this alteration can be held to be intended to cover petitions by a petitioner to authorities other than Courts. We are unable to find any provision in the new Limitation Act which would justify holding that these changes in definition were intended to make the Limitation Act applicable to proceedings before bodies other than Courts. We have already taken notice of the change introduced in the third division of the schedule by including references to applications under the Code of Criminal Procedure which was the only other aspect relied upon by the Bombay High Court in support of its view that applications under section 33-C of the Act will also be governed by the new Article 137. For the reasons we have indicated earlier, we are unable to accept the view expressed by the Bombay High Court; and we hold that Article 137 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, 1963 does not apply to applications under section 33-C (2) of the Act, so that the previous decision of this Court that no limitation is prescribed for such applications remains unaffected.

.. Respondent.

Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (LVII of 1947), section 49 and rule 5—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), section 53—Ahmedabad City Courts Act, 1961—Whether rule 5 ultra vires the State Government—Jurisdiction of Court of Small Causes, Ahmedabad to issue distress warrants pending application for determination of standard rent under section 11—Whether municipal taxes and electricity charges constitute rent recoverable by issue of distress warrant.

By the enactment of the Ahmedabad City Courts Act, 1961, the proceedings before the Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad were governed by that Act and by virtue of the amendment made in section 28 of Bombay Act LVII of 1947 it became a Court of exclusive jurisdiction to try suits, proceedings, claims and questions arising under that Act. Being a Court governed by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, the Ahmedabad Court of Small Causes was competent to exercise, subject to the Ahmedabad City Courts Act, all the powers which a Presidency Small Cause Court may exercise, power to issue a distress warrant being expressly conferred by section 53 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act upon the Courts governed by it, the Court of Small Causes, Ahmedabad, was competent to exercise that power.

Rule 5 was framed under the Bombay Act LVII of 1947 in exercise of the authority conferred by section 49 (2) (iii). After the enactment of the Ahmedabad City Courts Act, 1961, rule 5 as originally framed by the Government of Bombay continued in force by virtue of section 87 of the Bombay Re-organisation Act XI of 1960, and applied to the Ahmedabad Small Causes Court. When rule 5 was framed under Bombay Act LVII of 1947 it was not ultra vires, and it is not shown to have become ultra vires after the enactment of Ahmedabad City Courts Act in its applications to the City of Ahmedabad.

The argument that section 28 sets up a new set of Courts with special powers and jurisdiction is without substance. Section 28 merely confers upon the existing Courts exclusive jurisdiction in respect of matters relating to possession of premises and recovery of rent and to determine claims and question arising under that Act. On that account it does not become a special Court; it is a Court which is competent to exercise all the powers which are conferred upon it by virtue of its constitution under the statute which governs it. The Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad had, therefore, power to issue distress warrant and the power could be exercised even in respect of suits and proceedings which were exclusively triable by it by virtue of the Bombay Act LVII of 1947.

Until standard rent is determined, or an interim order is made, rent at contractual rate is payable and process for recovery by distress warrant will always be adopted. (The Court did not accept the contention that so long as application for fixation of standard rent is pending, the Court's jurisdiction to issue a distress warrant remains suspended.)

By the express terms of the tenancy the appellants had undertaken to pay the municipal taxes and electricity charges as part of the rent; it is not open to them to contend that they are not rent recoverable by the issue of a distress warrant.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 3rd September, 1965 of the Gujarat High Court in Civil Revision Application No. 244 of 1965.

Arun H. Mehta and I. N. Shroff, Advocates, for Appellant.

S. T. Desai, Senior Advocate, (P. C. Bhartari, Advocate and J. B. Dadachanji and O. C. Mathur, Advocates of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji & Co., with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—The respondent is the owner of a house in the town of Ahmedabad. The appellants are the tenants of that house at a monthly rental of Rs. 2,171. Under the agreement of lease the appellants were to pay out of the agreed rent Rs. 810 per month, and the balance was to be appropriated towards a loan advanced by them to the respondent for constructing the house. The appellants had also agreed to pay municipal taxes and electricity charges.

The appellants filed suit No. 1308 of 1963 in the Court of the Small Causes, Ahmedabad, for an order, inter alia, determining the standard rent of the premises in exercise of the power under section 11 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act LVII of 1947. The Court of Small Causes, Ahmedabad, on an application filed by the appellants fixed the contractual rent as "interim standard rent" and directed the appellants to pay the rent and municipal taxes. Pursuant to this order the appellants deposited Rs. 2,403 as rent and Rs. 8,921.25 due as municipal taxes for the year 1964-65. An application by the respondent to withdraw the amount deposited in Court was resisted by the appellants. The Court permitted the respondent to withdraw Rs. 2,403 but not the municipal taxes. The respondent then obtained an order for the issue of a distress warrant under section 53 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act XV of 1882 read with rule 5 of the Rules framed under the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 for recovery of the amount due as municipal taxes. Distress was levied and the order was confirmed. A revision application moved in the High Court of Gujarat against that order was rejected.

In support of this appeal Counsel for the appellants urges that rule 5 of the Rules framed under section 49 of the Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act LVII of 1947 is ultra vires the State Government ; that the Court of Small Causes, Ahmedabad has in any event no jurisdiction to pass an order issuing a distress warrant when trying a suit or proceeding under Bombay Act LVII of 1947 especially when an application for determination of standard rent under section 11 of the Act is pending ; and that the municipal taxes and electricity charges do not constitute rent which may be recovered by the issue of a distress warrant.

By the express terms of the tenancy the appellants had undertaken to pay the municipal taxes and electricity charges as part of the rent ; it is not open to them to contend that they are not rent recoverable by the issue of a distress warrant. The last branch of the argument has therefore, no force.

The relevant provisions of the Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act LVII of 1947 and other statutes which have a bearing may first be noticed. Bombay Act LVII of 1947 was intended to control rents and to confer protection against eviction upon tenants of premises in certain urban areas in the Province of Bombay. By section 28 of the Act certain Courts were designated as Courts of exclusive jurisdiction to entertain and try suits and proceedings between a landlord and tenant relating to recovery of rent or possession to which the provisions of the Act applied and also to decide claims or questions arising under the Act. Section 28 as originally enacted and later amended by Bombay Acts LVIII of 1949 and XV of 1952 in so far as it is material reads :

“(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any law and notwithstanding that by reason of the amount of the claim or for any other reason the suit or proceeding would not but for this provision be within its jurisdiction,

(a) in Greater Bombay the Court of Small Causes, Bombay,

(aa) in any area for which a Court of Small Causes is established under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, such Court and shall have jurisdiction to entertain and try any suit or proceeding between a landlord and a tenant relating to the recovery of rent or possession of any premises to which any of the provisions of this Part apply and to decide any application made under this Act and to deal with any claim or question arising out of this Act or any of its provisions and subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) no other Court shall have jurisdiction to entertain any such suit, proceeding or application or to deal with such claim or question.

(b) * * * * *

* * * * *

Section 28 did not set up new Courts to try suits or proceedings between landlords and tenants : it invested existing Courts with exclusive jurisdiction to try suits and proceedings of the nature set out and claims or questions arising under the Act. Section 31 of the Act provides inter alia that the Courts specified in section 28 shall follow the prescribed procedure in trying and hearing suits proceedings applications and appeals and in executing orders made by them. Section 49 authorises the State Government to make rules for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of the Act and in particular to make rules among other subjects for the procedure to be followed in trying or hearing suits proceedings (including proceedings for execution of decrees and distress warrants) applications, appeals and execution of orders. Pursuant to the authority conferred, rules were framed by Government of Bombay and rule 5 which dealt with the procedure to be followed by the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, for suits, proceedings, appeals, etc., provided in so far as it is material :

“In such of the following suits and proceedings as are cognizable by the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, on the date of the coming into force of these Rules, namely :—

(1) * * * *

(2) proceedings under Chapters VII and VIII of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, and

(3) proceedings for execution of any decree or order passed in any such suit or proceedings, the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, shall follow the practice and procedure provided for the time being (a) in the said Act except Chapter VI thereof, and (b) in the rules made under section 9 of the said Act."

By the enactment of the Bombay Reorganization Act XI of 1960, a separate State of Gujarat was constituted out of the territory which formed the State of Bombay, and the area within the city limits of Ahmedabad formed part of the State of Gujarat. By the Gujarat Adaptation of Laws (State and Concurrent Subjects) Order, 1960, clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 28 of Bombay Act LVII of 1947 as it was originally enacted was deleted. The Legislature of the State of Gujarat enacted the Ahmedabad City Courts Act XIX of 1961 which by section 17 provided that the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882 (XV of 1882), shall extend to and come into force in the City of Ahmedabad on and from the appointed day. By section 18 it was provided :

"The Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882 (XV of 1882), and the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 (Bombay Act LVII of 1947), shall in their application to the City of Ahmedabad stand amended in the manner and to the extent specified in the Schedule."

By section 19 it was provided :

"With effect on and from the appointed day * * * * the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887 (IX of 1887), and all rules, notifications and orders made thereunder shall cease to apply to or be in force in the City of Ahmedabad

* * * * *

By the schedule certain amendments were made in the Presidency Small Causes Courts Act, 1882 in its application to the City of Ahmedabad. By clause 13 of the schedule section 50 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act was to apply to every place within the City of Ahmedabad. Certain amendments were also made in section 28 of the Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging Houses Rates Control Act, 1947, and in sub-section (1) of section 28, before clause (aa) the following clause was inserted :

"(a) in the City of Ahmedabad, the Court of Small Causes of Ahmedabad."

By the enactment of the Ahmedabad City Courts Act, 1961, the proceedings before the Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad were governed by that Act and by virtue of the amendment made in section 28 of Bombay Act LVII of 1947 it became a Court of exclusive jurisdiction to try suits, proceedings, claims and questions arising under that Act. Being a Court governed by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, the Ahmedabad Court of Small Causes was competent to exercise, subject to the Ahmedabad City Courts Act, all the powers which a Presidency Small Causes Court may exercise. Power to issue a distress warrant being expressly conferred by section 53 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act upon the Courts governed by it, the Court of Small Causes, Ahmedabad, was competent to exercise that power.

Rule 5 was framed under the Bombay Act LVII of 1947 in exercise of the authority conferred by section 49 (2) (iii). After the enactment of the Ahmedabad City Courts Act, 1961, rule 5 as originally framed by the Government of Bombay continued in force by virtue of section 87 of the Bombay Reorganization Act XI of 1960, and applied to the Ahmedabad Small Causes Court. When rule 5 was framed under Bombay Act LVII of 1947 it was not ultra vires, and it is not shown to have become ultra vires after the enactment of the Ahmedabad City Courts Act in its application to the City of Ahmedabad.

The argument that section 28 sets up a new set of Courts with special powers and jurisdiction is without substance. Section 28 merely confers upon the existing Courts exclusive jurisdiction in respect of matters relating to possession of premises and recovery of rent and to determine claims and questions arising under that Act. On that account it does not become a Special Court : it is a Court which is competent to exercise all the powers which are conferred upon it by virtue of its constitution under the statute which governs it. The Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad had, therefore, power to issue distress warrant and that power could be exercised even in respect of suits and proceedings which were exclusively triable by it by virtue of the Bombay Act LVII of 1947.

We are also unable to hold that so long as application for fixation of standard rent is pending, the Court's jurisdiction to issue a distress warrant remains suspended. Until standard rent is determined, or an interim order is made, rent at the contractual rate is payable and process for recovery by distress warrant may always be adopted. Section 11 of Bombay Act LVII of 1947 confers upon the Court power to fix standard rent and permitted increases in certain cases. The Court is also competent to determine interim standard rent, and direct payment pending final determination of standard rent.

The appellants applied for fixation of standard rent and invited the Court to pass an order fixing interim standard rent and the Court of Small Causes proceeded to pass the order for payment of rent and municipal taxes. In the present case there was an express order of the Court requiring the appellants to deposit in Court Rs. 810 per month and also to deposit municipal taxes. The Court of Small Causes ordered that the amount deposited by the appellants towards municipal taxes shall not be paid over to the landlord. The amount was on that account not available to the respondent. The respondent was unable to pay the taxes and the municipality threatened to attach the property. The amount of municipal taxes was due and it was payable by the appellants. Though deposited in Court, it could not be withdrawn by the respondent. The municipal taxes were, therefore, in arrears and a distress warrant could be applied for under section 53 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act by the respondent.

It was urged that the appellants had to pay the amount of interim standard rent twice over : once when they deposited it in the Court and again when they satisfied the demand to avoid execution of the distress warrant. The landlord undoubtedly cannot obtain the amount twice over. But that does not mean that when the tenant has not made the amount available to the landlord the application for distress was not maintainable.

The argument that the erroneous order passed by the Court of Small Causes preventing the landlord from recovering the amount of municipal taxes could have been got corrected by approaching the superior Courts and so long as that order stood, no distress could be levied, ignores the fact that the appellants had persuaded the Court of Small Causes to pass that order. In our judgment, there was no bar to the respondent maintaining the application for distress.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 311 (2)—Scope—Tenure post in the Government of India—Appointment to—Reversion to the Assam State before the expiry of the tenure to post carrying smaller salary, if amounts to reduction in rank and involves a stigma.

The cadres for the Indian Administrative Services are to be found in the States only. There is no cadre in the Government of India. A few of these persons are however, intended to serve at the Centre. When they do so they enjoy better emoluments and status. They rank higher in the service and even in the Warrant of Precedence of the President. In the States they cannot get the same salary in any post as Secretaries are entitled to in the Centre. The appointments to the Centre are not in any sense a deputation. They mean promotion to a higher post. The only safeguard is that many of the posts at the Centre are tenure posts. Those of Secretaries and equivalent posts are for five years and for lower posts the duration of tenure is four years.

The appellant Das held one of the tenure posts. His tenure ordinarily was five years in the post. He got his secretaryship on 30th July, 1964 and was expected to continue in that post for five years, that is, till 29th July, 1969. The short question in this case is whether his reversion to the Assam State before the expiry of the period of his tenure to a post carrying a smaller salary amounts to reduction in rank and involves a stigma upon him.

Now it has been ruled again and again in this Court that reduction in rank accompanied by a stigma must follow the procedure of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution. It is manifest that if this was a reduction in rank, it was accompanied by a stigma. There was a stigma attaching to the reversion and it was not a pure accident of service. Nothing turns upon the words of the notification 'until further orders' because all appointments to tenure posts have the same kind of order. By an amendment of Fundamental Rule 9 (30) in 1967, a form was prescribed and that form was used in his case. These notifications also do not indicate that this was a deputation which could be terminated at any time. The notifications involving deputation always clearly so state the fact. Many notifications brought to the notice of the Court during the argument which bear out this fact and none to the contrary was shown. Das thus held a tenure post which was to last till 29th July, 1969. A few months alone remained and he was not so desperately required in Assam that he could not continue here for the full duration. The fact that it was found necessary to break into his tenure period close to its end must be read in conjunction with the three alternatives and they clearly demonstrate that the intention was to reduce him in rank by sheer pressure of denying him a secretaryship. No Secretary has so far been sent back in this manner and this emphasises the element of penalty. His retention in Government of India on a lower post thus was a reduction in rank.

No State Service (the highest being Chief Secretary's) carries the emoluments which Das was drawing as a Secretary for years. His reversion would have meant a big drop in his emoluments. Das was prepared to go to Assam provided he got his salary Rs. 4,000 per month but it was stated before that that was not possible. Das was prepared to serve at the Centre in any capacity which brought him the same salary. This too was said to be not possible. To give him a Hobson's choice of choosing between reversion to a post carrying a lower salary or staying here on a lower salaried post, is to indirectly reduce him in rank.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hidayatullah, C. J.—This is an appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Calcutta dismissing a writ petition filed by the appellant Debesh Chandra Das. This appeal is by certificate against the judgment, dated 18th September, 1968.

The appellant is a member of the Indian Civil Service. He qualified in 1933 and arrived in India in 1934 and was allotted to Assam. In 1940 he came to the Government of India and became in turn Under-Secretary and Deputy-Secretary, Home Ministry. In 1947 he went back to Assam where he held the post of Development Commissioner and Chief Secretary. In 1951 he again came to the Government of India as Secretary, Public Service Commission. In 1955 he became Joint Secretary to the Government of India and continued to hold that post till 1961. From 1961 to 1964 he was Managing Director of Central Warehousing Corporation. On 29th July, 1964, he was appointed Secretary, Department of Social Security with effect from, 30th July, 1964 and until further orders. On 6th March, 1965 the Appointments Committee of the Cabinet approved the proposal to continue him as Secretary, Department of Social Security. He continued in that Department, which is now renamed as the Department of Social Welfare. On 20th June, 1966 he received a letter from the Cabinet Secretary which was to the following effect :

“My dear Debesh :

For sometime, the Government has been examining the question of building up a higher level of administrative efficiency. This is much more important in the context of the recent developments in the country. The future is also likely to be full of problems. In this connection, the Government examined the names of those who are at present occupying top level administrative posts with a view to ascertaining whether they were fully capable of meeting the new challenges or whether they should make room for younger people. As a result of this examination, it has been decided that you should be asked either to revert to your parent State or to proceed on leave preparatory to retirement or to accept some post lower than that of Secretary of Government. I would be glad if you would please let me know immediately as to what you propose to do so that further action in the matter may be taken.

Yours sincerely:
(Sd.) DHARMA VIRA.”

He asked for interview with the Cabinet Secretary and the Prime Minister and represented his case but nothing seems to have come of it. On 7th September 1966 he received a second letter from the Cabinet Secretary which said inter alia as follows :

“.....I am now directed to inform you that after considering your oral and written representations in the matter Government has decided that your services may be placed at the disposal of your parent State, namely, Assam. In case, however you like to proceed on leave preparatory to retirement will you please let me know ?.....”

The appellant treated these orders as reduction in his rank and filed a writ petition in the High Court of Calcutta on 19th September, 1966. According to him the order amounted to a reduction in rank since the pay of a Secretary to the Government of India (I.C.S.) is Rs. 4,000 and the highest pay in Assam (I.C.S.) is Rs.3,500. There being no equal post in the Government of Assam his reversion to the Assam Service meant a reduction not only in his emoluments but also in his rank. He also contended that he held a 5 years' tenure post and the tenure was to end on 29th July, 1969 but was wrongly terminated before the expiry of five years. He also alleged that there was a stigma attached to his reversion as was clear from the three alternatives which the letter of the Cabinet Secretary gave him. The highest post in the Government of Assam being equivalent to the Joint Secretary of Government of India, his reversion to the highest post, i.e. Chief Secretary to the Government of Assam, amounted to a reduction in rank. He contended, if this was the case, the procedure under Article 311 (2) of the Constitution ought to have been followed and without following that procedure the order was not sustainable.

When the appellant filed the writ petition he was appointed as a Special Secretary on 15th October, 1966 but under one of his juniors. It may be mentioned here that the appellant is next only to the Cabinet Secretary in the matter of seniority. He also received a letter from the Government of India dated 20th October, 1966 in which it was said that Government was considering giving him a post equal to that of a Secretary. The writ petition was dismissed by Justice A. N. Ray on 19th May, 1967. The following day the appellant was again reposted to Assam but he filed an appeal and obtained a stay. On 21st March, 1968 he was appointed Secretary in the Department of Statistics in the Central Government. The appeal was heard by Justice P. B. Mukharji and Justice A. N. Sen who differed, the former was in favour of dismissing the appeal while the latter was in favour of allowing it. The appeal was then laid before Sankar Prosad Mitra, J. who agreed with Justice Mukharji and the appeal was dismissed on 18th September, 1968. On 20th September, 1968 the appellant was reposted to Assam. He, however, filed the present appeal and has proceeded on leave although no orders on leave application seemed to have been passed when we heard the appeal.

In this appeal also, it is contended that the reversion of the appellant to the Assam Service amounts to a reduction in rank. This is on the ground that he held a higher post in the Government of India and there is no post equal to it under the Assam Government. The post of the Chief Secretary in the Assam Government is equal to the post of a Joint Secretary in the Government of India and his reversion would therefore indirectly mean a reduction in his rank and also in his emoluments because the highest post in Assam does not carry a salary equal to that of a Secretary in the Government of India. He also contends that under Article 311 (2) an enquiry had to be made and he had to be given a chance of explaining his case if the reduction in rank amounted to a penalty. He contends that the letters of the Cabinet Secretary speaks for themselves and clearly show that he was being offered a lower post even in the Government of India if he was to continue here denoting thereby a desire to reduce him in rank. The letters also speak of his unsatisfactory work and, therefore, cast a stigma on him and therefore his reversion must be treated as a penalty and if the procedure laid down under Article 311(2) is not followed, the order of the Government of India could not be sustained. This, in short, is the case which he had put up before the High Court and has now put up before us.

The Government of India contends that he was on deputation and the deputation could be terminated at any time ; that his orders of appointment clearly show that the appointment were "until further orders" and that he had no right to continue in the Government of India if his services were not required and that his reversion to his parent State did not amount either to any reduction in rank or a penalty, and, therefore, the order was quite legal.

Prior to 1946 the members of the Indian Civil Service were in a Civil Service of the Secretary of State. As a result of a conference between Chief Ministers and the Government of India an All India Administrative Service was constituted in October, 1946. This agreement was entered into under section 263 of the Government of India Act, 1935. The Indian Administrative Service was common to the Centre and the Provinces. On 25th January, 1950 rules were framed under sections 241 (2) and 247 of the Government of India Act, 1935. These rules were known as the Indian Civil Administrative (Cadre) Rules, 1950. Under these rules cadres were constituted. A 'cadre' is defined in Fundamental Rule 9 (4) as the strength of a service or a part of a service sanctioned as a separate unit. In these rules 'cadre officer' meant an officer belonging to any of these categories specified in rule 4 and 'cadre post' meant any duty post included in the Schedule to the Rules. In rule 4, it was provided that every cadre post shall be filled inter alia by an officer who is a member of the Indian Civil Service. In the Schedule Assam was to have 20 senior posts under the Provincial Government, 6 senior posts under the Central Government and 37 posts for direct recruitment, and junior posts and certain reserves. After 1954 a number of Rules were framed and we are concerned in this case with the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954, Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955 and Indian Administrative Service (Pay) Rules, 1954. Under the Pay Rules were shown the posts carrying pay above the time-scale pay in the Administrative Service under the State Governments. In Assam there were four such posts—Chief Secretary (Rs. 3,000), Member, Board of Revenue, Commissioners and Development Commissioners (Rs. 2,500—125/3—2,750). These four were the only posts above the time-scale and the highest pay possible was that of a Chief Secretary carrying Rs. 3,000 P.M. [Vide All India Services Manual (1967), p. 248]. The lower posts in Assam were: Secretaries, Additional Secretaries, Joint Secretaries, etc., who were on a time-scale with ceiling of Rs. 2,250 P.M. (ibid p. 263). As against this the post carrying pay above the time-scale or special pay in addition to pay in the time-scale under the Central Government when held by Indian Administrative Service men were Secretaries to the Government of India with a pay of Rs. 3,500 (Rs. 4,000 for Indian Civil Service men) and so on in a downward position. There was no separate cadre in the Government of India as defined in the Fundamental Rules mentioned above. There were only cadres in the States. Posts beyond the State cadre limit were only to be found in the Government of India. The Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954 provided an elaborate machinery for getting persons to fill the posts in the Government of India. Similarly, the Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955 provided for these matters. Rule 3 of the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules provided as follows :

“ 3. Constitution of Cadre,—

(1) There shall be constituted for each State or group of States an Indian Administrative Service Cadre.

(2) The cadre so constituted for a State or a group of States is hereinafter referred to as a 'State Cadre' or, as the case may be, a 'Joint Cadre.' ”

Rule 4 next provided :

“ Strength of Cadres,—

(1) The strength and composition of each of the cadres constituted under rule 3 shall be as determined by regulations made by the Central Government in consultation with the State Governments in this behalf and until such regulations are made, shall be as in force immediately before the commencement of these rules.

(2) The Central Government shall, at the interval of every three years, re-examine the strength and composition of each such cadre in consultation with the State Government or the State Governments concerned and may make such alterations therein as it deems fit ;

Provided that nothing in this sub-rule shall be deemed to affect the power of the Central Government to alter the strength and composition of any cadre at any other time :

Provided further that the State Government concerned may add for a period not exceeding one year and with the approval of the Central Government for a further period not exceeding two years, to a State or Joint Cadre one or more posts carrying duties or responsibilities of a like nature to cadre posts. ”

Rule 6 then provided for deputation of cadre officers. It reads as follows :

“ 6. Deputation of cadre officers.—

(1) A cadre officer may, with the concurrence of the State Government or the State Governments concerned and the Central Government, be deputed for service under the Central Government, or another State Government or under a company, association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not, which is wholly or substantially owned or controlled by the Government.

(2) A cadre officer may also be deputed for service under :—

(i) a Municipal Corporation or a Local Body, by the State Government on whose cadre he is borne, or by the Central Government with the concurrence of the State Government on whose cadre he is borne, as the case may be : and

(ii) an international organisation, an autonomous body not controlled by the Government, or a private body, by the Central Government in consultation with the State Government on whose cadre he is borne :

Provided that no cadre officer shall be deputed to any organisation or body of the type referred to in item (ii) of this sub-rule except with his consent. ”

It may be pointed out here that “ permanent post” is defined by the Fundamental Rules as a post carrying a definite rate of pay and sanctioned without limit of time; a ‘temporary post’ is defined as a post carrying definite rate of pay sanctioned for a limited time and a ‘tenure post’ means a permanent post which an individual Government servant may not hold for more than a limited period. All cadre posts were to be filled by cadre officers (rule 8), but temporary appointments of non-cadre officers to cadre posts were possible under certain circumstances (rule 9).

Under the Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre) Strength Regulations, 1955, Assam was to have a total of 117 cadre posts. Of these, 55 were under the Government of Assam and 22 senior posts were to be under the Central Government. 19 were promotion posts and 58 were to be filled by direct recruitment. There were certain reserved posts for leave reserves, deputation reserves, training reserves and finally there were junior posts. By the agreement which formed an annexure to the Indian Civil Administrative (Cadre) Rules, 1950, Assam was to have 20 senior posts under the Provincial Government and 6 senior posts under the Central Government with some provision for direct recruitment posts, junior posts and reserves. These posts denoted combined Service between the Central Government and the Assam Government. The arrangement allowed an officer to go from one post to another whether under the Centre or the State but not to a lower post unless the exigency of the case so demanded. The posts in the Government of India were held in the ordinary course and were not deputation posts. They were not as a part of the deputation reserves.

Under Article 312, these services must be considered common to the Union and the State. Under section 4 of the All India Services Act, 1951 all rules in force immediately before the commencement of the Act and applicable to an All India Service were continued, thus the Indian Civil Administrative (Cadre) Rules, 1950 continued to remain in force.

The position that emerges is that the cadres for the Indian Administrative Services are to be found in the States only. There is no cadre in the Government of India. A few of these persons are, however, intended to serve at the Centre. When they do so they enjoy better emoluments and status. They rank higher in the service and even in the Warrant of Precedence of the President. In the States they cannot get the same salary in any post as Secretaries are entitled to in the Centre. The appointments to the Centre are not in any sense a deputation. They mean promotion to a higher post. The only safeguard is that many of the posts at the Centre are tenure posts. Those of Secretaries and equivalent posts are for five years and for lower posts the duration of tenure is four years.

Now Das held one of the tenure posts. His tenure ordinarily was five years in the post. He got his secretaryship on 30th July, 1964 and was expected to continue in that post for five years, that is, till 29th July, 1969. The short question in this case is whether his reversion to the Assam State before the expiry of the period of his tenure to a post carrying a smaller salary amounts to reduction in rank and involves stigma upon him.

Reversion to a lower post does not per se amount to a stigma. But we have here evidence that the reversion is accompanied by a stigma. In the first letter issued to him on 20th June, 1969 by Mr. Dharma Vira (Cabinet Secretary) it was said that Government was considering whether the persons at top level administrative posts were capable of meeting the new challenges or must make room for younger men. The letter goes on to say that he may choose one of three alternatives: accept a lower post at the Centre go back to a post carrying lower salary in Assam or take leave preparatory to retirement. The offer of a lower post in Delhi is a clear pointer to the fact of his demotion. It clearly tells him that his reversion is not due to any exigency of service but because he is found wanting. The three alternatives speak volumes. This was not a case of reverting him to Assam at the end of a deputation or tenure. He can be retained in the Central Services provided he accepts a lower post, and the final alternative that he may retire clearly shows that the Government is bent upon removing him from his present post. In the next letter this fact is recognised because on 7th September, 1966 he is offered only two alternatives. The alternative of a lower post is advisedly dropped because it discloses too clearly a stigma. If any doubt remained it is cleared by the affidavit which is now filed. Paragraphs 7 and 10 of the affidavit read as follows:—

“7. With reference to the allegations made in paragraphs 13 to 23 of the said application, I make no admission in respect thereof except what appears from relevant records. I further say that the performance of the petitioner did not come to the standard expected of a Secretary to the Government of India.”

“10. The allegations made in paragraph 26 of the said application are correct. I further say that the said representation was rejected by the Prime Minister in view of the standard of performance of the petitioner.”

Now it has been ruled again and again in this Court that reduction in rank accompanied by a stigma must follow the procedure of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution. It is manifest that if this was a reduction in rank, it was accompanied by a stigma. We are satisfied that there was a stigma attaching to the reversion and that it was not a pure accident of service.

It remains to see whether there was a reduction in rank. There is no definition of reduction in rank in the Constitution. But we get some assistance from rule 3 of the All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, which provides;

“3. Penalties.—The following penalties may, for good and sufficient reasons and as hereinafter provided, be imposed on a member of the Service, namely:—

(iii) reduction in rank including reduction to a lower post or time-scale, or to a lower stage in a time-scale;

We have shown above that he was holding a tenure post. Nothing turns upon the words of the notification 'until further orders' because all appointments to tenure posts have the same kind of order. By an amendment of F.R. 9 (30) in 1967, a form was prescribed and that form was used in his case. These notifications also do not indicate that this was a deputation which could be terminated at any time. The notifications involving deputation always clearly so state the fact. Many notifications were brought to our notice during the argument which bear out this fact and none to the contrary was shown. Das thus held a tenure post which was to last till 29th July, 1969. A few months alone remained and he was not so desperately required in Assam that he could not continue here for the full duration. The fact that it was found necessary to break into his tenure period close to its end must be read in conjunction with the three alternatives and they clearly demonstrate that the intention was to reduce him in rank by sheer pressure of denying him a secretaryship. No Secretary, we were told, has so far been sent back in this manner and this emphasises the element of penalty. His retention in Government of India on a lower post thus was a reduction in rank.

Finally we have to consider whether his reversion to Assam means a reduction in rank. It has been noticed above that no State Service (the highest being Chief Secretary's) carries the emoluments which Das was drawing as a Secretary for years. His reversion would have meant a big drop in his emoluments. Das was prepared to go to Assam provided he got his salary of Rs. 4,000 per month but it was stated before us that that was not possible. Das was prepared to serve at the Centre in any capacity which brought him the same salary. This too was said to be not possible. This case was adjourned several times to enable Government to consider the proposal but ultimately it was turned down. All that was said was that he could only be kept in a lower post. If this is not reduction in rank we do not see what else it is. To give him a Hobson's choice of choosing between reversion to a post carrying a lower salary or staying here on a lower salaried post, is to indirectly reduce him in rank.

Therefore, we are satisfied that Das was being reduced in rank with a stigma upon his work without following the procedure laid down in Article 311 (2). We say nothing about a genuine case of accident of service in which a person drafted from a State has to go back for any reason not connected with his work or conduct. Cases must obviously arise when a person takes from the State may have to go back for reasons unconnected with his work or conduct. Those cases are different and we are not expressing any opinion about them. But this case is clearly one of reduction in rank with a distinct stigma upon the man. This requires action in accordance with Article 311 (2) of the Constitution and since none was taken, the order of reversion cannot be sustained. We quash it and order the retention of Das in a post comparable to the post of a Secretary in emoluments till such time as his present tenure lasts or there is an inquiry against him as contemplated by the Constitution.

Before we leave this case we are constrained to say that the attitude in respect of this case was not very happy. Das offered to take leave preparatory to retirement on the 29th July, 1969 if he was retained in Delhi on this or other post. This coincided with his present tenure. But vast as the Delhi Secretariat is, no job was found for him. This confirms us in our view of the matter that he was being sent away not because of exigency of service but definitely because he was not required for reasons connected with his work and conduct.

The appeal is thus allowed with costs here and in the High Court.

.. Appellant *

Sri Ambal & Co. and another

.. Respondents.

Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (XLIII of 1958), sections 2 (j) and section 12 (1)
Registration of trade mark—‘Andal’ and ‘Ambal’—Deceptively similar in sound Ocular Comparison not always the decisive test.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 136—Appeal by Special Leave—Concurrent finding of Court below—Onus on appellant to show that the finding is erroneous.

There can be no doubt that the word ‘Ambal’ is an essential feature of the trade marks. The common ‘Sri’ is the subsidiary part of the two words ‘Ambal’ is the more distinctive and fixes itself in the recollection of an average buyer with imperfect recollection.

It is for the Court to decide the question on a comparison of the competing marks as a whole and their distinctive and essential features. If the proposed mark is used in a normal and fair manner the mark would come to be known by its distinguishing feature ‘Andal’. There is a striking similarity and affinity of sound between the words ‘Andal’ and ‘Ambal’ (held, there is real danger of confusion between the two marks.).

There is no evidence of actual confusion, but that might be due to the fact that the appellant’s trade is not of long standing. There is no visual resemblance between the two marks, but ocular comparison is not always the decisive test. The resemblance between the two marks must be considered with reference to the ear as well as the eye. Held, there is a close affinity of sound between Ambal and Andal. The distinguishing feature of the respondents mark is Ambal while that of the Appellant’s mark is Andal. The two words are deceptively similar in sound.

The name Andal does not cease to be deceptively similar because it is used in conjunction with a pictorial device.

The Hindus in the south of India may be well aware that the words Ambal and Andal represent the names of two distinct goddesses. But the respondent’s customers are not confined to Hindus alone. Many of their customers are Christians, Parsis, Muslims and persons of other religious denominations. Moreover, their business is not confined to south of India. The customers who are not Hindus or who do not belong to the south of India may not know the difference between the words Andal and Ambal. The words have no direct reference to the character and quality of snuff. The customer who use the respondent’s goods will have recollection that they are known by the word Ambal. They may also have a vague recollection of the portrait of a benign goddess used in connection with the mark. They are not likely to remember the fine distinctions between a Vaishnavite goddess and a Shivaite diety.

The Registrar has expert knowledge of such matters and his decision should not be lightly disturbed. But both the Courts have found that he was clearly wrong and held that there is a deceptive similarity between the two marks. In an appeal under Article 136 of the Constitution, the onus is upon the appellant to show that the concurrent finding of the Courts below is erroneous. The appellant must satisfy the Court that the conditions of section 12 (1) have been satisfied. If those conditions are not satisfied his mark cannot be registered.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 21st November, 1962 of the Madras High Court in Letters Patent Appeal No. 57 of 1962.

A. K. Sen, Senior Advocate, (K. Jayaram and R. Thiagarajan, Advocates, with him), for Appellant.

M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate (N. R. Anand and M. P. Rao, Advocates, and O. C. Mathur, Advocate of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji & Co. with him), for Respondent No. 1.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bachawat, J.—The appellant is the sole proprietor of a trading concern known as Radha and Co. The respondents Ambal and Co., are a partnership firm. The respondents as also the appellant are manufacturers and dealers in snuff carrying on business at Madras and having business activities inside and outside the State of Madras. On 10th March, 1958 the appellant filed application No. 183961 for registration of a trade mark in class 34 in respect of "snuff manufactured in Madras". The respondents filed a notice of opposition. The main ground of opposition was that the proposed mark was deceptively similar to their registered trade marks. The respondents were the proprietors of the registered marks Nos. 126808 and 146291. Trade mark No. 126808 consists of a label containing a device of a Goddess Sri Ambal seated on a globe floating on water enclosed in a circular frame with the legend "Sri Ambal parimala snuff" at the top of the label, and the name and address "Sri Ambal and Co., Madras" at the bottom. Trade mark No. 146291 consists of the expression "Sri Ambal". The mark of which the appellant seeks registration consists of a label containing three panels. The first and the third panels contain in Tamil, Devanagiri, Telugu and Kannada the equivalents of the words "Sri Andal Madras Snuff". The centre panel contains the picture of Goddess Sri Andal and the legend, "Sri Andal".

Sri Andal and Sri Ambal are separate divinities. Sri Andal was a Vaishnavite woman saint of Srivilliputtur village and was deified because of her union with Lord Ranganatha. Sri Ambal is the consort of Siva or Maheshwara.

The respondents have been in the snuff business for several decades and have used the word Ambal as part of their work for more than half a century. The question in issue is whether the proposed mark is deceptively similar to the respondents' marks. "Mark" as defined in section 2 (j) of the Trade and Merchandise Marks Act, 1958 includes "a device, brand, heading, label, ticket, name, signature, word, letter or numeral or any combination thereof." Section 12 (1) provides that "save as provided in sub-section (3), no trade mark shall be registered in respect of any goods or description of goods which is identical with or deceptively similar to a trade mark which is already registered in the name of a different proprietor in respect of the same goods or description of goods." The Registrar of Trade of Marks observed :—

"In a composite mark the distinctive words, appearing on it play an important part. Words always talk more than devices, because it is generally by the word part of a composite mark that orders will be given. Apart from that, the opponents have a registered mark consisting of the expression Sri Ambal. I have, therefore, to determine whether the expression Sri Andal, is deceptively similar to Sri Ambal."

He held :

"the sound of "Ambal" does not so nearly resemble the sound of "Andal", in spite of certain letters being common to both the marks, as to be likely to cause confusion or deception among a substantial number of persons."

The respondents filed an appeal in the Madras High Court. Jagadishan, J. observed :

"It is settled law that a trade mark comprehends not merely the picture design or symbol but also its descriptive name. A copy or colourable imitation of the name, would constitute an infringement of the mark containing the name. No-body can abstract the name or use a phonetical equivalent of it and escape the charge of piracy of the mark pleading that the visual aspect of his mark is different from the mark of the person opposing its registration."

He held :—

"The words, Ambal and Andal, have such great phonetic similarity that they are undistinguishable having the same sound and pronounciation. In whatever way they are uttered or spoken slowly or quickly, perfectly or imperfectly, meticolously or carelessly and whoever utters them, a foreigner or a native of India, wherever they are uttered in the noisy market place or in a calm and secluded area, over the phone or in person the danger of confusion between the two phonetically allied names is imminent and unavoidable."

Accordingly, he allowed the appeal and dismissed the appellant's application for registration of the trade mark. The appellant filed a letters patent appeal. The Divisional Bench of the High Court dismissed the appeal. The learned Registrar and the two Courts below concurrently found that the appellant failed to prove honest concurrent use so as to bring his case within section 12 (3). The present appeal has been filed by the appellant after obtaining Special Leave.

The Registrar was of the view that the appellant's mark was not deceptively similar to the respondent's trade marks. He has expert knowledge of such matters and his decision should not be lightly disturbed. But both the Courts have found that he was clearly wrong and held that there is a deceptive similarity between the two marks. In an appeal under Article 136 of the Constitution the onus is upon the appellant to show that the concurrent finding of the Courts below is erroneous. The appellant must satisfy the Court that the conditions of section 12 (1) have been satisfied. If those conditions are not satisfied this mark cannot be registered.

Now the words "Sri Ambal" form part of trade mark No. 126808 and are the whole of trade mark No. 146291. There can be no doubt that the word "Ambal" is an essential feature of the trade marks. The common "Sri" is the subsidiary part. Of the two words "Ambal" is the more distinctive and fixes itself in the recollection of an average buyer with imperfect recollection.

The vital question in issue is whether, if the appellant's mark is used in a normal and fair manner in connection with the snuff and if similarly fair and normal user is assumed of the existing registered marks, will there be such a likelihood of deception that the mark ought not to be allowed to be registered (see In the matter of Broadhead's Application for registration of a trade mark)¹. It is for the Court to decide the question on a comparison of the competing marks as a whole and their distinctive and essential features. We have no doubt in our mind that if the proposed mark is used in a normal and fair manner the mark would come to be known by its distinguishing feature "Andal". There is a striking similarity and affinity of sound between the words "Andal" and "Ambal." Giving due weight to the judgment of the Registrar and bearing in mind the conclusions of the learned Single Judge and the Divisional Bench, we are satisfied that there is a real danger of confusion between the two marks.

There is no evidence of actual confusion but that might be due to the fact that the appellant's trade is not of long standing. There is no visual resemblance between the two marks, but ocular comparison is not always the decisive test. The resemblance between the two marks must be considered with reference to the ear as well as the eye. There is a close affinity of sound between Ambal and Andal.

In the case of *Coca-Cola Co. of Canada v. Pepsi Cola Co. of Canada Ltd.*¹, it was found that cola was in common use in Canada for naming the beverages. The distinguishing feature of the mark coca-cola was coca and not cola. For the same reason the distinguishing feature of the mark Pepsi Cola was Pepsi and not cola. It was not likely that any one would confuse the word Pepsi with coca. In the present case the word "Sri" may be regarded as in common use. The distinguishing feature of the respondent's mark is Ambal while that of the appellant's mark is Andal. The two words are deceptively similar in sound.

The name Andal does not cease to be deceptively similar because it is used in conjunction with a pictorial device. The case of *Decordova and others v. Vick Chemical Coy.*² is instructive. From the Appendix printed at page 270 of the same volume it appears that Vick Chemical Coy were the proprietors of the registered trade mark consisting of the word "Vaporub" and another registered trade mark consisting of a design of which the words "Vicks Vaporub Salve" formed a part. The appendix at page 226 shows that the defendants advertised their ointment as "Karsote Vapour Rub". It was held that the defendants had infringed the registered marks. Lord Radcliffe said: "..... a mark is infringed by another trader if, even without using the whole of it upon or in connection with his goods, he uses one or more of its essential features."

Mr. Sen stressed the point that the words Ambal and Andal had distinct meanings. Ambal is the consort of Lord Siva and Andal is the consort of Ranganatha. He said that in view of the distinct ideas conveyed by the two words a mere accidental phonetic resemblance could not lead to confusion. In this connection he relied on Venkateswaran's Law of Trade and Merchandise Marks, 1963 Ed., page 214, Kerly's Law of Trade Marks and Trade Names, 9th Ed., page 465, Article 852 and the decision *Application by Thomas A. Smith Ltd., to Register a trade mark*³. In that case Neville, J., held that the words "limit" and "summit" were words in common use, each conveying a distinctly definite idea; that there was no possibility of any one being deceived by the two marks; and there was no ground for refusing registration. Mr. Sen's argument loses sight of the realities of the case. The Hindus in the south of India may be well aware that the word Ambal and Andal represent the names of two distinct goddesses. But the respondent's customers are not confined to Hindus alone. Many of their customers are Christians, Parsees, Muslims and persons of other religious denominations. Moreover, their business is not confined to south of India. The customers who are not Hindus or who do not belong to the south of India may not know the difference between the words Andal and Ambal. The words have no direct reference to the character and quality of snuff. The customers who use the respondent's goods will have a recollection that they are known by the word Ambal. They may also have a vague recollection of the portrait of a benign goddess used in connection with the mark. They are not likely to remember the fine distinctions between a Vaishnavite goddess and a Shivaite deity.

We think the judgment appealed from is right and should be affirmed. We are informed that the appellant filed another application No. 212575 seeking registration of labels of which the expression "Radha's Sri Ambal Madras Snuff" forms a part. The learned Registrar has disposed of the application in favour of the appellant. But we understand that an appeal is pending in the High Court. It was argued that there was no phonetic similarity between Sri Ambal and Radha's Sri Andal and the use of the expression Radha's Sri Andal was not likely to lead to confusion. The Divisional Bench found force in this argument. But as the matter is subjudice we express no opinion on it.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 34—Mortgage decree—Mortgagor depositing money into Court without specifying of that it is towards principal—Mortgagee not informed about nature of deposit—Normal rule is that the amount should first be applied towards interest and costs—Mortgagor to plead and prove agreement to the contrary.

Madhya Pradesh Money Lenders Act (XIII of 1934), section 9—Prohibits awarding interest exceeding the principal of loan.

Unless the mortgagees were informed that the mortgagors had deposited the amount only towards the Principal and not towards the interest, and the mortgagees agreed to withdraw the money frontier Court accepting the conditional deposit, the normal rule that the amounts deposited in Court should first be applied towards satisfaction of the interest and costs and thereafter towards the principal would apply. The normal rule is that in the case of a debt due with interest any payment made by the debtor is in the first instance to be applied towards satisfaction of interest and thereafter to the principal. It was for the mortgagors to plead and prove an agreement that the amounts which were deposited by the mortgagees were accepted by the mortgagees subject to a condition imposed by the mortgagor (on facts held that there was no such agreement.)

Section 9 of the Madhya Pradesh Money-lenders Act (XIII of 1934) prohibits the Courts from awarding interest exceeding the principal of loan. The Prohibition of the statute is against the making of a decree for arrears of interest exceeding the amount of loan. (On facts held that the interest does not exceed the principal.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—Seth Haroon and Sons a firm had ten partners. The Hindu undivided family of Jethmal Ramkaran mortgaged a house belonging to it to Seth Haroon and Sons to secure repayment of Rs. 40,000 due on the foot of an account. Seth Haroon and Sons filed Suit No. 12-A of 1936 for recovery of their dues by sale of the mortgaged house. On 28th December, 1940, a decree was passed in the suit by the Additional District Judge. The case was carried in appeal to the High Court of Nagpur. But the appeal was dismissed subject to a slight modification to be presently noticed. An appeal was carried against the decree to this Court. During the pendency of the appeal to this Court, nine out of ten members of Seth Haroon and Sons migrated to Pakistan and were declared evacuees. By an order passed by this Court on 28th March, 1958, the Custodian of Evacuee Property was impleaded as a party respondent in the appeal filed by the mortgagors. This Court dismissed the appeal on 8th August, 1958. Thereafter the 6th plaintiff Mohammad Ayyub—the only member of the firm who had not migrated—for himself and as agent of the evacuees under a general power-of-attorney applied for a decree absolute for sale,

The Custodian of Evacuee Property resisted the application filed by Mohammad Ayyub. Ultimately by the order passed by the High Court of Bombay the Custodian of Evacuee Property was joined as a party to the application. The Court however observed that the respective rights of the Custodian of Evacuee Property and the partners of Seth Haroon and Sons were not decided in that proceeding.

Diverse contentions were raised by the mortgagors : they contended, inter alia that on proper account being taken nothing was due by them on the mortgage, that interest was wrongly calculated at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, that the claim for recovery of costs was barred by the law of limitation and that interest could not be awarded on costs. The learned Trial Judge substantially rejected the contentions raised by the mortgagors and passed a decree for Rs. 34,612.81 being the aggregate of Rs. 33,866.51 as principal and Rs. 746.30 as interest. An appeal filed against that order was summarily dismissed by the High Court. With Special Leave, this appeal is preferred by the mortgagors.

Counsel for the mortgagors contended that on a proper account of the monies paid by them in satisfaction of the dues under the mortgage decree, the mortgage was satisfied and the mortgagees were overpaid. Counsel contended that from time to time payment were made by the mortgagors with specific directions that the amounts paid were to be credited towards the principal and not towards interest and if the amounts so paid were in the first instance credited towards the principal, it would be found that the mortgage dues had been overpaid. Now, the learned Trial Judge observed that Exhibits 44 to 55 relied upon by the mortgagors were silent as to any specific directions that the amounts paid in Court were to be appropriated only towards the principal. Counsel for the appellant has invited our attention to certain applications made at the time of making deposits in Court, in which it was recited that the amounts were being deposited towards the principal. Relying upon these recitals it was urged that the Trial Court was in error in holding that there were no directions for appropriation of payments towards the principal. We have not thought it necessary to ascertain the total number of applications in which recitals were made by the mortgagors at the time of making part payments towards the principal, because on the view we take, these recitals, without more, do not assist the claim of the mortgagors.

Under the preliminary decree an amount of Rs. 42,430-2-6 was declared due upto 23rd June, 1941 towards principal and interest. The mortgagors made no payments under the decree directly to the mortgagees. But from time to time they claim to have made deposits in the Court under Order 21, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure and in depositing some of the amounts they stated that the payments were towards the principal due. But there is no evidence on the record that the mortgagees were informed that the amounts were deposited towards the principal due, nor is there evidence that the mortgagees accepted the amounts towards the principal. For quite a long time the mortgagees did not withdraw the amount lying in Court. Unless the mortgagees were informed that the mortgagors had deposited the amount only towards the principal and not towards the interest, and the mortgagees agreed to withdraw the money from the Court accepting the conditional deposit, the normal rule that the amounts deposited in Court should first be applied towards satisfaction of the interest and costs and thereafter towards the principal would apply.

In *K. Venkatadri Appa Row and others v. Parthasarathi Appa Row*¹, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council observed that upon taking an account of principal and interest due, the ordinary rule with regard to payments by the debtor unappropriated either to principal or interest is that they are first to be applied to the discharge of interest. Lord Buchmaster delivering the judgment of the Board observed :

"There is a debt due that carries interest. There are moneys that are received without a definite appropriation on the one side or on the other, and the rule which is well established in ordinary cases is that in those circumstances the money is first applied in payment of interest and then when that is satisfied in payment of the capital. That rule is referred to by Rigby, L.J., in the case of *Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates*¹, in these words : 'The defendant's Counsel relied on the old rule that does, no doubt, apply to many cases, namely, that, where both principal and interest are due, the sums paid on account must be applied first to interest. That rule, where it is applicable, is only common justice. To apply the sums paid to principal where interest has accrued upon the debt, and is not paid, would be depriving the creditor of the benefit to which he is entitled under his contract'."

Counsel for the appellant contended that in *Venkatadri Appa Row's case*², there was no specific appropriation by the debtor, whereas in the present case there is specific direction by the debtor. But the normal rule is that in the case of a debt due with interest any payment made by the debtor is in the first instance to be applied towards satisfaction of interest and thereafter to the principal. It was for the mortgagor to plead and prove an agreement—that the amounts which were deposited in Court by the mortgagors were accepted by the mortgagees subject to a condition imposed by the mortgagors. In the present case there is no evidence which supports the contention raised by Counsel for the appellant.

Counsel urged that, in any event, when an account was finally submitted by the mortgagees they were aware of the fact that certain amounts were paid in Court and they knew that those amounts were paid conditionally and when the mortgagees withdrew the amounts deposited in Court they must be deemed to have accepted the conditions subject to which the amounts were deposited. But the account submitted by the mortgagees shows clearly that they had given credit for the amounts deposited towards the interest and costs in the first instance and the balance only towards the principal. The account submitted by the mortgagees clearly negatives the plea of the mortgagors.

An argument somewhat faintly suggested before us that it is the privilege of the debtor to impose conditions subject to which any payment is to be made by the mortgagor, and the mortgagee is bound to accept the condition needs no serious consideration.

It was next urged that the decree was passed by the Trial Court awarding interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum and the order of the High Court in appeal modifying the original decree by awarding interest at the rate of 4 per cent. was erroneous. Under the decree of the Trial Court interest was awarded at 3 per cent. In appeal interest was awarded by the High Court at 4 per cent. Thereafter by a modification in an application for correction of the decree interest at 4 per cent. per annum was awarded from 12th August, 1941 to 10th November, 1946. It was urged, relying upon the order modifying the rate of interest, that from 11th November, 1946 the mortgagees were entitled only to interest at the rate of 3 per cent. There is no substance in that contention also. The High Court by order dated 10th August, 1946, observed:

"A preliminary decree for the sale shall be drawn accordingly and the defendants (the appellants) are given three months time from today to pay off the decretal amount. The amount shall carry interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum from the date of suit to 11th August, 1941, and at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from 12th August, 1941, to the date of satisfaction."

Apparently the decree drawn up by the High Court was not consistent with the directions given in the judgment, and an application was made to rectify certain mistakes in the decree. One of the grounds urged in support of the application was that interest should have been computed only on the principal out of the total of Rs. 35,299-1-6. The Court rejected the application holding that the Trial Court had decreed the claim of the mortgagees and that interest was payable on Rs. 35,299-1-6 and the High Court had confirmed the decree holding that the amount of Rs. 35,299-1-6 was principal. The High Court observed that it was not relevant to consider whether that decision was right, because there was no application for review of judgment. They then directed that

2. (1920) L.R. 47 I.A. 150.

“the interest will accordingly be calculated on Rs. 35,299-1-6 at 3 per cent. from 5th October, 1936 till 11th August, 1941 and at 4 per cent. from 12th August, 1941, till 10th November, 1946. This comes to Rs. 50,810-4-6. The decree will be amended accordingly”.

Relying upon this direction, Counsel for the appellants contended that the High Court by order dated 31st March, 1947, restored for the period after 10th November, 1946, the rate of interest as originally awarded by the Court of First Instance. We are unable to hold that the direction is capable of that interpretation. By directing that interest at the rate of 4 per cent. from 12th August, 1941 to 10th November, 1946, shall be calculated on Rs. 35,299-1-6, it was not, and could not be, intended by the High Court that interest after 10th November, 1946, was to be awarded only at the rate of 3 per cent. No such application was made by the debtors. It was apparently contended that the amount of Rs. 35,299-1-6 as claimed by the plaintiffs in the original suit included interest, and interest could be computed on the amount which formed the principal. The High Court, in view of the decree passed by the Trial Court and confirmed by it, declined to enter into that controversy and indicated the manner in which the interest was to be calculated between 5th October, 1936, and 10th November, 1946. The High Court did not reduce that rate of interest for the period after 10th November, 1946, i.e., the date fixed for redemption of mortgage under the decree of the High Court.

Counsel then urged that in any event the mortgagees are not entitled to interest exceeding the principal. Reliance in this connection was placed upon the Madhya Pradesh Money Lenders Act XIII of 1934. Section 9 of that Act provides :

“Notwithstanding anything contained in any other enactment for the time being in force, no Court original or appellate shall decree, in respect of any loan made before this Act comes into force, on account of arrears of interest, a sum greater than the principal of such loan.”

The section prohibits the Courts from awarding interest exceeding the principal of the loan. Counsel for the appellants contends that if all the amounts deposited from time to time by the debtors be aggregated, it will appear that an amount exceeding the loan was paid. But the prohibition of the statute is against the making of a decree for arrears of interest exceeding the amount of loan. In the present case the decree awards interest amounting of Rs. 74,630 whereas the principal is Rs. 33,866. 51.

Finally, it was contended that the Custodian of Evacuee Property is not entitled to claim a decree absolute for sale, and only Mohamad Ayyub—one of the partners in the firm of Seth Haroon and Sons—may alone be given a decree absolute in respect of his share. That contention is futile. The Court is concerned at this stage to pass a decree absolute for sale in a mortgage suit. It is not concerned to determine the respective rights of the mortgagees inter se. The mortgagee's interest is fully represented before the Court. Whether or not the Custodian of Evacuee Property is entitled to the money or that the evacuees have a subsisting interest is a matter which cannot be decided in this appeal. That was made clear by the judgment of the High Court in the application filed by the Custodian of Evacuee Property by order dated 12th November, 1962, when the High Court observed :

“Time has not come yet to determine this question and it is not necessary at this stage to decide what are the respective rights of the evacuees in the property which is before the Court as between the evacuee—plaintiffs and the Custodian.”

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Madras General Sales Tax Act (I of 1959) and Central Sales Tax Act (LXXIV of 1956), section 5 (2) Sea Customs Act, 1878, section 3-A Customs "frontier" in section 5 (2) of Central Act cannot be construed to mean "customs barriers"—Must be construed in accordance with notification issued under section 3-A of the Act read with the proclamation of the President of India, dated 22nd March, 1956.

The expression "Customs frontier" in section 15 of the Central Act cannot be construed to mean "Customs barrier" It must be construed in accordance with the notification issued by the Central Government under section 3-A of the Act, on 6th August, 1955 read with the Proclamation of the President of India dated 22nd March, 1956.

Held, on facts, the sales were effected by transfer of documents of title long after the goods had crossed the Customs frontier of India.

Appeals by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 17th July, 1963 of the Madras High Court in Tax Cases Nos. 29, 47, 132 and 160 of 1961 (Revision Nos. 16, 28, 81 and 98 of 1961).

A. K. Sen, Senior Advocate, (A.V. Rangam, Advocate, with him), for Appellant.

R. Thiagarajan, for Respondent (In C.A. No. 1464 of 1967).

K. Jayaram, for Respondent (In C.A. No. 1465 of 1967).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Vaidialingam, J.—These appeals, by Special Leave, by the State of Madras, are directed against the common judgment, dated 17th July, 1963 of the Madras High Court.

The short question, that arises for consideration in these appeals, is as to whether the turnover, which was the subject of consideration by the High Court, was liable for sales tax, under the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959 (I of 1959) (hereinafter called the Madras Act). The assessee claimed that the turnover in question represented sales in the course of import and, as such, not liable to tax under the Madras Act. The State of Madras claimed that in all these cases the sale had been effected by a transfer of documents of title to the respective buyers after the ships had crossed the territorial waters and hence they were liable to tax under the Madras Act. The contention of the assessee was negated by the Assistant Commercial Tax Officer, as also by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Commercial Taxes. But, on further appeal by the assessee, the Sales Tax Appellate Tribunal accepted their contention and held that the disputed turnovers were not liable to tax under the Madras Act. The revisions filed by the State against the orders of the Sales Tax Appellate Tribunal were dismissed by the High Court. Hence these appeals.

Though each of the respondents in these appeals is an importer of a different commodity, the pattern adopted by each of them in the matter of importing the goods concerned from foreign countries and in the matter of transferring title to the respective buyers, is more or less the same. We shall therefore refer only to the facts relating to the dealings adopted by Davar and Company (hereinafter called the assessee), the respondent in Civil Appeal No. 1462 of 1967.

* C.As. Nos. 1462 to 1465 of 1967.

 (1963) 14 S.T.C. 904.

The assessee was assessed by the Assistant Commercial Tax Officer, South Madras and Chingleput, under the Madras Act on a turnover of Rs. 6,60,200.07 for the year 1957-58. It was carrying on business in timber at Madras and in the course of its business the assessee imported timber from Burma and sold it to its costumers in India. Out of the turnover above-mentioned, the assessee disputed its liability to the extent of a turnover of Rs. 1,95,490.67 on the ground that the said amount represented sales in the course of import and that such sales were not liable to tax as they were covered by Article 286 (1) (b) of the Constitution. This claim was based on the following circumstances. The respondent-assessee entered into contracts for sale of timber with a firm of merchants called Velu and Brothers (hereinafter called the buyers). The timber was to be imported from Burma. Under the contract the buyers were to pay the assessee 8 per cent. profit on the C.I.F. value of timber sold and also the sales tax and other charges and expenses. The buyers were to retire the shipping documents at least 10 days before the expected arrival of the steamer carrying the timber. The assessee imported two consignments of timber from Rangoon. The value of the first consignment was Rs. 99,098.05. The ship carrying the consignment arrived at the Madras Harbour on 17th October 1957. The assessee got Rs. 1,00,000, from the buyers on 24th October, 1957, and retired the documents of title, from the bank and handed over the said documents on the same date to the buyers to enable them to clear the goods. All charges and expenses by way of import duty, clearance charges etc., were paid by the buyers on behalf of the assessee. A second consignment reached Madras by ship on 17th December, 1957. The assessee obtained from the buyers, on 23rd December, 1957 the value of this consignment after handing over to the buyers the necessary shipping documents.

On these facts both the Commercial Tax Officer as well as the Appellate Assistant Commissioner came to the conclusion that the sales effected by the assessee to the buyers were not sales in the course of import, but were local sales liable to tax under the Madras Act. The Sales Tax Appellate Tribunal, on the other hand, held to the contrary. The High Court has concurred with the view of the Appellate Tribunal.

According to the Assistant Commercial Tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner the sale was effected by the assessee to the buyer after the consignment of timber had come into the Madras Port and in consequence there was no intention to transfer the property in the goods to the buyers before they were cleared from the customs frontier and hence the sales could not be considered to be sales in the course of import. The Appellate Tribunal took the view that the sale by the assessee to the buyers had been effected by transferring the documents of title relating to the goods before the goods, crossed the customs barrier and before the import became complete. Therefore, according to the Tribunal, the sales should be treated as being in the course of import and, in consequence, not liable for tax under the Madras Act.

On the facts stated above, the parties were not in dispute; but, before the High Court, the State raised the contention that the sales in question were not sales in the course of import as the documents of title were handed over by the assessee to the buyers after the ship had crossed the 'territorial waters'. According to the State, the expression 'customs frontier,' occurring in section 5 (2) of the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956 (LXXXIV of 1956), (hereinafter called the Central Act) is co-terminous with the extent of the 'territorial waters' of India, as fixed by the Proclamation, dated 22nd March, 1956 issued by the President of India. That is according to the State, the import is complete when the ship carrying the goods from a foreign port enters the territorial waters and any sale by the importer by transfer of documents of title to the goods subsequent to such entry will not amount to a sale in the course of import. According to the assessee 'customs frontier' in section 5 (2) of the Central Act must be treated as analogous to customs barrier and so read the position would be that a sale effected by transfer of documents of title before the goods cross the customs barrier would not be liable to tax under the Madras Act.

The High Court has, after a reference to various decisions of this Court as to when a sale can be considered to be in the course of import or export, held that the "customs frontier" as laid down by this Court does not mean any geographical features like land or coast or limits of territorial waters, but only the operation of the machinery of the Customs Department consisting of levy and collection of duty and clearance of the goods. The High Court further held that it would be proper to construe the words 'customs frontiers' as 'customs barriers' in the Central Act. In this view the High Court held that as the sale had been effected by transfer of title to the goods before they entered the customs barrier the sale was not liable to tax under the Madras Act.

On behalf of the appellant-State, Mr. A.K. Sen, learned Counsel, urged that the view of the Madras High Court construing the words 'customs frontiers' as 'customs barriers' in the Central Act was erroneous. According to the learned Counsel on the admitted facts the sales in all these cases had been effected by transfer of the documents of title long after the sales had ceased to be in the course of import. This contention, on behalf of the State, was resisted by Mr. Thiagarajan and Mr. K. Jaya Ram appearing for the respondent in Civil Appeals Nos. 1464 and 1465 of 1967 respectively.

We are of the view that the judgment of the Madras High Court cannot be sustained and the expression 'customs frontiers' in section 5 of the Central Act cannot be construed to mean 'customs barriers'. Article 286 (1) places a ban on the State imposing or authorising the imposition of a tax on the sale or purchase of goods where such sale or purchase takes place outside the State or in the course of import of goods into or export of goods out of the territory of India. Clause (2) of Article 286 gives power to the Parliament, by law, to formulate principles for determining when a sale or purchase of goods takes place in any of the ways mentioned in clause (1). Accordingly Parliament has enacted the Central Act. Section 5 of that Act lays down the conditions under which a sale or purchase of goods can be said to take place in the course of import or export. Sub-sections (1) and (2) deal with sale or purchase of goods in the course of export and sale or purchase of goods in the course of import, respectively. As we are concerned with a sale in the course of import, the relevant provision is sub-section (2) of section 5, which is as follows :

"5. (2) A sale or purchase of goods shall be deemed to take place in the course of the import of the goods into the territory of India only if the sale or purchase either occasions such import or is effected by a transfer of documents of title to the goods before the goods have crossed the customs frontiers of India."

In this case, the claim made by the assessee for exemption from tax liability is on the ground that the sale was effected by transfer to the buyer of documents of title to the goods. Under section 5 (2) of the Central Act, in order to treat the sale as one in the course of import the documents of title must have been transferred before the goods have crossed the customs frontiers of India. The question is what does the expression 'customs frontiers' or India in section 5 of the Central Act, mean? To answer this question, it is necessary to refer to certain Proclamations made by the President of India and Notifications issued by the Central Government under section 3-A of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 (VIII of 1878) (hereinafter called the Act).

The President of India has issued a Proclamation, dated 22nd March, 1956 and that contains a declaration as to the extent of the territorial waters of India. That Proclamation has been published with the notification of the Government of India in the Ministry of External Affairs, No. S.R.O. 669, dated 22nd March, 1956 and is as follows :

"S.R.O. 669.—The following proclamation by the President is published for general information.

PROCLAMATION.

"WHEREAS international law has always recognised that sovereignty of a State extends to a belt of sea adjacent to its coast ;

AND WHEREAS international practice is not uniform as regards the extent of this sea-belt commonly known as the territorial waters of the State, and consequently it is necessary to make a declaration as to the extent of the territorial waters of India ;

I, Rajendra Prasad, President of India, in the Seventh Year of the Republic. do hereby proclaim that, notwithstanding any rule of law or practice to the contrary, which may have been observed in the past in relation to India or any part thereof, the territorial waters of India extend into the sea to a distance of six nautical miles measured from the appropriate base line."

RAJENDRA PRASAD.
President "

On 30th September, 1967 another Proclamation was issued by the President of India and published with the notification of the Government of India in the Ministry of External Affairs, No. F.L./111 (1) of 1967, dated 30th September 1967. By this Proclamation the earlier proclamation of 22nd March, 1956 has been superseded and the territorial waters of India have been declared to extend into the sea to a distance of twelve nautical miles measured from the appropriate base line. But in the present appeals, we are concerned only with the earlier Proclamation dated 22nd March, 1956.

Section 3-A of the Act gives power to the Central Government, to define, by notification in the Official Gazette, the 'customs frontiers' of India. By virtue of the powers conferred by this section, the Central Government (Ministry of Finance, Revenue Division) had issued a notification No. 25-Customs, dated 1st April, 1950, defining the 'customs frontiers' of India; but it is not necessary to consider the definition contained in this notification, as it has been superseded by the issue of a fresh Notification No. S.R.O. 1683, dated 6th August, 1955. The latter notification, issued by the Ministry of Finance (Revenue Division), Customs, which is relevant for the present purpose, is as follows :

"New Delhi, the 6th August, 1955.

S.R.O. 1683.—In exercise of the powers conferred by section 3-A of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 (VIII of 1878), and in supersession of the notification of the Government of India in the Ministry of Finance (Revenue Division) No. 25-Customs, dated the 1st April, 1950, the Central Government hereby defines the customs frontiers of India as the boundaries of the territory, including territorial waters, of India.

(Sd.)

Jt. Secretary."

The expression 'customs frontiers of India' in section 5 of the Central Act, in our opinion, must be construed in accordance with the notification issued by the Central Government under section 3-A of the Act, on 6th August, 1955 read with the Proclamation of the President of India, dated 22nd March, 1956. So applying the definition of 'customs frontiers' it is clear that, in the instant case, the sales were effected by transfer of documents of title long after the goods had crossed the customs frontiers of India. We have already stated that the ships carrying the goods in question were all in the respective harbours within the State of Madras when the sales were effected by the assesseees by transfer of documents of title to the buyers. If so, it follows that the claims made by the assesseees that the sales in question were sales in the course of import, has been rightly rejected by the assessing authority. Unfortunately, though various aspects seem to have been pressed before the High Court by the State of Madras, this notification of 6th August, 1955, issued by the Government of India, defining the 'customs frontiers' of India, was not brought to the notice of the High Court.

In the result, the common order, dated 17th July, 1963 of the Madras High Court is set aside and the appeals allowed. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT:—J.M. SHELAT AND V. BHARGAVA, JJ.

The Heavy Engineering Mazdoor Union

... Appellants*

v.

The State of Bihar and others

... Respondents.

Companies—Commercial Corporation—Incorporated under the Companies Act—Entire capital contributed by the Central Government—President of India and certain Officers of Central Government the shareholders—Extensive powers of control conferred on the Central Government by the Memorandum and Articles of Association—Undertaking, if carried on under the authority of the Central Government.

Companies Act (I of 1956), section 617.

Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), sections 2 (a) and 10.

Words and Phrases—‘Under the authority of’.

The appellants herein filed a writ petition in the High Court of Patna disputing the validity of the reference to the Industrial Tribunal by the State Government of Bihar the two following questions for adjudications, firstly, as regards the number of festival holidays and secondly whether the second Saturday of a month should be an off-day for the Heavy Engineering Corporation, Ranchi, a Government Company. The grounds set out in the writ petition were two : (1) the appropriate Government to make the reference was the Central Government ; and (2) the questions referred were at the time actually pending before the certifying authority under the Industrial Employees (Standing Orders) Act, 1946 on an application for modification of the company's Standing Orders and therefore the said questions would not be industrial disputes that could be validly referred for adjudication. The High Court held against both the contentions and upheld the reference. Hence the instant appeal to the Supreme Court with the certificate of the High Court.

Held: The words ‘under the authority of’ in section 2 (a) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 mean pursuant to the authority, such as when an agent or servant acts under or pursuant to the authority of his principal or master. That cannot be said of the company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1956 which derives its powers and functions from and by virtue of its memorandum and articles of association.

The mere fact, that the entire share capital of the respondent-company was contributed by the Central Government or the fact that the President of India and certain officers of the Central Government held all its shares do not make any difference. The company is a separate entity.

No doubt extensive powers are conferred on the Central Government including the power to give directions as to how the company should function, the power to appoint directors and even the power to determine the wages and salaries of the company's employees. But these powers are derived from the company's memorandum and articles of association and not by reason of the company being the agent of the Central Government.

The question whether a corporation is an agent of the State must depend on the facts of each case. Where a statute setting up a Corporation so provides such a corporation can easily be identified as agent of the State. In the absence of a statutory provision, a commercial corporation acting on its own behalf even though it is controlled wholly or partially by a Government Department will be ordinarily presumed not to be a servant or agent of the State.

The contention that it is only the Central Government, as the appropriate Government, could make the reference, therefore fails.

* C.A. No. 1463 of 1968.

The second contention is concluded adversely to the appellant by the decisions in Management of Bangalore Woollen, Cotton and Silk Mills Co., Ltd. v. Workmen, (1968) 2 S.C.J. 415 : (1968) 1 S.C.R. 581 and The Management of Shahdara Saharanpur Light Railway Co., Ltd. v. S. S. Railway Workers Union, (1969) 2 S.C.J. 290.

Appeal from the Judgment and Order, dated the 5th September, 1967 of the Patna High Court in Civil Writ Jurisdiction Case No. 921 of 1966.

A.K. Nag, Jai Kishan and Ramen Roy, Advocates, for Appellant.

U.P. Singh, Advocate, for Respondent No. 1.

B.P. Singh, Advocate, for Respondent No. 2.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shelat, J.—The Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd., Ranchi, is a company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1956. Its entire share capital is contributed by the Central Government and all its shares have been registered in the name of the President of India and certain officers of the Central Government. It is, therefore a Government company within the meaning of section 617 of the Companies Act. The Memorandum of Association and the Articles of Association of the company confer large powers on the Central Government including the power to give directions as regards the functioning of the company. The wages and salaries of its employees are also determined in accordance with the said directions. The directors of the company are appointed by the President. In its Standing Orders, the company is described as a Government undertaking. The workmen employed by the company have two unions, the Heavy Engineering Mazdoor Union and the Hatia Project Workers Union.

Certain disputes having arisen between the company and its workmen, into which it is not necessary for the purposes of this judgment to go, the State Government of Bihar by its Notification, dated 15th November, 1966 referred two questions to the Industrial Tribunal for its adjudication : firstly, as regards the number of festival holidays and secondly, whether the second Saturday in a month should be an off-day. The Mazdoor Union thereupon filed a writ petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution in the High Court of Patna disputing the validity of the said reference on two grounds : (1) that the appropriate Government to make the said reference under section 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 was the Central Government and not the State Government and (2) that the questions referred to were at the time actually pending before the certifying authority under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, 1946 on an application for modification of the company's standing orders and that therefore the said questions would not be industrial disputes which could be validly referred for adjudication. Before the High Court it was conceded that the company was not an industry carried on by the Central Government but the contention was that considering the fact that the entire share capital was contributed by the Central Government and extensive powers were conferred on it, the company must be regarded as an industry carried on under the authority of the Central Government and that therefore it was that Government which was the appropriate Government which could make the said reference. On the second question, the contention was that the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act was a self-contained code, that once a question relating to conditions of service was before the certifying authority constituted under that Act and was pending before him, the said question could not be an industrial dispute which could be referred for adjudication under section 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act. It was urged that consequently the reference on both the grounds was invalid. The High Court negatived both the contentions and upheld the validity of the reference. The Mazdoor Union obtained a certificate under Article 133 (1) (c) and filed this appeal impugning the correctness of that decision.

Under section 2 (a) 'appropriate Government' (leaving aside the words which are not relevant for our purposes) means (i) in relation to any industrial dispute concerning an industry carried on by or under the authority of the Central Government, and (ii) in relation to any other industrial dispute the State Government. As was done before the High Court, Mr. Nag, appearing for the appellant-union, conceded that he would not contend that the company is an industry carried on by the Central Government but argued that it is an industry carried on under the authority of the Central Government and therefore it is that Government and not the State Government which is the appropriate Government for making a reference under section 10 of the Act. The first question raised by the appellant-union, therefore, turns solely upon the construction of the words 'carried on under the authority of the Central Government.' The contention was primarily grounded on the fact that the entire share capital of the company has been contributed by the Central Government, all its shares are held by the President and certain officers of the Central Government presumably its nominees and extensive control is vested in the Central Government.

Before considering the authorities cited by counsel before us, we proceed first to examine the meaning of the words used by Parliament in the definition clause of 'appropriate Government.' It is an undisputed fact that the company was incorporated under the Companies Act and it is the company so incorporated which carries on the undertaking. The undertaking, therefore, is not one carried on directly by the Central Government or by any one of its departments as in the case of posts and telegraphs or the railways. It was, therefore, rightly conceded both in the High Court as also before us that it is not an industry carried on by the Central Government. That being the position, the question then is, is the undertaking carried on under the authority of the Central Government? There being nothing in section 2 (a) to the contrary, the word 'authority' must be construed according to its ordinary meaning and therefore must mean a legal power given by one person to another to do an act. A person is said to be authorised or to have an authority when he is in such a position that he can act in a certain manner without incurring liability, to which he would be exposed but for the authority, or, so as to produce the same effect as if the person granting the authority had for himself done the act. For instance, if A authorises B to sell certain goods for and on his behalf and B does so, B incurs no liability for so doing in respect of such goods and confers a good title on the purchaser. There clearly arises in such a case the relationship of a principal and an agent. The words, "under the authority of" mean pursuant to the authority, such as where an agent or a servant acts under or pursuant to the authority of his principal or master. Can the respondent-company, therefore, be said to be carrying on its business pursuant to the authority of the Central Government? That obviously cannot be said of a company incorporated under the Companies Act whose constitution, powers and functions are provided for and regulated by its memorandum of association and the articles of association. An incorporated company, as is well known, has a separate existence and the law recognises it as a juristic person separate and distinct from its members. This new personality emerges from the moment of its incorporation and from that date the persons subscribing to its memorandum of association and other joining it as members are regarded as a body incorporate or a corporation aggregate and the new person begins to function as an entity. cf. *Salomon v. Salomon and Co.*¹. Its rights and obligations are different from those of its shareholders. Action taken against it does not directly affect its shareholders. The company in holding its property and carrying on its business is not the agent of its shareholders. An infringement of its rights does not give a cause of action to its shareholders. Consequently, it has been said that if a man trusts a corporation he trusts that legal persona and must look to its assets for payment; he can call upon the individual shareholders to contribute only if the Act or charter creating the corporation so provides. The liability of an individual member is not increased by the fact that he is the sole person beneficially interested in the property of the corporation and that the other members have become members merely for the purpose of enabling the corporation to become incorporated and possess only a nominal interest in its property or hold it in trust for him. (cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd. Ed., Vol., 9, p. 9). Such a company even possesses the nationality of the country under the laws of which it is incorporated, irrespective of the nationality of its members and does not cease to have that nationality even if in times of war it falls under enemy control. [cf. *Janson v. Driefontain Consolidated Mines*¹ and *Kuenigl v. Donnersmarck*². The company so incorporated derives its powers and functions from and by virtue of its memorandum of association and its articles of association. Therefore, the mere fact that the entire share capital of the respondent-company was contributed by the Central Government and the fact that all its shares are held by the President and certain officers of the Central Government does not make any difference. The company and the shareholders being, as aforesaid, distinct entities the fact that the President of India and certain officers hold all its shares does not make the company an agent either of the President or the Central Government. A notice to the President of India and the said officers of the Central Government, who hold between them all the shares of the company, would not be a notice to the company : nor can a suit maintainable by and in the name of the company be sustained by or in the name of the President and the said officers.

It is true that besides the Central Government having contributed the entire share capital, extensive powers are conferred on it, including the power to give directions as to how the company should function, the power to appoint directors and even the power to determine the wages and salaries payable by the company to its employees. But these powers are derived from the company's memorandum of association and the articles of association and not by reason of the company being the agent of the Central Government. The question whether a corporation is an agent of the State must depend on the facts of each case. Where a statute setting up a corporation so provides, such a corporation can easily be identified as the agent of the State as in *Graham v. Public Works Commissioners*³, where Phillimore, J. said that the Crown does in certain cases establish with the consent of Parliament certain officials or bodies who are to be treated as agents of the Crown even though they have the power of contracting as principals. In the absence of a statutory provision, however, a commercial corporation acting on its own behalf, even though it is controlled wholly or partially by a Government department, will be ordinarily presumed not to be a servant or agent of the State. The fact that a Minister appoints the members or directors of a corporation and he is entitled to call for information, to give directions which are binding on the directors and to supervise over the conduct of the business of the corporation does not render the corporation an agent of the Government. [see *The State Trading Corporation of India Ltd. v. The Commercial Tax Officer, Visakhapatnam*⁴ and *Tamlin v. Hannaford*⁵. Such an inference that the corporation is the agent of the Government may be drawn where it is performing in substance Governmental and not commercial functions. [cf. *London County Territorial and Auxiliary Forces Association v. Nichols*⁶.

In this connection the meaning of the word 'employer' as given in section 2 (g) of the Act may be looked at with some profit as the Legislature there has used identical words while defining 'an employer.' An employer under cl. (g) mean. in relation to an industry carried on by or under the authority of any department of the Central Government or a State Government, the authority prescribed in that behalf or where no such authority is prescribed, the head of the department. No such authority has been prescribed in regard to the business carried on by the respondent-company. But that does not mean that the head of the department which gives the directions as aforesaid or which supervises over the functioning of the company is the employer within the meaning of section 2 (g). The definition of the employer, on the contrary, suggests that an industry carried on by or under the authority of the Government means either the industry carried on directly by a department of the Government, such as the posts and telegraphs or the railways, or one carried on by such department through the instrumentality of an agent. We find that the view which we are inclined to take on the interpretation of section 2 (a) is also taken by the High Courts of Calcutta, Punjab and Bombay. [see *Carlsbad Mineral Water Mfg. Co. v. P.K. Sarkar*¹, *Cantonment Board v. State of Punjab*² and Abdul Rehman Abdul Gafur v. Mrs. E. Paul.³ In our view the contention that the appropriate Government to make the aforesaid reference was the State Government and not the Central Government has no merit and cannot be sustained.

The second contention that the questions referred to were regulated by the company's standing orders and an application for a modification of the said standing orders relating to those questions was actually pending before the certifying authority under the Industrial Employees (Standing Orders) Act precluded a reference thereof under section 10 of the Act requires no discussion as it is covered by the decision in *Management of Bangalore Woollen, Cotton and Silk Mills Co. Ltd. v. Workmen*⁴ and *The Management of Shahdara (Delhi) Shaharanpur Light Railway Co. Ltd. v. S.S. Railway Workers Union*⁵.

Thus neither of the two contentions can be upheld. In the result the appeal is dismissed but there will be no order as to costs.

Extradition—Surrender of a person within the State to another—A political act, either in pursuance of a treaty or by an ad hoc arrangement—The municipal law to determine the procedure to be followed by the Courts.

Extradition—Duty of the Courts—Protection of the right of the individual—Courts of both the countries to be satisfied as to the existence of prima facie evidence of the commission of the offence—Requisition for surrender not the function of the Courts but of the State.

Fugitive Offenders Act (1881)—Several Colonies treating the Act as applicable to them—Act, not repealed by Indian Parliament—Act, if applicable to India after 26th January, 1950.

Extradition Act (XXXIV of 1962), section 12—Extradition of fugitive offenders—No notification including Hong Kong in the list of the Commonwealth countries—Securing the extradition of fugitive offender through diplomatic, if barred under the Act.

Extradition is the surrender by one State to another of a person desired to be dealt with for crimes of which he has been accused or convicted and which are justiciable in the Courts of the other State. Surrender of a person within the State to another State—whether a citizen or an alien—is a political act done in pursuance of a treaty or an agreement ad hoc. It is founded on the broad principle that it is in the interest of civilized communities that crimes should not go unpunished, and on that account it is recognised as a part of the comity of nations that one State should ordinarily afford to another State assistance towards bringing offenders to justice. The law relating to extradition between independent States is based on treaties. But the law has operation—national as well as international. It governs international relationship between the sovereign States which is secured by treaty obligations. But whether an offender should be handed over pursuant to a requisition is determined by the domestic law of the State on which the requisition is made. of the international commitments of the State the procedure to be followed by the Courts in deciding, whether extradition should be granted and on what terms, is determined by the municipal law. Sanction behind an order of extradition is the international commitment of the State under which the Court functions, but Courts jealously seek to protect the right of the individual by insisting upon strict compliance with the conditions precedent to surrender. The Courts of the country which make a requisition for surrender deal with the prima facie proof of the offence and leave it to the State to make a requisition upon the other State in which the offender has taken refuge. Requisition for surrender is not the function of the Courts but of the State. A warrant issued by a Court for an offence committed in a country from its very nature has no extra-territorial operation. It is only a command by the Court in the name of the sovereign to its officer to arrest an offender and to bring him before the Court. By taking a requisition in pursuance of a warrant issued by a Court of a State to another State for assistance in securing the presence of the offender, the warrant is not invested with extra-territorial operation. If the other State requested agrees to lend its aid to arrest the fugitive the arrest is made either by the issue of an independent warrant or endorsement or authentication of the warrant of the Court which issued it. By endorsement or authentication of a warrant the country in which an offender has taken refuge signifies its willingness to lend its assistance, in implementation of the treaties or international commitments and to secure the arrest of the offender. The offender arrested pursuant to the warrant of an endorsement is brought before the Court of the country to which the requisition is made, and the Court holds an inquiry to determine whether the offender may be extradited. International commitment or treaty will be effective only if the Court of a country in which the offender is arrested after enquiry is of the view that the offender should be surrendered.

The functions which the Courts in the two countries perform are therefore different. The Court within whose jurisdiction the offence is committed decides whether there is prima facie evidence on which a requisition may be made to another country for surrender of the offender. When the State to which a requisition is made agrees consistently with its international commitments to lend its aid the requisition is transmitted to the Police authorities, and the Courts of that country consider, according to their own laws, whether the offender should be surrendered—the enquiry is in the absence of express provisions to the contrary relating to the prima facie evidence of the commission of the offence which is extraditable, the offence not being a political offence nor that the requisition being a subterfuge to secure custody for trial for a political offence.

The President of India adapted the Extradition Act, 1903, in certain particulars. The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, and the Extradition Act, 1870, in their application to India were however not repealed by the Indian Parliament and to the extent they were consistent with the constitutional scheme they remained applicable. By the declaration of the status of India as a Republic, India has not ceased to be a part of the Commonwealth and the United Kingdom and several Colonies have treated the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, as applicable to them for the purpose of honouring the requisition made by the Republic of India from time to time.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate had the power to issue the warrant for the arrest of More, because there was prima facie evidence before him that More had committed certain offences which he was competent to try. The warrant was in Form II of Schedule V of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the warrant was to be successfully executed against More who was not in India, assistance of the Executive Government had to be obtained. It is not an invasion upon the authority of the Courts when they are informed that certain procedure may be followed for obtaining the assistance of the executive Department of the State in securing through diplomatic channels extradition of fugitive offenders. In pursuance of that warrant, on the endorsement made by the Central Magistrate Hong Kong, More was arrested. The warrant was issued with the knowledge that it could not be enforced within India and undoubtedly to secure the extradition of More. Pursuant to the warrant the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, moved through diplomatic channels, and persuaded the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong to arrest and deliver More. Issue of the warrant and the procedure followed in transmitting the warrant were not illegal, not even irregular.

It is true that under the Extradition Act XXXIV of 1962 no notification has been issued including Hong Kong in the list of the Commonwealth countries from which extradition of fugitives from justice may be secured. The provisions of the Extradition Act, 1962 cannot be availed of for securing the presence of More for trial in India. But that did not operate as a bar to the requisition made by the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, if they were able to persuade the Colonial Secretary, Hong Kong, to deliver More for trial in this country. If the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong was willing to hand over More for trial in this country, it cannot be said that the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate for the arrest of More with the aid of which requisition for securing his presence from Hong Kong was to be made, was illegal.

It cannot be said that the enactment of the Extradition Act XXXIV of 1962 the Government of India is prohibited from securing through diplomatic channels the extradition of an offender for trial of an offence committed within India. There was no illegality committed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta in sending the warrant to the Secretary, Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal, for transmission to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, for taking further steps for securing the presence of More in India to undergo trial.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 20th April, 1967 of the Calcutta High Court in Criminal Revision No. 502 of 1966.

B. Sen, Senior Advocate, (P.K. Chakravarti, Advocate, with him), for Appellants.

A.S.R. Chari, Senior Advocate (B.P. Maheshwari and Sobhag Mal Jain, Advocates, with him), for Respondent No. 1.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—In the course of investigation of offences under section 420, 467, 471 and 120-B, Indian Penal Code the Officer in charge of the investigation submitted an application before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, for an order that a warrant for the arrest of Jugal Kishore More and certain other named persons be issued and that the warrant be forwarded with the relevant records and evidence to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, for securing extradition of More who was then believed to be in Hong Kong. It was stated in the application that More and others “were parties to a criminal conspiracy in Calcutta between May, 1961 and December, 1962 to defraud the Government of India in respect of India’s foreign exchange”, and their presence was required for trial.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate held an enquiry and recorded an order on 19th July, 1965, that on the materials placed before him, a prima facie case was made out of a criminal conspiracy, was “hatched in Calcutta” within his jurisdiction, and More was one of the conspirators. He accordingly directed that a non-bailable warrant in Form II Schedule V of the Code of Criminal Procedure be issued for the arrest of More, and the warrant be sent to the Secretary Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal, with a request to take all necessary steps to ensure execution of the warrant. A copy of the warrant was sent to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, for information. In the warrant More was described as Manager, Premko Traders of 7, Wyndham Street and 28th King’s Road, Hong Kong. The Chief Presidency Magistrate forwarded to the Government of West Bengal, the warrant with attested copies of the evidence recorded at the enquiry and photostat copies of documents tendered by the prosecution in evidence “in accordance with the procedure laid down in Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, letter

No. K/52/6131/41 dated 21st May, 1955". The warrant was forwarded by the Government of West Bengal to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India. The Ministry of External Affairs forwarded the warrant to the High Commissioner for India, Hong Kong, who in his turn, requested the Colonial Secretary, Hong Kong, for an order extraditing More under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. (44 and 45 Vict., c. 69), to India for trial for offences described in the warrant. The Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, endorsed the warrant and directed the Hong Kong Police, "pursuant to section 13 of Part II and section 26 of Part IV of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881", to arrest More. The order recited:—

"Whereas I have perused this warrant for the apprehension of Jugal Kishore More, * * * * * accused of an offence punishable by law in Calcutta, Republic of India, which warrant purports to be signed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, and is sealed with the seal of the Court of the said Magistrate, and is attested by S.K. Chatterjee, Under Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs of the Republic of India and sealed with the seal of the said Ministry;

And whereas I am satisfied that this warrant was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue the same;

And whereas it has been represented to me that the said Jugal Kishore More * * * is suspected of being in the Colony;

And whereas Order in Council S.R. and O. No. 28 of 1918 by virtue of which Part II of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, was made to apply to a group of British Possessions and Protective States including Hong Kong and British India, appears to remain in full force and effect so far as the law of Hong Kong is concerned.

Now therefore under section 13 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, I hereby endorse this warrant and authorise and command you in Her Majesty's name, forthwith to execute this Warrant in the Colony to apprehend the said Jugal Kishore More, * * * wherever he may be found in the colony and to bring him before a Magistrate of the said Colony to be further dealt with according to law."

More was arrested on 24th November, 1965. By order dated 4th April, 1966, the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, overruled the objection raised on behalf of More that the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed in the matter under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, since the Republic of India was no longer a "British Possession".

On 16th May, 1966, Hanuman Prasad—father of More—moved in the High Court of Calcutta a petition under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and Art. 227 of the Constitution for an order quashing the warrant of arrest issued against More and all proceedings taken pursuant thereto and restraining the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the Union of India from taking any further steps pursuant to the said warrant of arrest and causing More to be extradited from Hong Kong to India. The petition was heard before a Division Bench of the High Court. A. Roy, J., held that the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was not illegal and the procedure followed for securing extradition of More was not irregular. In his view the assumption made by the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, that for the purpose of the Fugitive Offenders Act, India was a "British Possession" was irrelevant since that was only a view expressed by him according to the municipal law of Hong Kong, and by acceding to the requisition for extradition and surrender made upon that country by the Government of India in exercise of sovereign rights the status of the Republic of India was not affected.

In the view of Gupta, J., the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the steps taken pursuant to the warrant were without jurisdiction, that the request made to the Hong Kong Government by the Government of India was also without authority in the absence of a notified order under section 3 of the Extradition Act, 1962, and the High Court could not ignore the "laws of the land, even to support a gesture of comity to another nation," that, what was done by the Hong Kong authorities pursuant to the request made for the surrender of More was "not an instance of international comity but was regarded as the legal obligation under the Fugitive Offenders Act under which the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong regarded India as a Colony or Possession of the British Commonwealth." The case was then posted for hearing before B. Mukherji, J. The learned Judge held that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no power to issue the warrant of arrest in the manner he had done,—a manner which in his view was "unknown to the Code of Criminal Procedure," since the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, had ceased, on the coming into force of the Constitution, to be part of the law of India and could not on that account be resorted to for obtaining extradition of offenders from another country; that the instructions issued by the Government of India by letter No. 3516-J dated 14th June, 1955, laying down the procedure to be followed by the Courts for securing extradition of offenders from the Commonwealth countries should have been ignored by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and that the Extradition Act XXXIV of 1962 did not authorise the Chief Presidency Magistrate to issue a warrant and to send it to the Secretary, Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal; that there "was no legal basis for the requisition made by the Central Government to Hong Kong" for extradition or surrender of More for the issue of the warrant by the Chief Presidency Magistrate; and that the demand made by the Government of India to the Government of Hong Kong by making a requisition to Hong Kong for the arrest of More "was not a political act, beyond the purview of law and judicial scrutiny," and being inconsistent with the law was liable to be rectified. He observed that the Central Government had the power under section 3 of the Extradition Act, 1962, to issue a notification for including Hong Kong in the list of countries from which offenders may be extradited, but since the Government had not issued any notification under that clause in exercise of the executive power, the Government could not attempt in violation of the statutory procedure seek extradition which the law of India did not permit. The learned Judge accordingly ordered that the warrant of arrest dated 30th July, 1965 issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, against More and all subsequent proceedings taken by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the other respondents be quashed. The State of West Bengal has appealed to this Court with Special Leave.

Extradition is the surrender by one State to another of a person desired to be dealt with for crimes of which he has been accused or convicted and which are justiciable in the Courts of the other State. Surrender of a person within the State to another State—whether a citizen or an alien—is a political act done in pursuance of a treaty or an arrangement ad hoc. It is founded on the broad principle that it is in the interest of civilized communities that crimes should not go unpunished, and on that account it is recognised as a part of the comity of nations that one State should ordinarily afford to another State assistance towards bringing offenders to justice. The law relating to extradition between independent States is based on treaties. But the law has operation—national as well as international. It governs international relationship between the sovereign States which is secured by treaty obligations. But whether an offender should be handed over pursuant to a requisition is determined by the domestic law of the State on which the requisition is made. Though extradition is granted in implementation of the international commitments of the State the procedure to be followed by the Courts in deciding, whether extradition should be granted and on what terms, is determined by the municipal law.

As observed in Wheaton's International Law, Vol. I, 6th Edition, page 213 :

"The constitutional doctrine in England is that the Crown may make treaties with foreign States for the extradition of criminals, but those treaties can only be carried into effect by Act of Parliament, for the executive has no power, without statutory authority, to seize an alien here and deliver him to a foreign power."

Sanction behind an order of extradition is therefore, the international commitment of the State under which the Court functions, but Courts jealously seek to protect the right of the individual by insisting upon strict compliance with the conditions precedent to surrender. The Courts of the country which make a requisition for surrender deal with the prima facie proof of the offence and leave it to the State to make a requisition upon the other State in which the offender has taken refuge. Requisition for surrender is not the function of the Courts but of the State. A warrant issued by a Court for an offence committed in a country from its very nature has no extra-territorial operation. It is only a command by the Court in the name of the sovereign to its officer to arrest an offender and to bring him before the Court. By making a requisition is pursuance of a warrant issued by a Court of a State to another State for assistance in securing the presence of the offender, the warrant is not invested with extra-territorial operation. If the other State requested agrees to lend its aid to arrest the fugitive the arrest is made either by the issue of an independent warrant or endorsement or authentication of the warrant of the Court which issued it. By endorsement or authentication of a warrant the country in which an offender has taken refuge signifies its willingness to lend its assistance, in implementation of the treaties or international commitments and to secure the arrest of the offender. The offender arrested pursuant to the warrant or an endorsement is brought before the Court of the country to which the requisition is made, and the Court holds an inquiry to determine whether the offender may be extradited. International commitment or treaty will be effective only if the Court of a country in which the offender is arrested after enquiry is of the view that the offender should be surrendered.

The functions which the Courts in the two countries perform are therefore different. The Court within whose jurisdiction the offence is committed decides whether there is prima facie evidence on which a requisition may be made to another country for surrender of the offender. When the State to which a requisition is made agrees consistently with its international commitments to lend its aid the requisition is transmitted to the Police authorities, and the Courts of that country consider, according to their own laws, whether the offender should be surrendered—the enquiry is in the absence of express provisions to the contrary relating to the prima facie evidence of the commission of the offence which is extraditable, the offence not being a political offence nor that the requisition being a subterfuge to secure custody for trial for a political offence.

Prior to 26th January, 1950, there was in force in India the Indian Extradition Act XV of 1903, which as the Preamble expressly enacted was intended to provide for the more convenient administration of the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873, and the Foreign Jurisdiction Act of 1881—both enacted by the British Parliament. The Act enacted machinery in Chapter II for the surrender of fugitive criminals in case of Foreign States i.e., States to which the Extradition Act of 1870 and 1873 applied and in Chapter II for surrender of fugitive offenders in case of "His Majesty's Dominions." The Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 sought to give effect to arrangements made with foreign States with respect to the surrender to such States of any fugitive criminals Her Majesty may by Order in Council, direct and to prescribe the procedure for extraditing fugitive offenders to such foreign states.

As observed in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 16, 3rd edition, 1161 at page 567:

"When a treaty has been made with a foreign State and the Extradition Acts have been applied by Order in Council, one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State may, upon a requisition made to him by some person recognised by him as a diplomatic representative of that foreign State, by order under his hand and seal, signify to a police magistrate that such a requisition has been made and require him to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive criminal if the criminal is in, or is suspected of being in, the United Kingdom."

The warrant may then be issued by a police magistrate on receipt of the order of the Secretary of State and upon such evidence as would in his opinion justify the issue of the warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in England.

The procedure for extradition of fugitive offenders from "British possessions" was less complicated. When the Extradition Act was applied by Order in Council unless it was otherwise provided by such Order, the Act extended to every "British possession" in the same manner as if throughout the Act the "British possession" were substituted for the United Kingdom but with certain modifications in procedure.

Under Part I of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 a warrant issued in one part of the Crown's Dominion for apprehension of a fugitive offender, could be endorsed for execution in another Dominion. After the fugitive was apprehended he was brought before the Magistrate who heard the case in the same manner and had the same jurisdiction and powers as if the fugitive was charged with an offence committed within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. If the Magistrate was satisfied, after expiry of 15 days from the date on which the fugitive was committed to prison, he could make an order for surrender of the fugitive on the warrant issued by the Secretary of State or an appropriate officer. There was also provision for "inter-Colonial backing of warrants" within groups of "British possessions" to which Part I of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 had been applied by Order in Council. In such groups a more rapid procedure for the return of fugitive offenders between possessions of the same group was in force. Where in a "British possession," of a group to which Part II of the Act applied, a warrant was issued for the apprehension of a person accused of an offence punishable in that possession and such term is or was suspected of being, in or on the way to another British possession of the same group, a magistrate in the last-mentioned possession, if satisfied that the warrant was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue the same, was bound to endorse such warrant, and the warrant so endorsed was sufficient authority to apprehend, within the jurisdiction of the endorsing magistrate, the person named in the warrant, and to bring him before the endorsing magistrate or some other magistrate in the same possession. If the magistrate before whom a person apprehended was brought was satisfied that the warrant was duly authenticated and was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue it, and the identity of the prisoner was established he could order the prisoner to be returned to the British possession in which the warrant was issued, and for that purpose to deliver into the custody of the persons to whom the warrant was addressed or of any one or more of them, and to be held in custody and conveyed to that possession, there to be dealt with according to law as if he had been there apprehended. This was in brief the procedure prior to 26th January, 1950.

The President of India adapted the Extradition Act, 1903, in certain particulars. The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 and the Extradition Act, 1870, in their application to India were however not repealed by the Indian Parliament and to the extent they were consistent with the constitutional scheme they remained applicable. In order to maintain the continued application of laws the British Parliament, notwithstanding India becoming a Republic, the British Parliament, enacted the India (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1949 which by section 1 provided:—

"(1) On and after the date of India's becoming a republic, all existing law, that is to say, all law which, whether being a rule of law or a provision of an Act of Parliament or of any other enactment or instrument whatsoever, is in force on that date or has been passed or made before that date and comes into force thereafter, shall, until provision to the contrary is made by the authority having power to alter that law and subject to the provisions of sub-section (3) of this section, have the same operation in relation to India, and to persons and things in any way belonging to or connected with India, as it would have had if India had not become a republic.

(3) His Majesty may by Order in Council make provision for such satisfaction of any existing law to which this Act extends as may appear to him to be necessary or expedient in view of India's becoming a republic while remaining a member of the Commonwealth, and sub-section (1) of this section shall have effect in relation to any such laws as modified by such an order in so far as the contrary intention appears in the order. An Order in Council under this section:—

(a) may be made either before or after India becomes a republic, and may be revoked or varied by a subsequent Order in Council; and

(b) shall be subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament."

In 1954 this Court was called upon to decide a case relating to extradition to Singapore, a British Colony, of a person alleged to be a fugitive offender. *The State of Madras v. G. G. Menon and another*¹. In that case Menon and his wife were apprehended and produced before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, pursuant to warrants of arrest issued under the provisions of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. Arrests were made in pursuance of requisition made by the Colonial Secretary of Singapore requesting the assistance of the Government of India to arrest and return to the Colony of Singapore Menons under warrants issued by the Police Magistrate of Singapore. Menons pleaded that the Fugitive Act, 1881, under which the action was sought to be taken against them was repugnant to the Constitution of India and was void and unenforceable. The Chief Presidency Magistrate referred two questions of law for decision of the High Court of Madras :

(1) Whether the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, applies to India after 26th January, 1950, when India became a Sovereign Democratic Republic; and

(2) Whether, even if it applied, it or any of its provisions, particularly Part II thereof, is repugnant to the Constitution of India, and is therefore void and or inoperative.

The High Court held that the Fugitive Offenders Act was inconsistent with the fundamental right of equal protection of the laws guaranteed by Article 14 of the Constitution and was void to that extent and unenforceable against the petitioners. In appeal brought to this Court it was observed:

"It is plain from the * * * provisions of the Fugitive Offenders Act as well as from the Order in Council that British Possessions which were contiguous to one another and between whom there was frequent inter-communication were treated for purposes of the Fugitive Offenders Act as one integrated territory and a summary procedure was adopted for the purpose of extraditing persons who had committed offences in these integrated territories. As the laws prevailing in those possessions were substantially the same, the requirement that no fugitive will be surrendered unless a prima facie case was made against him was dispensed with. Under the India Extradition Act, 1903, also a similar requirement is insisted upon before a person can be extradited.

The situation completely changed when India became a Sovereign Democratic Republic. After the achievement of independence and the coming into force of the new Constitution by no strength of imagination could India be described as a British Possession and it could not be grouped by an Order in Council amongst those Possessions. Truly speaking, it became a foreign territory so far as other British Possessions are concerned and the extradition of person taking asylum in India, having committed offences in British Possessions, could only be dealt with by an arrangement between the Sovereign Democratic Republic of India and the British Government and given effect to by appropriate legislation. The Union Parliament has not so far enacted any law on the subject and it was not suggested that any arrangement has been arrived at between these two Governments. The Indian Extradition Act, 1903, has been adapted but the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, which was an Act of the British Parliament has been left severely alone. The provisions of that Act could only be made applicable to India by incorporating them with appropriate changes into an Act of the Indian Parliament and by enacting an Indian Fugitive Offenders Act. In the absence of any legislation on those lines, it seems difficult to hold that section 12 or section 14 of the Fugitive Offenders Act has force in India by reason of the provisions of Article 372 of the Constitution. The whole basis for the applicability of Part II of the Fugitive Offenders Act has gone: India is no longer a British Possession and no Order in Council can be made to group it with other British Possessions. * * * * The political background and shape of things when Part II of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, was enacted and envisaged by that Act having completely changed, it is not possible without radical legislative changes to adapt that Act to the changed conditions. That being so, in our opinion the tentative view expressed by the Presidency Magistrate was right * * * *."

After this judgment was delivered, the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, issued a notification on 21st May, 1955, to all State Governments of Part A, B, C & D States. It was stated in the notification that:

".....in a certain case of extradition of an offender, the Supreme Court of India recently ruled that in the changed circumstances, the English Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, is no longer applicable to India. There can, therefore, be no question of issuing a warrant of arrest, addressed to a foreign police or a foreign Court, in respect of persons who are residing outside India except in accordance with the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(2) In the circumstances, to obtain a fugitive offender from the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth countries, the following procedure may be adopted as long as the new Indian Extradition law is not enacted and the Commonwealth countries continued to honour our requests for the surrender of the fugitive offenders notwithstanding decisions of the Supreme Court;

(a) The Magistrate concerned will issue a warrant for the arrest of the fugitive offender to Police officials of India in the usual form prescribed under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(b) The warrant for arrest, accompanied by all such documents as would enable a prima facie case to be established against the accused will be submitted by the Magistrate to the Government of India in the Ministry of External Affairs, through the State Government concerned.

3. This Ministry, in consultation with the Ministries of Home Affairs, and Law, will make a requisition for the surrender of a fugitive offender in the form of a letter, requesting the Secretary of State (in the case of Dominions, the appropriate authority in the Dominion) to get the warrant endorsed in accordance with law. This letter will be addressed to the Secretary of State (or other appropriate authority in case of Dominions) through the High Commissioner for India in the United Kingdom/Dominion concerned and will be accompanied by the warrant issued by the Magistrate at (a) of para 2 above and other documents received therewith."

The Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta made out the warrant for the arrest of More pursuant to that notification and sent the warrant to the Secretary, Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal. Validity of the steps taken in accordance with the notification by the Chief Presidency Magistrate is questioned in this appeal.

To complete the narrative, it is necessary to refer to the Extradition Act XXXIV of 1962. The Parliament has enacted Act XXXIV of 1962 to consolidate and amend the law relating to the extradition of fugitive criminals. It makes provisions by Chapter II for extradition of fugitive criminals to foreign States and to Commonwealth countries to which Chapter III does not apply. Chapter III deals with the return of fugitive criminals to Commonwealth countries with extradition arrangements. By section 12 it is provided:

“(1) This Chapter shall apply only to any such Commonwealth country to which, by reason of an extradition arrangement entered into with that country, it may seem expedient to the Central Government to apply the same.

(2) every such application shall be by notified order, and the Central Government may, by the same or any subsequent notified order, direct that this Chapter and Chapters I, IV and V shall, in relation to any such Commonwealth country, apply subject to such modifications, exceptions, conditions and qualifications as it may think fit to specify in the order for the purpose of implementing the arrangement.”

Section 13 provides that the fugitive criminals from Commonwealth countries may be apprehended and returned. Chapter IV deals with the surrender or return of accused or convicted persons from foreign States or Commonwealth countries. By Section 19 it was provided that:—

“(1) A requisition for the surrender of a person accused or convicted of an extradition offence committed in India and who is or is suspected to be, in any foreign State or a Commonwealth country to which Chapter III does not apply, may be made by the Central Government :—

(a) to a diplomatic representative of that State or country at Delhi; or

(b) to the Government of that State or country through the diplomatic representative of India in that State or country; and if neither of these modes is convenient, the requisition shall be made in such other mode as is settled by arrangement made by the Government of India with that State or country.

(2) A warrant issued by a Magistrate in India for the apprehension of any person who is, or is suspected to be, in any Commonwealth country to which Chapter III applies shall be in such form as may be prescribed.”

By clause (a) of section 2 the expression “Commonwealth country” means “a Commonwealth country specified in the First Schedule and such other Commonwealth country as may be added to that Schedule by the Central Government by notification in the Official Gazette, and includes every constituent part, colony or dependency of any Commonwealth country so specified or added.” But in the Schedule to the Act “Hong Kong” is not specified as one of the Commonwealth countries and no notification has been issued by the Government of India under section 2 (a) adding to the First Schedule “Hong Kong” as a Commonwealth country. It is common ground between the parties that the provisions of the Extradition Act, 1962, could not be resorted to for making the requisition for surrender of the fugitive offender from Hong Kong and no attempt was made in that behalf.

Validity of the action taken by the Chief Presidency Magistrate must, therefore, be adjudged in the light of the action taken pursuant to the notification issued by the Government of India on 21st May, 1955. Counsel for the respondent More urged that the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was intended to be and could in its very nature be a legal warrant enforceable within India : it had no extra-territorial operation and could not be enforced outside India, and when the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, purported to endorse that warrant for enforcement within Hong Kong he had no authority to do so. But this Court has no authority to sit in judgment over the order passed by the Hong Kong Central Magistrate. The Magistrate acted in accordance with the municipal law of Hong Kong and agreed to the surrender of the offender : his action cannot be challenged in this Court.

It may also be pointed out that Form II of the warrant prescribed in Schedule V of the Code of Criminal Procedure only issues a direction under the authority of the Magistrature to a Police Officer to arrest a named person and to produce him before the Court. It does not state that the warrant shall be executed in any designated place or area. By section 82 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a warrant of arrest may be executed at any place in India. That provision does not impose any restriction upon the power of the Police Officer. The section only declares, in that, every warrant issued by any Magistrate in India may be executed at any place in India : execution of the warrant is not restricted to the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate issuing the warrant or of the Court to which he is subordinate.

In *Emberor v. Vinayck Damodar Savarkar and others*¹, the Bombay High Court considered the question whether a person who was brought to the country and was charged before a Magistrate with an offence under the Indian Penal Code was entitled to challenge the manner in which he was brought into the country from a foreign country. Savarkar was charged with conspiracy under sections 121, 121-A, 122 and 123 of the Indian Penal Code. He was arrested in the United Kingdom and brought to India after arrest under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. When the ship in which he was being brought to India was near French territory Savarkar escaped from Police custody and set foot on French territory at Marseilles. He was arrested by the Police Officers without reference to the French Police Authorities and brought to India. It was contended at the trial of Savarkar that he was not liable to be tried in India, since arrest by the Indian Police Officers in a foreign territory was without jurisdiction. Scott, C.J., who delivered the principal judgment of the Court rejected the contention. He observed :

“Where a man is in the country and is charged before a Magistrate with an offence under the Penal Code it will not avail him to say that he was brought there illegally from a foreign country.”

It is true that Savarkar was produced before the Court and he raised an objection about the validity of the trial on the plea that he was illegally brought to India, after unlawful arrest in foreign territory. In the present case we are concerned with a stage anterior to that. The respondent More though arrested in a foreign country lawfully by the order of the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, had not been surrendered and the invalidity of the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate is set up as a ground for refusing to obtain extradition of the offender. But on the principle of *Vinayck Damodar Savarkar's case*¹, the contention about the invalidity of the arrest cannot affect the jurisdiction of the Courts in India to try More if and when he is brought here.

The Indian Extradition Act XV of 1903 which was enacted to provide for the more convenient administration of the English Extradition Act, 1870 and 1873 and the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, remained in operation. But after 26th January, 1950, India is no longer a “British Possession.” In *C.G. Menon's case*², it was decided by this Court that application of sections 12 and 14 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, for surrendering an offender to a Commonwealth country in pursuance of a requisition under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, is inconsistent with the political status of India. It is somewhat unfortunate that the Court hearing that case was not invited to say anything about the operation of the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949.

But *C. G. Menon's case*², was a reverse case, in that, the Colonial Secretary of Singapore had made a requisition for surrender of the offender for trial for offences of criminal breach of trust in Singapore. Whether having regard to the political status of India since 26th January, 1950, the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, in so far as it purported to treat India as a “British Possession” imposed an obligation to deliver offenders in pursuance of the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949 is a question on which it is not necessary to express an opinion. By the declaration of the status of India as a Republic, India has not ceased to be a part of the Commonwealth and the United Kingdom and several Colonies have treated the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, as applicable to them for the purpose of honouring the requisition made by the Republic of India from time to time. In *Re. Government of India and Mubarak Ali Ahmed*¹ an attempt to resist in the High Court in England the requisition by the republic of India to surrender an offender who had committed offences in India and had fled justice failed. Mubarak Ali a native of Pakistan was being tried in the Courts in India on charges of forgery and fraud. He broke his bail and fled to Pakistan and thereafter to England. He was arrested on a provisional warrant issued by the London Metropolitan Magistrate on the application of the Government of India. After hearing legal submissions the Metropolitan Magistrate made an order under section 5 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, for Mubarak Ali's detention in custody pending his return to India to answer the charges made against him. Mubarak Ali then filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus before the Queen's Bench of the High Court. It was held that the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, was in force between India and Great Britain on 26th January, 1950, when India became a republic and it was continued to apply by virtue of section 1 (1) of the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949, and, therefore, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order for the applicant's return. Pursuant to the requisition made by the Government of India, Mubarak Ali was surrendered by the British Government. Mubarak Ali was then brought to India and was tried and convicted. One on the offences for which he was tried resulted in his conviction and an appeal was brought to this Court in *Mubarak Ali Ahmed v. The State of Bombay*².

There are other cases as well, in which orders were made by the British Courts complying with the requisitions made by the Governments of Republics within the Commonwealth, for extradition of offenders under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. An offender from Ghana was ordered to be extradited pursuant to the Ghana (Consequential Provision) Act, 1960, even after Ghana became a republic. *Re. Kwesi Armah*³. On 1st July, 1960, Ghana while remaining by virtue of the Ghana (Consequential Provision) Act, 1960, a member of the Commonwealth became Republic. Kwesi Armah who was a Minister in Ghana fled the country in 1966 and took refuge in the United Kingdom. He was arrested under a provisional warrant issued under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. The Metropolitan Magistrate being satisfied that the Act of 1881 still applied to Ghana and that a prima facie case had been made out against the applicant in respect of two alleged contraventions of the Ghana Criminal Code, 1960, by corruption and extortion when he was a public officer, committed Kwesi Armah to prison pending his return to Ghana to undergo trial. A petition for a writ of habeas corpus before the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court was refused. Edmund Davies, J., was of the view that the Act of 1881 applied to the Republic of Ghana, in its new form, just as it did before the coup d'état of February, 1966. The case was then carried to the House of Lords: *Armah v. Government of Ghana and another*⁴. The questions decided by the House of Lords have no relevance in this case. But it was not even argued that a fugitive offender from a republic which was a member of the Commonwealth could not be extradited under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881.

There is yet another recent judgment of the House of Lords dealing with repatriation of a citizen of the Republic of Cyprus: *Zacharia v. Republic of Cyprus and another*⁵. Warrants were issued against Zacharia on charges before the Courts in Cyprus of offences of abduction, demanding money with menaces and murder. Under the orders issued by a Bow Street Magistrate under section 5 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, Zacharia was committed to prison pending his return to Cyprus. An application for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the offences alleged against him were political and that the application for the return of the Merely because for the purpose of the extradition procedure, in a statute passed before the attainment of independence by the former Colonies and dependencies, certain territories continue to be referred to as "British Possessions", the statute does not become inapplicable to those territories. The expression "British Possession" in the old statutes merely survives as an artificial mode of reference, undoubtedly not consistent with political realities, and but does not imply for the purpose of the statute or otherwise political dependence of the Government of the territories referred to. It is not for the Courts of India to take umbrage at expressions used in statutes of other countries and to refuse to give effect to Indian Laws which govern the problems arising before them. It is interesting to note that by express enactment the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, remains in force as a part of the law of the Republic of Ireland : see Ireland Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6. c. 41). In Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition, Volume 5, Article 987, page 433—in dealing with the expression "Her Majesty's Dominions" in old statutes, it is observed :

"The term 'Her Majesty's Dominions' means all the territories under the sovereignty of the Crown, and the territorial waters adjacent thereto. In special cases it may include territories under the protection of the Crown and mandated and trust territories. References to Her Majesty's dominions contained in statutes passed before India became a republic are still to be construed as including India; it is usual to name India separately from Her Majesty's dominions in statutes passed since India became a republic."

In foot-note (1) on page 433 it is stated, British India, which included the whole of India except the Princely States; and the Government of India Act, 1935 as amended by section 8 of the India and Burma (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act, 1940, formed part of Her Majesty's dominions and was a British possession, although it was not included within the definition of "colony". The territory comprised in British India was partitioned between the Dominions of India and Pakistan (Indian Independence Act, 1947), but the law relating to the definition of Her Majesty's dominions was not thereby changed, and it was continued in being by the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949 (12, 13 and 14 Geo. 6 c. 92), passed in contemplation of the adoption of a republican constitution by India. India is now a sovereign republic, but that by itself does not render the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, inapplicable to India.

If the question were a live question, we would have thought it necessary to refer the case to a larger Bench for considering the true effect of the judgment in *C.G. Menon's case*¹. But by the Extradition Act XXXIV of 1962 the Extradition Act, 1870 and the latter Acts and also the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, have been repealed and the question about extradition by India of fugitive offenders under those Acts will not hereafter arise.

We are not called upon to consider whether in exercise of the power under the Fugitive Offenders Act a Magistrate in India may direct extradition of a fugitive offender from a "British Possession", who has taken refuge in India. It is sufficient to observe that the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong was according to the law applicable in Hong Kong competent to give effect to the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, and the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, had jurisdiction under the Fugitive Offenders Act, and, after holding inquiry, to direct that More be surrendered to India. The order of surrender was valid according to the law in force in Hong Kong, and we are unable to appreciate the grounds on which invalidity can be attributed to the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, for the arrest of More. That the Chief Presidency Magistrate was competent to issue a warrant for the arrest of More against whom there was prima facie evidence to show that he had committed an offence in India is not denied. If the Chief Presidency Magistrate had issued the warrant to the Commissioner of Police and the Commissioner of Police had approached the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, either through the local Government or directly with a view to secure the assistance of the Government of Hong Kong for facilitating extradition of More, no fault can be found. But Gupta, J., and Mukherji, J., thought that the notification issued by the Government of India setting out the procedure to be followed by a Magistrate, where the offender is not in Indian territory and his extradition is to be secured, amounted to an invasion on the authority of the Courts. We do not think that any such affront is intended by issuing the notification. The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, had not been expressly repealed even after 26th January, 1950. It had a limited operation: the other countries of the Commonwealth were apparently willing to honour the international commitments which arose out of the provisions of that Act. But this Court on the view that since India had become a Republic, held that the Fugitive Offenders Act could not be enforced in this country, that decision presented to the Government of India a problem which had to be resolved by devising machinery for securing the presence of a offenders who were fugitives from justice. The notification issued was only in the nature of advice about the procedure to be followed and did not in any manner seek to impose any executive will upon the Courts in matters judicial. Observations made by Mukherji, J., that the notification issued by the Central Government authorising the Chief Presidency Magistrate to issue the warrant in the manner he had done, came "nowhere near the law" and "to a Court of law it is waste paper beneath its notice" appear to proceed upon an incorrect view of the object of the notification.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate had the power to issue the warrant for the arrest of More, because there was prima facie evidence before him that More had committed certain offences which he was competent to try. The warrant was in Form II of Schedule V of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the warrant was to be successfully executed against More who was not in India, assistance of the executive Government had to be obtained. It is not an invasion upon the authority of the Courts when they are informed that certain procedure may be followed for obtaining the assistance of the executive Department of the State in securing through diplomatic channels extradition of fugitive offenders. In pursuance of that warrant, on the endorsement made by the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, More was arrested. The warrant was issued with the knowledge that it could not be enforced within India and undoubtedly to secure the extradition of More. Pursuant to the warrant the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, moved through diplomatic channels, and persuaded the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong to arrest and deliver More. Issue of the warrant and the procedure followed in transmitting the warrant were not illegal, not even irregular.

One more argument remains to be noticed. It is true that under the Extradition Act XXXIV of 1962 no notification has been issued including Hong Kong in the list of the Commonwealth countries from which extradition of fugitives from justice may be secured. The provisions of the Extradition Act, 1962, cannot be availed of for securing the presence of More for trial in India. But that did not, in our judgment, operate as a bar to the requisition made by the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, if they were able to persuade the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong, to deliver More for trial in this country. If the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong was willing to hand over More for trial in this country, it cannot be said that the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate for the arrest of More with the aid of which requisition for securing his presence from Hong Kong was to be made, was illegal.

We are unable to agree with the High Court that because of the enactment of the Extradition Act XXXIV of 1962 the Government of India is prohibited from securing through diplomatic channels the extradition of an offender for trial of an offence committed within India. There was, in our judgment no illegality committed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, in sending the warrant to the Secretary, Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal, for transmission to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, for taking further steps for securing the presence of More in India to undergo trial.

The appeal must therefore be allowed and the order passed by the High Court set aside. The writ petition filed by More must be dismissed.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras

.. Respondent.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), sections 16 (3) (a) (ii), 22 (2), 22 (5), 34 (1) (a), 34 (1) (b) and 40—Return of income—Individual—Partnership particulars—Non-disclosure of share incomes of wife and minor children—Whether amounts to failure to disclose “necessary” information—Validity of reassessment beyond four years—Inclusion of share incomes of wife and minor children—Duty of the Income-tax Officer—No obligation on the taxpayer—Minor—Separate assessment on minor—Whether bars inclusion of minor’s share income in father’s assessment.

The assessee was a partner in a firm to the benefits of which his three minor sons had been admitted. For the assessment years 1952-53, 1953-54 and 1954-55 the assessee returned, among other income, his share income from the firm. The assessee, however, omitted to disclose in his returns the share incomes of his three minor sons. In Part III of the Form of Return the assessee disclosed the shares of the other partners and the minors in the firm, but did not disclose the relationship of the minors as his sons. The Income-tax Officer initially made assessments, merely on the basis of the assessee’s returns for the three years in question. The minors represented by their mother as guardian had also filed with the same Income-tax Officer their individual returns disclosing their respective share incomes from the firm for the same three assessment years. The Income-tax Officer, acting on these returns, made separate assessments on the minors.

Later, however, the Officer initiated proceedings against the assessee under section 34 (1) (a) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 for the assessment years 1952-53 and 1953-54 and under section 34 (1) (b) for the assessment year 1954-55, on the score that the minors’ share incomes which had to be included in the assessee’s total income under section 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Act had escaped assessment. The Officer held that the information furnished by the assessee in his returns was not full in the sense that he had not stated that the minors were his sons, which information came to the Officer’s possession only later. The Officer accordingly, made reassessments including the minors’ share incomes in the assessee’s total income for all the three years.

The assessee appealed against the assessments on two grounds: (i) that the reassessments under section 34 were not valid and (ii) that the direct assessments already made on the minors precluded the clubbing of their share incomes in the hands of the assessee under section 16 (3) (a) (ii). Both the contentions were rejected in appeal. The Tribunal held that section 34 (1) (a) was properly invoked for 1952-53 and 1953-54 and the reassessment under section 34 (1) (b) was made on information received. On a case stated by the Tribunal at the assessee’s instance, the High Court answered both the questions against the assessee. On further appeal to the Supreme Court, Held, that the notice of reassessment for 1954-55 under section 34 (1) (b) of the Income-tax Act, 1922 was competently issued by the Income-tax Officer against the assessee and there was no basis for the argument that the Officer had only changed the opinion in reopening the assessment.

As for 1952-53 and 1953-54, the re-assessments made under section 34 (1) (a) was not valid in law.

The assessee is bound to disclose under section 22 (5) the names and addresses of his partners, if any, engaged in business, profession or vocation, together with the location and style of the principal place and branches thereof and the extent of the shares of all such partners in the profits of the business, profession or vocation and any branches thereof. But the assessee was not required, in making the return, to disclose that any income was received by his wife or minor child admitted to the benefits of partnership of a firm of which he was a partner.

Assuming that there were instructions in the Forms of Return in the relevant years instructing the assessee to disclose the income received by his wife and minor children from a firm of which the assessee was a partner, in the absence of any head under which the income of the wife or minor children could be shown, by not showing that income the taxpayer cannot be deemed to have failed or omitted to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment.

Section 16 (3) imposes an obligation upon the Income-tax Officer to compute the total income of any individual for the purpose of assessment by including the items of income set out in clauses (a) (i) to (iv) and (b), but thereby no obligation is imposed upon the taxpayer to disclose the income liable to be included in his assessment under section 16 (3).

Section 34 (1) (a) sets out the conditions in which the power may be exercised by the Income-tax Officer; it did not give rise to an obligation on the part of the taxpayer to disclose information which enabled the Income-tax Officer to exercise the power under section 16 (3) (a) (ii).

Also held: that the inclusion of the share income of the minor in the hands of the assessee by invoking section 16 (3) of the Act is valid in law notwithstanding that an assessment is made on the minor represented by his guardian.

Appeals from the Judgment and Order, dated the 21st August, 1964, of the Madras High Court in T.C. No. 75 of 1962 (Reference No. 50 of 1962)*.

M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate (T. A. Ramachandran, Advocate, with him), for Appellant (In all the Appeals).

S.K. Aiyar and B.D. Sharma, Advocates, for Respondent (In all the Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—Ramanathan Chettiar, his son Muthiah Chettiar—called hereinafter for the sake of brevity, Muthiah—and Ramanathan, Annamalai and Alagappan, sons of Muthiah, constituted a Hindu undivided family. The family owned a 3/5th share in M.R.M.S. Firm, Seramban in Malaya. The firm was assessed under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, in the status of a firm resident within the taxable territories. On 16th September, 1950, Muthiah separated from the family taking his 1/5th share in the M.R.M.S. Firm. On 13th April, 1951 the status of the family became completely disrupted and the three sons of Muthiah took in equal shares the remaining 2/5th share—the grandfather Ramanathan taking no share in the M. R.M.S. Firm.

For the assessment year 1952-53 Muthiah submitted a return of his income as an individual and stated under the head business income “Kindly ascertain his (assessee’s) share of profit and remittances from the Income-tax Officer, Second Additional Circle—I, Karaigudi, in F. No. 6098-m/1952-53.” In Part III of the return Muthiah supplied the following information about his partners :

Name and address of the firm.	Name of each partner including assessee.	Share.
Messrs. R. RM. S. Firm Seramban, F.M.S.	1. Assessee (Muthiah Chettiar)	60/303
	2. VD. M. RM. M. RM.M. Ramanathan Chettiar (minor)	40/303
	3. VD. M. RM. M. RM. M. Alagappan Chettiar (minor).	40/303
	4. VD. M. RM. M. RM. M. Annamalai Chettiar (minor).	40/303
	5. C.P.R.	60/303
	6. M.S.S.	60/303
	7. Charity.	3/303.

For the assessment year 1953-54 in column 3 in section B of the return Muthiah stated: "Kindly ascertain the remittances from the Income-tax Officer, Fifth Additional, Karaikudi in F. No. 6098-m." and at page 3 of the return in column 3 of section F, it was stated:

"Assessee has 60/303 share in Messrs. R. RM. S. Joint Seramban (Malaya). Kindly ascertain share of profit or loss from the Income-tax Officer, Fifth Additional, Karaikudi in F. No. 6098."

In Part III of the return he set out the names of the partners as were mentioned in the return for 1952-53. Against the names of Ramanathan Chettiar, Alagappan Chettiar and Annamalai Chettiar it was not disclosed that they were minors.

For the assessment year 1954-55 at the foot of page 1 of the return Muthiah stated:

"The assessee has a remittance of Rs. 6,188-12-0, from R. RM. S. Firm. Seramban. His share of income may be taken from the firm's file."

and in Part III the names of seven partners as mentioned in 1952-53 return were set out—Ramanathan, Alagappan, Annamalai were not shown as minors.

Ramanathan, Alagappan and Annamalai—the three minor sons of Muthiah represented by their mother and guardian also filed returns of their respective income for the years 1952-53, 1953-54 and 1954-55 and disclosed therein their shares in the profit from the 2/5th share in the M. RM.S. Firm.

For the assessment years 1952-53, 1953-54, and 1954-55 the Income-tax Officer completed the assessments separately on the firm, on Muthiah as an individual and on the three minors represented by their mother and guardian. Muthiah was assessed in respect of his share in the income of the firm and from other sources. In his returns Muthiah had not disclosed the shares received by his minor sons and the Income-tax Officer did not in making the assessments include shares of the minors from the firm under section 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. The Income-tax Officer issued notices of re-assessment to Muthiah under section 34 (1) (a) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, for the years, 1952-53 and 1953-54 and under section 34 (1) (b) for the year 1954-55. Muthiah filed returns under protest declaring the same income as originally assessed. In the view of the Income-tax Officer, Muthiah had not furnished in Part III, clause (c) of the return full facts regarding the other parties and in column 2 he had merely disclosed that Ramanathan, Alagappan and Annamalai were minors: that "information was not full in the sense that he had not stated that they were minor sons" of Muthiah. Accordingly the Income-tax Officer held that the income of the sons of Muthiah which should have been included under section 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Income-tax Act had escaped assessment in Muthiah's hands and he brought that income to tax.

The Appellate Assistant Commissioner confirmed the order made by the Income-tax Officer. In appeal to the Tribunal it was contended by Muthiah that he had fully and truly disclosed all the particulars he was required to disclose in the returns of his income for the three years in question, and "section 34 (1) (a) had no application to the assessment years 1952-53 and 1953-54 and for 1954-55 the re-opening was based only on a change of opinion." Muthiah also contended that section 40 of the Income-tax Act was mandatory and since the Income-tax Officer had made separate assessments on the minors represented by their mother, no further assessment under section 16 (3) could be made, the two sections being mutually exclusive.

The Tribunal observed that for the first two years section 34 (1) (a) applied, that in respect of the year 1954-55 there was no change of opinion but the assessment was made on information received within the meaning of section 34 (1) (b) of the Income-tax Act and that separate assessment of the minors did not stop the Income-tax Officer from assessing the income received by the minor sons in the hands of Muthiah. The Appellate Tribunal accordingly confirmed the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner.

At the instance of Muthiah the following questions were referred to the High Court of Madras:

"(i) Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the re-assessment made on the assessee under section 34 of the Act is valid in law for 1952-53 to 1954-55 ?

(ii) Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the inclusion of the share income of the minor in the hands of the assessee by invoking the provisions of section 16 (3) of the Act is valid in law notwithstanding that an assessment is made on the minor represented by his guardian."

The answer to the second question must, in view of the recent judgment of this Court in *C. R. Nagappa v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Mysore*¹, be in the affirmative.

In considering the first question it is necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Income-tax Act, 1922. By section 3 the total income of the previous year of every individual, Hindu undivided family, company and local authority, and of every firm and other association of persons or the partners of the firm or the members of the association individually was charged to tax for that year in accordance with, and subject to the provisions of the Act at any rate or rates prescribed by the Finance Act. "Total income" was defined in section 2 (15) as meaning "total amount of income, profits and gains referred to in sub-section (1) of section 4 computed in the manner laid down in this Act." Section 4 (1) set out the method of computation of total income ; it enacted :

"(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the total income of any previous year of any person includes all income, profits and gains from whatever source derived which—

(a) are received or are deemed to be received in the taxable territories in such year by or on behalf of such person, or

(b) if such person is resident in the taxable territories during such year,—

(i) accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to him in the taxable territories during such year, or

Section 22 by sub-section (1) required the Income-tax Officer to give notice by publication in the press in the prescribed manner, requiring every person whose total income during the previous year exceeds the maximum exempt from tax, to furnish a return in the prescribed form setting forth his total income. Sub-section (2) authorised the Income-tax Officer to serve a notice upon a person whose income in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer exceeded the minimum free from tax. Section 23 dealt with the assessment. It conferred power upon the Income-tax Officer to assess the total income of the assessee and to determine the sum payable by him on the basis of such return, submitted by him. Rule 19 framed under section 59 of the Income-tax Act, 1922, required the assessee to make a return in the form prescribed thereunder, and in Form A applicable to an individual or a Hindu undivided family or an association of persons there was no clause which required disclosure of income of any person other than the income of the assessee, which was liable to be included in his total income. The Act and the Rules accordingly imposed no obligation upon the assessee to disclose to the Income-tax Officer in his return information relating to income of any other person by law taxable in his hands.

But section 16, sub-section (3) provided that in computing the total income of any individual for the purpose of assessment there shall be included the classes of income mentioned in clauses (a) and (b). Sub-section (3) (a) (ii) in so far as it is material, provided:

"In computing the total income of any individual for the purpose of assessment, there shall be included—

(a) so much of the income of a wife or minor child of such individual as arises directly or indirectly—

(i) * * * *

(ii) from the admission of the minor to the benefits of partnership in a firm of which such individual is a partner."

The assessee was bound to disclose under section 22 (5) the names and addresses of his partners, if any, engaged in business, profession or vocation together with location and style of the principal place and branches thereof and the extent shares of all such partners in the profits of the business, profession or vocation and any branches thereof, but the assessee was not required, in making a return to disclose that any income was received by his wife or minor child admitted to the benefits of partnership of a firm of which he was a partner.

Counsel for the Commissioner contended that in the forms of returns prescribed in the "Notes of Guidance" for drawing up the return were printed, and thereby the assessee was informed that he had to disclose the income received by his wife and minor children from a firm of which the assessee was a partner. Counsel has however not placed before the Court the forms of return in vogue in the relevant year of assessment. In the Income-tax Manual published under the authority of the Central Government in 1945 under clause (3) printed at page 185 the assessee is advised to include in the return, under the appropriate head, certain classes of income which are liable to be included in the assessment of an individual under section 16, and income liable to be taxed under sections 41-D, 44-E and 44-F. This instruction was repeated in the Manual Parts II and III at pages 344 and 345 in the 10th Edition published in 1950. But in the 11th Edition of the Manual published in 1954 no such instructions were printed. About the date on which the instructions were deleted Counsel for the Commissioner was unable to give any information. Assuming that there were instructions printed in the Forms of return in the relevant years, in the absence of any head under which the income of the wife or minor child of a partner whose wife or a minor child was a partner in the same firm, could be shown, by not showing that income the taxpayer cannot be deemed to have failed or omitted to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment. Section 16 (3) imposes an obligation upon the Income-tax Officer to compute the total income of any individual for the purpose of assessment by including the items of income set out in clauses (a) (i) to (iv) and (b), but thereby no obligation is imposed upon the taxpayer to disclose the income liable to be included in his assessment under section 16 (3). For failing or omitting to disclose that income, proceedings for reassessment cannot therefore be commenced under section 34 (1) (a). Section 22 (5) required the assessee to furnish particulars of the names and shares of his partners, but imposed no obligation to mention or set out the income of the nature mentioned in section 16 (3). In the relevant years there was no head in the form under which income liable to be assessed to tax under section 16 (3) (a) and (b) could be disclosed.

We are in the circumstances unable to agree with the High Court that section 34 imposed an obligation upon the assessee to disclose all income includible in his assessment by reason of section 16 (3) (a) (ii). Section 34 (1) (a) sets out the conditions in which the power may be exercised; it did not give rise to an obligation to disclose information which enabled the income-tax Officer to exercise the power under section 16 (3) (a) (ii), nor had the use of the expression "necessary for his assessment" in section 34 (1) (a) that effect.

The High Court did not consider the question whether in the year 1954-55 the notice under section 34 (1) (b) was properly issued against Muthiah. The Tribunal in their Judgment observed:

"There is no basis for the argument that the Income-tax Officer had only changed his opinion and re-opened the assessment."

We agree with that view. The order of re-assessment was made well within four years from the date of the last day of the year of assessment 1954-55. The notice was therefore competently issued by the Income-tax Officer.

The order passed by the High Court, insofar as it relates to the years 1952-53 and 1953-54 is set aside and the answer in the negative is recorded. For the year 1954-55 the answer recorded by the High Court is confirmed. There will be no order as to costs throughout.

V.B.

Ordered accordingly.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Commissioner of Income-tax, West Bengal I, and another ... *Appellants

Allahabad Bank Ltd. ... Respondent.

Company—Super-tax—Rebate under Finance Acts of years 1956 and 1957—Reduction of rebate on distribution of dividend over six per cent. of paid up capital—Computation of paid-up capital—Share premiums received to be included—Separate share premium account need not be maintained—But must be identifiable as such.

Finance Acts, 1956 and 1957—Paragraph D of Part II, First Schedule.

Companies Act, 1956 (Central Act I of 1956), section 78.

In proceedings for assessment for each of the assessment years 1956-57 and 1957-58 the Income-tax Officer reduced the rebate in super-tax admissible under the Finance Acts of 1956 and 1957 on the view that the assessee had distributed dividend exceeding 6 per cent. of the paid up capital. In reducing the rebate the officer did not take into consideration the share premium received by the assessee. The Appellate Commissioner and the Tribunal held that the assessee's share premium was liable to be added to the paid-up capital in computing the reduction in the rebate in super tax. The High Court in reference agreed with the Tribunal. The Revenue appealed.

Held, that the amount of share premium received should be added to the paid-up capital of the assessee for the purpose of computing reduction in rebate to the super tax under the Finance Acts of 1956 and 1957.

The Explanation to paragraph D Part II of the Finance Act, 1957 does not require that the share premium account must be maintained as an account outside the reserves. Under the Companies Act of 1956 there is an express provision that the share premium account shall be maintained in a separate account. It is true that in the balance-sheet in Schedule VI of the Act the share premium has to be shown under the head "liabilities" as part of the share capital and not of reserves. But it cannot be assumed on that account that if the share premium is maintained as a separate account within the reserves, reduction in the rebate in super-tax is liable to be computed after excluding share premium. The Explanation does not make maintenance of an account outside the reserve a condition of its inclusion in the paid-up capital.

If under the Finance Act, 1956, the expression "standing to the credit of the share premium account" did not mean that the share premiums shall be maintained in a separate account apart from the reserve, there is no reason why, under an identical scheme of reducing rebate in super-tax in the year 1957-58, it should have a different meaning.

The object of the Parliament in enacting Paragraph D of the Finance Act was that profits earned by a company should be available for being ploughed back into the business and should not be distributed to the shareholders by way of dividend in excess of the rate prescribed. To secure that object the Parliament gave an incentive to the company of substantial rebate in payment of super-tax which would be liable to be forfeited if part of dividend exceeding 6 per cent. was distributed to the shareholders.

Share premium account is accordingly liable to be included in the paid-up capital for the purpose of computing rebate if it is maintained as a separate account. The Explanation does not contemplate that the account must be kept apart from the reserves. If within the reserves it is an identifiable separate account, the share premium will qualify for inclusion in the paid-up capital in computing the reduction in rebate of super-tax.

The Companies Act came into force on 1st April, 1956; it had no retrospective operation. Since there was no obligation upon the company to maintain a separate share premium account in the previous year corresponding to the assessment year 1956-57, the share premium account maintained as an identifiable account within the reserves qualified for being included in the 'paid up capital' within the meaning of this expression in the Explanation to Paragraph D Part II of the Finance Act, 1956.

Appeals from the Judgments and Orders, dated the 17th December, 1963 and 6th April, 1965, of the Calcutta High Court in Income-tax References Nos. 87 of 1960 and 30 of 1962 respectively.

S. T. Desai and S. C. Manchanda, Senior Advocates, (B. D. Sharma, Advocate, with them), for Appellants (In both the Appeals).

Sachin Choudhuri and Sukumar Mitra, Senior Advocates, (D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, with them), for Respondent (In both the Appeals.)

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—The Allahabad Bank Ltd. is a public limited company. The paid up share capital of the company other than capital entitled to a dividend at a fixed rate was at the relevant time Rs. 30,50,000. The company had issued before 1st January, 1954, shares at premium and the premium received in cash aggregated to Rs. 45,50,000. In each of the account years 1955 and 1956 the company distributed Rs. 5,49,000 as dividend.

In proceedings for assessment for each of the assessment years 1956-57 and 1957-58 the Income-tax Officer reduced by Rs. 61,000 the rebate in super-tax admissible under the Finance Act, 1956 on the view that the company had distributed dividend exceeding 6 per cent. of its paid-up capital. In reducing the rebate the Income-tax Officer did not take into consideration share premium amounting to Rs. 45,50,000 received by the company.

The Appellate Assistant Commissioner held that the company's share premium was liable to be added to the capital of Rs. 30,50,000 in computing the reduction in the rebate in super-tax, and directed modification of the order of assessment. The Appellate Tribunal agreed with the Appellate Assistant Commissioner.

The Tribunal then submitted a statement of the case and submitted the following question in respect of the year 1956-57 to the High Court of Calcutta :

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the amount of Rs. 45,50,000 should be added to the paid-up capital of the assessee as on 1st January, 1955, for the purpose of allowing rebate to the assessee under Paragraph D of Part II of the First Schedule to the Indian Finance Act 1956."

A similar question relating to the assessment year 1957-58 was also referred by the Tribunal. The High Court of Calcutta agreed with the Tribunal and held that in determining the reduction in rebate in super-tax admissible to the company the share premium maintained by the company within the reserve was liable to be included in the paid-up capital.

The Finance Act, 1956 prescribed the rate of super-tax in Part II, paragraph D (in so far as it is relevant) enacted:

"In the case of every company—

	Rate
On the whole of total income.	Six annas and nine pies in the rupee :

Provided that—

(i) a rebate at the rate of five annas per rupee of the total income shall be allowed in the case of any company which—

(a) in respect of its profits liable to tax under the Income-tax Act for the year ending on the 31st March, 1957, has made the prescribed arrangements for the declaration and payment within the territory of India of the dividends payable out of such profits and for the deductions of super-tax from dividends in accordance with the provisions of such-section (3-D) of section 18 of that Act and

(b) * * * * *

(ii) a rebate at the rate of four annas per rupee of the total income shall be allowed in the case of any company which satisfied condition (a) but not condition (b) of the preceding clause ;

Provided further that—

(i) the amount of the rebate under clause (i) or * * * of the preceding proviso shall be reduced by the sum, if any, equal to the amount or the aggregate of the amounts as the case may be, computed as hereunder :—

(a) * * * *

(b) in addition, in the case of a company referred to in clause (ii) of the preceding proviso which has distributed to its shareholders during the previous year dividends in excess of six per cent. of its paid-up capital, not being dividends payable at a fixed rate—

on that part of the said dividends which exceeds 6 per cent but does not exceed 10 per cent. of the paid-up capital ; at the rate of two annas per rupee on that part of the said dividends which exceeds 10 per cent of the paid-up capital ; at the rate of three annas per rupee ;

(ii) * * * *

Provided further that

*Explanation :—*For the purposes of Paragraph D of this Part—

(i) the expression 'paid-up capital' means the paid-up capital (other than capital entitled to a dividend at a fixed rate) of the company as on the first day of the previous year relevant to the assessment for the year ending on 31st day of March, 1957, increased by any premiums received in cash by the company on the issue of its shares, standing to the credit of the share premium account as on the first day of the previous year

In the Finance Act of 1957 also a similar scheme of granting rebate of super-tax and reduction therein the condition set out in the Act, was adopted.

The reduction in rebate in super-tax depended upon the proportion which the dividend distributed bore to the paid up capital. If the company distributed dividends exceeding 6 per cent. of its paid up capital as defined in the Explanation, the rebate was liable to be reduced to the extent provided in the second proviso. In the relevant years of account the share premium formed an identifiable part of the reserves of the company but was not shown in a separate share premium account apart from the reserves.

The Commissioner contends :

(1) that the expression "share premium account" in the definition of "paid-up capital" in the Explanation to Paragraph D of Part II of the Finance Acts 1956 and 1957 means an account apart from the reserves maintained by the company ; and

(2) that in any event since the enactment of the Companies Act, 1956 "share premium" not maintained as a separate account cannot be taken into consideration in dealing with the claim for rebate in the payment of super-tax and reduction in the rate thereof.

Counsel for the Commissioner relied upon section 78 (3) read with section 78 (1) of the Companies Act I of 1956, and submitted that the company was bound to maintain a separate share premium account outside the reserves and transfer into that account the share premium and since the company failed to do so in determining the paid up capital within the meaning of the Explanation to Paragraph D of the Finance Acts 1956 and 1957 the share premium within the reserve could not be taken into account. The relevant clauses of section 78 of the Companies Act I of 1956 provide:—

"(1) Where a company issues shares at a premium, whether for cash or otherwise, a sum equal to the aggregate amount or value of the premiums on those shares shall be transferred to an account, to be called 'the share premium account' and the provisions of this Act relating to the reduction of the share capital of a company shall, except as provided in this section, apply as if share premium account were paid-up share capital of the company.

(3) Where a company has passed a resolution authorising the issue of any shares at a premium this section shall apply as if the shares had been issued after the commencement of this Act :

Provided that any part of the premiums which has been so applied that it does not at the commencement of this Act form an identifiable part of the company's reserves within the meaning of Schedule VI, shall be disregarded in determining the sum to be included in the share premium account."

Clause (1) is in terms prospective : it requires a company to transfer premiums received in cash or otherwise on shares to the share premium account. By clause (3) any premium received prior to the coming into force of the Companies Act, 1956 less that part of the premium which had been so applied so that it did not, at the commencement of the Act, form an identifiable part of the company's reserves, had also to be transferred to the share premium account as if the shares had been issued after the commencement of the Act. Section 78 was apparently borrowed from section 56 of the English Companies 1948 (11 and 12 Geo. 6 ch. 38). Before the Companies Act I of 1956 there was no provision in the Indian Companies Act, 1913 which required a company to maintain a separate share premium account. After the coming into force of the Companies Act I of 1956 a share premium account had to be maintained and the share premium could not be used otherwise than for the specific purposes mentioned in section 78 (2).

The plea raised by the Commissioner that the company failed to comply with the statutory injunction contained in clause (1) of section 78 and on that account the premiums received were not "standing to the credit of the share premium account" within the meaning of the Explanation to Paragraph D in the Finance Act, 1956, may be rejected on a simple ground.

In the assessment year 1956-57 the company was being assessed to tax in respect of the previous year of the company ending on 31st December, 1955. In the calendar year 1955, the company was governed by the Indian Companies Act VII of 1913 which contained no provision analogous to section 78 of the Companies Act I of 1956. The Companies Act was before the Parliament during the year 1955, but the company was on that account not obliged to transfer to a separate share premium account independent of the reserve the premiums received prior to 1st January, 1955. The Companies Act came into force on 1st April, 1956 : it had no retrospective operation. Since there was no obligation upon the company to maintain a separate share premium account in the previous year corresponding to the assessment year 1956-57, the share premium account maintained as an identifiable account within the reserves qualified for being included in the paid up capital within the meaning of this expression in the Explanation to Paragraph D Part II of the Finance Act, 1956.

For the assessment year 1956-57, therefore rebate in super-tax was liable to be reduced, if the company had distributed dividend exceeding six per cent of the paid-up capital inclusive of share premiums maintained as an identifiable account. The contention raised by the Commissioner must therefore fail in respect of the assessment year 1956-57.

Counsel for the Commissioner contends that in any event in the Finance Act II of 1957 the expression "share premium account" has only the meaning ascribed thereto in the Companies Act, 1956, and in respect of the assessment year 1957-58, reduction in the rebate must be computed without taking into account the share premium which was maintained by the company, in the year of account 1956 within the reserve.

Under the Finance Act II of 1957 rebate in super-tax is liable to be reduced in the case of companies which have inter alia, distributed to the shareholders in the previous year dividends in excess of 6 per cent. of the paid up capital not being dividend payable at a fixed rate. The expression "paid up capital" is also defined in substantially the same terms as under the Finance Act, 1956.

For the assessment year 1957-58 the Tribunal found that the share premium was liable to be included in the paid up capital because it was an identifiable part of the reserves. In our judgment the Tribunal was right in so holding. The Explanation to Paragraph D Part II of the Finance Act, 1957, does not require that the share premium account must be maintained as an account outside the reserves. Under the Companies Act of 1956 there was an express provision that the share premium account shall be maintained in a separate account. It is true that in the balance-sheet in Schedule VI of the Act the share premium has to be shown under the head "liabilities" as part of the share capital and not of reserves. But it cannot be assumed on that account that if the share premium is maintained as a separate account within the reserves, reduction in the rebate in super tax is liable to be computed after excluding share premium. The Explanation requires that in determining the paid-up capital for the purpose of rebate in super-tax, share premium standing to the credit of a share premium account shall be excluded (included?) : it does not make maintenance of an account outside the reserve a condition of its inclusion in the paid-up capital.

Again if under the Finance Act, 1956, the expression "standing to the credit of the share premium account" did not mean that the share premiums shall be maintained in a separate account apart from the reserve, is there any reason why, under an identical scheme of reducing rebate in super-tax in the year 1957-58, it should have a different meaning? In the absence of any compelling grounds, we would not be justified in holding that the Parliament attributed to the expression "standing to the credit of the share premium account" as used in the Explanation to Paragraph D Part II of the Finance Act II of 1957, a meaning different from the one which it had under the Finance Act, 1956. The object of the Parliament in enacting Paragraph D of the Finance Act was that profits earned by a company should be available for being ploughed back into the business and should not be distributed to the shareholders by way of dividend in excess of the rate prescribed. To secure that object the Parliament gave an incentive to the company of substantial rebate in payment of super-tax which would be liable to be forfeited, if part of dividend exceeding 6 per cent. was distributed to the shareholders.

Share premium account is accordingly liable to be included in the paid up capital for the purpose of computing rebate if it is maintained as a separate account. The Explanation does not contemplate that the account must be kept apart from the reserves. If within the reserves it is an identifiable separate account, the share premium will qualify for inclusion in the paid up capital in computing the reduction in rebate of super-tax.

.. Respondent.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 4 and 54 Registration Act (XVI of 1908), sections 17 and 49—Document requiring registration under section 54—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), not registered—Effect of—Whether admissible in evidence in view of section 49, Registration Act (XVI of 1908).

Exhibit A-26 was required to be registered under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the absence of such registration this document cannot be received in evidence of any transaction affecting the property in view of section 49 of the Registration Act.

The inclusion of the words “by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882” by the amending Act, 1929, settled in doubt entertained as to whether the documents of which the registration was compulsory under the Transfer of Property Act, but not under section 17 of the Registration Act, were affected by section 49 of the Registration Act. In view of section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was previously supposed that the effect of this section was merely to add to the list of documents of which the registration was compulsory and not to include them in section 17 so as to bring them within the scope of section 49.

The enactment of Act (XXI of 1929) by inserting in section 49 of the Registration Act the words “or by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882” has made it clear that the documents in the supplemental list i.e., the documents of which registration is necessary under the Transfer of Property Act, but not under the Registration Act, fall within the scope of section 49 of the Registration Act, and if not registered are not admissible as evidence of any transaction affecting any immovable property comprised therein, and do not affect any such immovable property held on facts, Exhibit A-26, being unregistered is not admissible in evidence and that Exhibit A-4 was a mortgage deed and not a sale-deed.

Appeals by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 27th April, 1964 of the Allahabad High Court in Second Appeals Nos. 1940 and 3660 of 1961.

S. P. Sinha, Senior Advocate (S. Shaukat Hussain, Advocate with him), for the Appellants (In both the Appeals).

J. P. Goyal and G. Nabi Untoo, Advocate for the Respondent (In both the Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Ramaswami, J.—In the suit which is the subject-matter of these appeals the plaintiff alleged that one Dwarka Prasad took a loan of Rs. 1,700 from Madho Ram, father of the defendants, and that on 27th July, 1922, Dwarka Prasad along with one Mst. Kunta, his maternal grandmother, executed a possessory mortgage deed of the disputed house for Rs. 1,700 in favour of Madho Ram. The terms of the mortgage deed were that the mortgagor was to pay interest of Rs. 12-12-0 per month, out of which the rent amounting to Rs. 6 which was the agreed usufruct of the house in suit was to be adjusted and the mortgagor was to pay Rs. 6-12-0, per month in cash towards the balance of the interest. The parties agreed that the mortgage would be redeemable within twenty years after paying the principal amount and that portion of interest which was not discharged by the usufruct and other amounts. When Dwarka Prasad was unable to pay the amount of Rs. 6-12-0 per month, he delivered possession of the house to Madho Ram, who let out the house on a monthly rent of Rs. 25. The mortgagors Dwarka Prasad and Mst. Kunta, died leaving Mst. Radha Bai as Dwarka Prasad's heir. Radha Bai sold the house in dispute to the plaintiff on 2nd February, 1953, and executed a sale-deed. The plaintiff, therefore, became entitled to redeem the mortgage and asked the defendants to render accounts. The defendants contested the suit on the ground that Madho Ram was not the mortgagor nor were the defendants mortgagees. It was alleged that in the locality where the house was situated, there was a custom of paying Hage-chaharum and to avoid that payment, the original deed dated 27th July, 1922, was drafted and executed in the form of a mortgage though it was actually an out-right sale. According to the defendants, the house was actually sold to Madho Ram and was not mortgaged. The defendants also pleaded that if the deed dated 27th July, 1922, was held to be a mortgage, the mortgagees were entitled to get the payment of Rs. 6,442-8-0, as interest, Rs. 2,315, as costs of repairs, etc. The trial Court held that the deed dated 27th July, 1922, was a mortgage deed, that Dwarka Prasad did not sell the house to Madho Ram, and that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of Rs. 1,709-14-0. The trial Court accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit for redemption on payment of Rs. 1,709-14-0. Against the judgment of the trial Court the defendants preferred an appeal before the District Judge, Varanasi, who allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff took the matter in second appeal to the High Court which framed an issue and remanded the case back to the lower appellate Court for a fresh decision. The issue framed by the High Court was "Have the defendants become the owners of the property in dispute by adverse possession?" The High Court also directed the lower appellate Court to decide the question of admissibility of Exhibits A-25 and A-26. After remand the lower appellate Court held that the deed dated 27th July, 1922, was a mortgage deed and not a sale-deed, and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the mortgage. The lower appellate Court further held that the defendants had failed to prove that they had acquired title by adverse possession. The lower appellate Court made the following order;—

"The appeal is allowed with half costs in this way that the suit is decreed for the redemption of the mortgage in question if the plaintiff pays within six months Rs. 1,700 as principal, Rs. 9,87nP. Prajawat paid before this suit and any Prajawat paid by the defendants during the pendency of this suit till the plaintiff deposits the entire sum due under this decree and the interest at the rate of Rs. 6-12-0, per month from 27th July, 1922, till the plaintiff deposits the entire sum due under this decree. The costs of the trial Court are made easy. Let the preliminary decree under Order 34, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, be modified accordingly."

Against the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court both the plaintiff and the defendants filed appeals before the High Court. The plaintiff prayed that the decree of the lower appellate Court should be set aside and the decree of the trial Court should be restored. The defendants, on the other hand, prayed that the decree of the lower Courts should be set aside and the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed with costs. By its judgment dated 27th April, 1964, the High Court dismissed the second appeal preferred by the defendants but allowed the plaintiff's appeal and set aside the judgment of the lower appellate Court and restored the judgment of the trial Court. The High Court further remanded the case to the lower appellate Court with the direction that "the defendants be asked to render accounts before they claim any payment from the plaintiff at the time of redemption of the mortgage." The present appeals are brought by Special Leave against the judgment of the Allahabad High Court dated 27th April, 1964, in Second Appeals Nos. 4940 and 3660 of 1961.

In support of these appeals it was contended by Mr. Sinha that the deed Exhibit 4, dated 27th July, 1922 was a sale deed and not a mortgage deed. It was pointed out that there was a subsequent deed of sale dated 8th October, 1922 Exhibit A-26 which is named 'Tilumma Bainama.' The contention was that the document Exhibit 4 dated 27th July, 1922 must be construed along with Exhibit A-26 which forms part of the same transaction and so construed the transaction was not a usufructuary mortgage but was an outright sale. We are unable to accept the argument put forward on behalf of the appellant. Exhibit A-26, dated 8th October, 1922 is not a registered document, and is hence not admissible in evidence to prove the nature of the transaction covered by the registered mortgage deed Exhibit 4, dated 27th July, 1922. If Exhibit 4 is taken by itself, there is no doubt that the transaction is one of mortgage. The document Exhibit 4 recites that in consideration of money advanced the executants "mortgage the said house 'Bhog Bhandak' bearing No. 64/71 situate in Mohalla Gola Dina Nath." Clause 2 provides a period of twenty years for redemption of the mortgage. Clause 6 of the document stipulates that the cost of repairs will be borne by the mortgagors. Clause 1 states:

"That the said sum of Rupees seventeen hundred half of which is Rupees eight hundred and fifty will carry interest at the rate of twelve annas per cent monthly. The sum of Rupees six will be deducted towards rent monthly from the interest which will accrue. The possession of the house has been delivered to the said mortgagee Mahajan (money-lender). The mortgagors will pay the balance of Rupees six annas twelve month by month to the said mortgagee after deducting the rent of Rupees six after giving the possession of the said house and shop."

Clause 4 provides:

"That we will go on paying the said Mahajan the sum of Rupees six twelve annas the balance of the interest monthly. If the whole or part of the interest remains unpaid we will pay at the time of redemption. If this amount of interest is not paid the said house shall not be redeemed."

The reading of these terms clearly show that Exhibit 4 was a mortgage deed and not a sale deed. It was contended on behalf of the appellants that in order to avoid the payment of Haqe-chaharum, the original deed, dated 27th July, 1922 was drafted and executed in the form of a mortgage but it was actually meant to be an outright sale. In support of this argument reference was made to Exhibit A-26, dated 8th October, 1922. As we have already said Exhibit A-26 was required to be registered under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the absence of such registration this document cannot be received in evidence of any transaction affecting the property in view of section 49 of the Registration Act. It was, however, urged on behalf of the appellants that the effect of section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act was not to make section 49 of the Registration Act applicable to documents which are compulsorily registrable by the provisions of section 54, paragraph 2 of the Transfer of Property Act. In support of this contention reliance was placed on the decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in *Sohan Lal and others v. Mohan Lal and others*¹.

Section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act states:

"The chapters and sections of this Act which relate to contracts shall be taken as part of the Indian Registration Act, 1872.

And section 54, paragraphs 2 and 3, 59, 107 and 123 shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1908."

Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act reads:

"Sale' is a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part-paid and part-promised.

1. (1928) I.L.R. 50 All. 986 (F.B.).

Such transfer, in the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, or in the case of a reversion or other intangible thing, can be made only by a registered instrument.

In the case of tangible immoveable property, of a value less than one hundred rupees, such transfer may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property."

Section 17 of the Registration Act states:

"17. (1) The following documents shall be registered if the property to which they relate is situate in a district in which, and if they have been executed on or after the date on which, Act No. XVI of 1864 or the Indian Registration Act, 1866 or the Indian Registration Act, 1871, or the Indian Registration Act, 1877, or this Act came or comes into force, namely :

(a) instruments of gift of immoveable property;

(b) other non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immoveable property.

(c) non-testamentary instruments which acknowledge the receipt or payment of any consideration on account of the creation, declaration, assignment, limitation or extinction of any such right, title or interest; and

(d) leases of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent;

(e) non-testamentary instruments transferring or assigning any decree or order of a Court or any award when such decree or order or award purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immoveable property."

Section 49 of the Registration Act prior to its amendment in 1929 read:

"No document required by section 17 to be registered shall—

(a) affect any immoveable property comprised therein, or

(b) confer any power to adopt, or

By section 10 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, section 49 was amended as follows :—

"No document required by section 17 or by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 to be registered shall—

(a) affect any immoveable property comprised therein, or

(b) confer any power to adopt, or

(c) be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property or conferring such power unless it has been registered.

Provided that an unregistered document affecting immoveable property and required by this Act or the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, to be registered may be received as evidence of a contract in a suit for specific performance under Chapter II of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, or as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, or as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be effected by registered instrument."

The inclusion of the words "by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882" by the Amending Act, 1929 settled the doubt entertained as to whether the documents of which the registration was compulsory under the Transfer of Property Act, but not under section 17 of the Registration Act were affected by section 49 of the Registration Act. Section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act enacts that "section 54, paragraphs 2 and 3, 59, 107 and 123 shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1908." It was previously supposed that the effect of this section was merely to add to the list of documents of which the registration was compulsory and not to include them in section 17 so as to bring them within the scope of section 49. This was the view taken by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in *Sohan Lal's case*¹. The same view was expressed in a Madras Case *Rama Sahu v. Gowro Ratho*², and by MacLeod, C.J., in a Bombay case *Dawal v. Dharma*³. We are however absolved in the present case from examining the correctness of these decisions. For these decisions have been superseded by subsequent legislation i.e., by the enactment of Act XXI of 1929 which by inserting in section 49 of the Registration Act the words "or by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882" had made it clear that the documents in the supplemental list i.e., the documents of which registration is necessary under the Transfer of Property Act but not under the Registration Act fall within the scope of section 49 of the Registration Act and if not registered are not admissible as evidence of any transaction affecting any immoveable property comprised therein, and do not affect any such immoveable property. We are accordingly of the opinion that Exhibit A-26 being unregistered is not admissible in evidence. In our opinion, Mr. Sinha is unable to make good his argument on this aspect of the case.

Mr. Sinha contended that in any event the High Court should not have remanded the case to the lower appellate Court with a direction that the defendants should be asked to render accounts before they claim any payment from the plaintiff at the time of redemption of the mortgage. It was pointed out that the plaintiff did not file an appeal against the decree of the trial Court and in the absence of such an appeal the High Court was not legally justified in giving further relief to the plaintiff than that granted by the trial Court. In our opinion, there is justification for this argument. We accordingly set aside that portion of the decree of the High Court remanding the case to the lower appellate Court with a direction that the defendants should be asked to render accounts. Otherwise we affirm the decree of the High Court allowing the plaintiff's appeal with costs and setting aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and restoring judgment and decree of the trial Court, dated 31st October, 1956.

Subject to this modification we dismiss these appeals. There will be no order as to costs in this Court.

S.V.J.

Order accordingly.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI AND A.N. GROVER, JJ.

Ganesh Prasad Dixit

v.

The Commissioner of Sales Tax, Madhya Pradesh

... Respondent.

Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Act (II of 1959), section 18 (5) and rule 33 of the Rules, 1959—Terms of Rule 33 not mandatory—Notice, not giving a clear Period of 15 days to show cause—No suggestion of prejudice on account of insufficiency of time—Notice not invalid.

Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Act (II of 1959), section 2 (d) and section 7—‘Registered dealer’, a firm of building contractors—Purchase of building materials—Liability to Purchase Tax.

Rule 33 of the Madhya Pradesh General Tax Rules, 1959, is not intended to be “either invariable or rigid”, and “unless prejudice has resulted to the tax payer the proceedings are not liable to be set aside”. The terms of rule 33 are plainly not mandatory (It was not even suggested that because of the insufficiency of time the appellants were unable to submit their explanation for failure to make their returns of turnover). Held, notices served on the appellants, not giving them a clear period of 15 days to show cause, were not invalid.

Merely because, in respect of the periods the appellant’s turnover in respect of sales was assessed as “nil” on that account they did not cease to be registered dealers within the meaning of the Act.

A person to be a dealer within the meaning of the Act need not both purchase and sell goods ; a person who carries on the business of buying is by the express definition of the term in section 2 (d) a dealer.

Where no tax is payable under section 6 on the sale price of the goods, purchase-tax is payable by a dealer who lays taxable goods in the course of his business, and (1) either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods for sale, or (2) consumes such goods otherwise; or (3) disposes of such goods in any manner other than by way of sale in the State, or (4) despatches them to a place outside the State except as a direct result of sale or purchase in the course of inter-State trade or commerce. The assessee is registered as dealer and they have purchased building materials in the course of their business : the building materials are taxable under the Act, and the appellants have consumed the materials otherwise than in the manufacture of goods for sale and for profit-motive. Held, on plain words of section 7 the purchase price is taxable.

The integration that the price paid for buying goods consumed in the manufacture of other goods, intended to be sold or otherwise disposed of, alone is taxable is not a reasonable interpretation of the expression “either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods for sale or otherwise”. It is intended by the Legislature that consumption of goods renders the price paid for their purchase taxable, if the goods are used in the manufacture of other goods for sale or if the goods are consumed otherwise.

Whether in a particular set of circumstances a person may be said to carrying on business in a commodity must depend upon the facts of that case and no general test may be applied for determining that question.

Appeals by Special Leave from the Judgments and Orders, dated the 31st August, 1965 of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in Misc. Civil Cases Nos. 321 and 331 of 1964.

M.G. Chagla, Senior Advocate (B.L. Neema and Mrs. Anjali K. Varma, Advocates, and J.B. Dadachanji, Advocate of Messrs. J.B. Dadachanji & Co., with him), for Appellant (In both the Appeals).

I.N. Shreff, Advocate, for Respondent. (In both the Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—In respect of assessment to sales-tax for two accounting periods 1st April, 1961 to 30th June, 1961 and 1st July, 1961 to 30th September, 1961, the Board of Revenue, Madhya Pradesh, referred the following questions to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh for opinion :

“(1) Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case the notice in Form XVI that was served on the applicant was invalid and therefore the assessment of the applicant on the basis of that notice was bad in law ?

(2) Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case the applicant was a dealer during the assessment period under the Act and the imposition of purchase tax on him under section 7 of the Act was in order ?”

The High Court answered the first question in the negative, and the second in the affirmative. These appeals are preferred with Special Leave granted by this Court.

The appellants are a firm of building contractors and are registered as dealers under the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Act II of 1959. The appellants purchased building materials in the two account periods and used the materials in the course of their business. The Sales Tax Officer, Jabalpur Circle, served notices under section 18 (5) of the Act calling upon the appellants to show cause why “best judgment” assessments should not be made, and by order dated 30th November, 1961, he assessed the appellants to tax in respect of goods purchased by the appellants for use in their construction business and imposed a penalty of Rs. 200 in each case. Appeals against the orders imposing tax and penalty were dismissed by the Assistant Commissioner of Sales Tax and the Board of Revenue.

Rule 33 of the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Rules, 1959, provides that a notice of assessment under section 18 (5) shall be in Form XVI, and ordinarily it shall give not less than 15 days from the date of the service to the assessee to show cause why he should not be assessed or reassessed to tax and/or to pay penalty”. The notices served upon the appellants did not give them a clear period of 15 days to show cause. But we are unable to hold on that account that the notices and the assessments were invalid. We agree with the High Court that the rule is not intended to be “either invariable or rigid”, and “unless prejudice has resulted to the taxpayer the proceedings are not liable to be set aside”. It is not even suggested that because of the insufficiency of time the appellants were unable to submit their explanation to failure to make their returns of turnover. Two cases on which reliance was placed by Counsel for the appellants in support of the plea that the notices were invalid have, in our judgment, no bearing. In *Messrs. Kajorimal Kalyanmal v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P.*¹, it was held that a notice under section 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, giving the assessee 29 days for filing the return was “entirely illegal”. In *Jamna Dhar Potdar and Co., Lyallpur v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab*², it was held, following the judgment in *Kajorimal Kalyanmal's case*¹, that a notice which does not give to a tax-payer under section 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, clear notice for furnishing a return, of thirty days from the date of service is illegal. But these cases were decided under section 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, before it was amended by the Income-tax (Amendment) Act (VII) of 1939). Under the section as it then stood, it was enacted that the Income-tax Officer shall serve a notice upon any person whose total income is in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer of such an amount as to render that person liable to pay income-tax. The section was held to be mandatory. But the terms of rule 33 of the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Rules are plainly not mandatory. The answer given by the High Court on the first question must be accepted.

1. (1930) 3 I.T.C. 451.

2. (1935) 3 I.T.R. 112.

To appreciate the scope of the enquiry under the second question, the relevant provisions of the Act may be summarised. By section 2 (d) of the Act, in so far as it is relevant, the expression "dealer" is defined as meaning, amongst others, "any person who carries on the business of buying, selling, supplying or distributing goods, directly or otherwise". By section 4 (2) every dealer is liable to tax in respect of sales or supplies of goods effected in Madhya Pradesh with effect from the date on which his turnover calculated during a period of twelve months immediately preceding such date first exceeds the limits specified in sub-section (5). Section 6 provides that the tax payable by a dealer under the Act shall be levied on his taxable turnover relating to the goods specified in Schedule II. Section 7 provides:

"Every dealer who in the course of his business purchases any taxable goods, in circumstances in which no tax under section 6 is payable on the sale price of such goods and either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods for sale or otherwise or disposes of such goods in any manner other than by way of sale in the State or despatches them to a place outside the State except as a direct result of sale or purchase in the course of inter-State trade or commerce, shall be liable to pay tax on the purchase price of such goods at the same rate at which it would have been leviable on the sale price of such goods under section 6 ;

Counsel for the appellants submitted that the appellants were not "dealers" within the meaning of the Act because they did not carry on the business of buying goods, and that in any event, the goods purchased by them for use in their construction business were not liable to tax under section 7.

The appellants are registered dealers under the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Act, 1958 (II of 1959). It is true that in respect of the periods their turnover in respect of sales was assessed as "nil". But on that account they did not cease to be registered dealers within the meaning of the Act. A person to be a dealer within the meaning of the Act need not both purchase and sell goods ; a person who carries on the business of buying is by the express definition of the term in section 2 (d) a "dealer". This Court held in *The State of Andhra Pradesh v. H. Abdul Bakshi and Brothers*¹, that it is not predicted of a dealer that he must carry on the business of buying and selling the same goods. A person who buys goods for consumption in the process of manufacture of articles to be sold by him is a dealer within the meaning of the Hyderabad General Sales Tax Act (XIV of 1950). In *H. Abdul Bakshi and Brothers' case*¹, the assessee sold skins, after tanning hides and skins purchased by them. In the process of tanning, they had to use tanning bark purchased by them. This Court held that the turnover arising out of the tanning bark purchased by the assessee for consumption in the process of tanning was liable to tax on the footing that the assessee was carrying on the business of buying goods, even though the goods bought were consumed in the process of tanning. In dealing with the question whether an activity of purchase of goods required for consumption in a manufacturing process may be regarded as a business, the Court observed (at page 647):

"A person to be a dealer must be engaged in the business of buying or selling or supplying goods. The expression "business" though extensively used is a word of indefinite import. In taxing statutes it is used in the sense of an occupation, or profession which occupies the time, attention and labour of a person, normally with the object of making profit. To regard an activity as business there must be a course of dealings, either actually continued or contemplated to be continued with a profit motive, and not for sport or pleasure. But to be a dealer a person need not follow the activity of buying, selling and supplying the same commodity. Mere buying for personal consumption, i.e., without a profit motive, will not make a person dealer within the meaning of the Act, but a person who consumes a commodity bought by him in the course of his trade, or use in manufacturing another commodity for sale, would be regarded as a dealer. The Legislature has not made sale of the very article bought by a person a condition for treating him as a dealer; the definition merely requires that the buying of the commodity mentioned in rule 5 (2) must be in the course of business, i.e., must be for sale or use with a view to make profit out of the integrated activity of buying and disposal. The commodity may itself be converted into another saleable commodity, or it may be used as an ingredient or in aid of a manufacturing process leading to the production of such saleable commodity."

This Court agreed with the view expressed in *L. M. S. Sadak Thamby & Co. v. The State of Madras*¹, in which a similar question was decided by the High Court of Madras. In that case the assessee had purchased tanning bark and had consumed it in tanning raw hides. The Madras High Court held that the buying of goods was in the course of business since it was associated with the business of tanning of hides carried on with a profit-making motive. These decisions support the contention of the State that price paid for goods bought for consumption in manufacturing an article for sale is exigible to purchase-tax even if the goods purchased are either destroyed or transformed into another species of goods.

Counsel for the appellants urged that in the case of *H. Abdul Bakshi and Brothers*² and *L.M.S. Sadak Thamby & Company*¹, the assesseees were carrying on the business of selling goods manufactured by them and for the purpose of manufacturing those goods certain other goods were purchased and consumed in the process of manufacture, but here the goods are not consumed in producing another commodity for sale, and on that account the two cases are distinguishable. The answer to that argument must be sought in the terms of section 7. The phraseology used in that section is somewhat involved, but the meaning of the section is fairly plain. Where no sales tax is payable under section 6 on the sale price of the goods, purchase-tax is payable by a dealer who buys taxable goods in the course of his business, and (1) either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods for sale, or (2) consumes such goods otherwise; or (3) disposes of such goods in any manner other than by way of sale in the State, or (4) despatches them to a place outside the State except as a direct result of sale or purchase in the course of inter-State trade or commerce. The assesseees are registered as dealers and they have purchased building materials in the course of their business: the building materials are taxable under the Act, and the appellants have consumed the materials otherwise than in the manufacture of goods for sale and for a profit-motive. On the plain words of section 7 the purchase price is taxable.

Mr. Chagla for the appellants urged that the expression "or otherwise" is intended to denote a conjunctive introducing a specific alternative to the words "for sale" immediately preceding. The clause in which it occurs means, says Mr. Chagla, that by section 7 the price paid for buying goods consumed in the manufacture of other goods, intended to be sold or otherwise disposed of, alone is taxable. We do not think that that is a reasonable interpretation of the expression "either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods for sale or otherwise". It is intended by the Legislature that consumption of goods renders the price paid for their purchase taxable, if the goods are used in the manufacture of other goods for sale or if the goods are consumed otherwise.

The decision in *Versova Koil Sahakari Vahatuk Sangh Ltd. v. The State of Maharashtra*³, on which reliance was placed by Mr. Chagla has, in our judgment, no application. In that case a society registered under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925, carried on the business of transporting fish belonging to its members from fishing centres to the markets and vice versa. For preserving fish in the course of transport, the society used to purchase ice, and the members, whose fish was transported, were charged for the quantity of ice required in respect of their baskets of fish. The difference between the price paid by the society for ice purchased and the charge made by the society for ice supplied was brought to tax by the Sale Tax Officer under the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959. The High Court of Bombay held that the society was not supplying ice with the intention of carrying on business in ice, and on that account the society was not a "dealer" within the definition of that term in section 2 (11) of the Act in regard to the supply of ice by it to its members. In that case the taxing authority did not seek to impose purchase-tax: he sought to bring to tax the difference between the price paid by the society for purchasing ice and the charges which it made from its members for supplying ice, and the High Court held that in supplying ice the society was not carrying on business in ice, and on that account was not a "dealer". Whether in a particular set of circumstances a person may be said to be carrying on business in a commodity must depend upon the facts of that case and no general test may be applied for determining that question.

The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. One hearing fee.

PRESENT :—J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

The State of Rajasthan and another

v.

M/s. Man Industrial Corporation Ltd., Jaipur

.. Respondent.

Sales Tax—Contract whether for sale of goods or for service—Depends upon the main object of the parties gathered from terms of contract, circumstances of transaction and custom of the trade—Contract for providing and fixing "windows," of certain sizes in accordance with specifications, designs and drawing etc.—Whether works contract or contract for sale of goods—Test.

Whether a particular contract is one for sale of goods or is a contract for service depends upon the main object of the parties gathered from the terms of the contract, the circumstances of the transaction, and custom of the trade and no universal rule applicable to all transactions may be evolved. The test in each case is whether the object of the party sought to be taxed is that the chattel as chattel passes to the other party and the services rendered in connection with the installation are under a separate contract or are incidental to the execution of the contract of sale.

Held on facts, the object of the respondent was to enter into a works contract. The specifications of the windows were set out in the contract. The primary undertaking of the respondent was not merely to supply the windows but to "fix" the windows. This service is not rendered under a separate contract, nor is the service shown to be rendered customarily or normally as incidental to the sale by the person who supplies window-leaves. The 'fixing' of windows in the manner stipulated required special skill. If the windows were not properly "fixed" the contract would not be complete and the respondent could not claim the amount agreed to be paid to it. It was only upon the "fixing" of the window leaves and when the window leaves had become a part of the building construction that the property in the goods passed under the terms of the contract.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 13th May, 1965 of the Rajasthan High Court in D. B. Civil Reference No. 18 of 1963.

M. G. Chagla, Senior Advocate (K. Baldeva Mehta, Advocate, with him), for Appellants.

Sanat P. Mehta and O. P. Malhotra, Advocates, and J. B. Dadachanji and O. C. Mathur, Advocates of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji & Co., for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—The respondent carries on the business of fabricating “steel doors, windows, sashes and other goods.” On 20th April, 1957, the respondent submitted in pursuance of an invitation by the Executive Engineer, Ajmer, Central Division, its tender for providing and fixing “S. H. Windows ‘W’ Type,” “S. H. Windows ‘W-1’ Type,” “T.H. Windows” and “Composite Windows” of certain sizes “in accordance with the specifications, designs, drawing and instructions.” The tender was accepted and the respondent carried out the contract.

The Sales Tax Officer ‘B’ Circle, Jaipur City, included in the taxable turnover of the respondent Rs. 23,480 received under the contract. He held that the contract with the Executive Engineer was one of sale of goods and the respondent had with a view to promote sales of goods manufactured by it “voluntarily offered to fit” the goods, and had made no separate charge for that service. The Deputy Commissioner, Excise and Taxation, in appeal held that from the acceptance of the tender, two contracts resulted: one for providing doors and windows and another for “fixing” those doors and windows in a specified building, and that the price of the goods supplied, but not the charge for service, was taxable. He accordingly remanded the case with a direction to assess tax on the price for sale of materials only. The Board of Revenue exercising revisional power confirmed the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner observing that the contract undertaken by the respondent was not a contract of service.

The following question was referred by the Board of Revenue to the High Court of Rajasthan :

“Whether on the proper interpretation of the contract between the applicant and the Executive Engineer, C.P.W.D., Ajmer, regarding the providing and fixing of the steel windows to the Accountant General’s Office, Jaipur, and looking to the terms of the transaction of the type undertaken by the applicant the Board were justified in holding that the contract was divisible between two parts representing the sale of the windows and the labour charges in fixing the same and thus partly liable to sales-tax?”

The High Court held that the contract between the respondent and the Executive Engineer was a “building contract” and the amount received by the respondent was not taxable.

The relevant terms of the tender which was accepted by the Executive Engineer were;

“Item Rate-tender for Works

I/We hereby tender for the execution for the President of India of the work specified in the under-written memorandum within the time specified in such memorandum at the rates specified therein, and in accordance in all respects with the specifications, designs, drawing, and instructions in writing referred to in Rule 1 hereof and in Class II of the conditions of contract and with such materials as are provided for, by and in all other respects in accordance with such conditions so far as applicable.”

This recital was followed by a memorandum setting out the “general description” of the building in respect of which the window-leaves were to be supplied, the estimated cost of the contract and the description and the number of items of work offered to be done. The items of work offered to be done were “providing and fixing” four different types of windows. The relevant conditions were:

- “1. The work shall be executed as per the specifications attached.
2. The work is to be completed in 6 months from the date of award of works.
3. *

4. The windows are to be fitted with rawl plugs in cut stone works.

5. Work will be executed either by plain glass or ground glass as may be decided by the Engineer in Charge.

Note.—

1. * * * * *

2. We are offering windows which will be glazed with plain glass only. If at a later date it is desired to have windows glazed with ground glass, the difference in cost of glass will have to be paid by you.

3. * * * * *

5. The question is based on the current prices of mild steel billets fixed by the Government. Should there be any change in the controlled price of billets supplied to us, proportionate revision in the cost of rolled sections used in the fabrication will be made in the quotation.

6. Sales tax or any other tax is applicable will be extra.

7. Work will be completed in 6 months from the date of order."

These were followed by specifications relating to the steel to be used in the fabrication, glazing, fittings and finish of the windows.

The respondent offered to execute and complete the "work" mentioned in the written memorandum according to the specifications and conditions. In the view of the High Court the contract was for work, in the execution of which some movable property passed; it was not a contract for sale of windows and for rendering service in connection with the fixing of those windows.

Counsel for the State of Rajasthan contends that the respondent carried on the business of fabricating and selling window and door leaves and sashes etc. and entered into a contract for "sale of windows," and to promote sale of its manufactured goods, undertook to fix the windows without demanding any charge for that service, and the High Court was in error in holding that the contract was one of service in the execution of which property in the materials supplied by the respondent passed. Counsel urged that the terms of the tender were not decisive and the Court was entitled to ascertain the true effect of the contract as disclosed by the nature of the work, and the "invoice" for payment made out by the respondent. Counsel submitted that it is usual for manufacturers or dealers in specialised articles to arrange to "fix and service" the articles sold by them and on that account the contract does not acquire the character of a contract of service. He gave instances of sale of motor-types, luggage carriers, air conditioning units, refrigerators and contended that in undertaking to instal or fix these units or articles the sellers do not enter into a works contract merely because they undertake to instal or for the articles sold so as to make them fit for immediate service. But whether a particular contract is one for sale of goods or is a contract for service depends upon the main object of the parties gathered from the terms of the contract, the circumstances of the transaction, and custom of the trade and no universal rule applicable to all transactions may be evolved.

As observed in Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd edition, Vol. 34, Article 3 at page 6:

"A contract of sale of goods must be distinguished from a contract for work and labour. A contract of sale is a contract whose main object is the transfer of the property in, and the delivery of the possession of, a chattel as a chattel to the buyer. Where the main object of work undertaken by the payee of the price is not the transfer of a chattel qua chattel, the contract, is one for work and labour. The test is whether or not the work and labour bestowed and in anything that can properly become the subject of sale; neither the ownership of the materials, nor the value of the skill and labour as compared with the value of the materials is conclusive, although such matters may be taken into consideration in determining, in the circumstances of a particular case, whether the contract is in substance one for work and labour or one for the sale of a chattel."

What did the respondent agree to do when it offered its tender? Did the respondent agree to sell the window-leaves as described in the tender or did it, as part of a works contract, agree to "fix" windows of certain specifications in the building intended to be used for the offices of the Accountant-General? On a consideration of all the circumstances, we are of the view that the object of the respondent was to enter into a works contract. That clearly appears from the terms of the tender and its acceptance. The windows were to be fabricated according to the specifications with glass plain or ground—as decided by the Engineer in Charge, and were to be "fixed" within six months from the date of its acceptance "to the building with rawl plugs in cut stone-work." The rate quoted by the respondent was based on the current price of mild steel billets, and the price was to be revised in the light of cost revision of the controlled price of steel supplied to the respondent.

The contract undertaken by the respondent was to prepare the window-leaves according to the specifications and to fix them to the building. There were not two contracts—one of sale and another of service. "Fixing" the windows to the building was also not incidental or subsidiary to the sale, but was an essential term of the contract. The window-leaves did not pass to the Union of India under the terms of the contract as window-leaves. Only on the fixing of the windows as stipulated, the contract could be fully executed and the property in the windows passed on the completion of the work and not before.

It was said by this Court in *The State of Madras v. Gannon Dunkerley & Co. (Madras) Ltd.*¹, that in a building contract which is one, entire and indivisible there is no sale of goods. In the case of a building contract the property in materials does not pass to the other party to the contract as movable property. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the materials in the construction of a building become the property of the other party to the contract only on the theory of accretion.

In *The Government of Andhra Pradesh v. Guntur Tobaccos Ltd.*², this Court pointed out (at page 255):

"A contract for work in the execution of which goods are used may take one of three forms. The contract may be for work to be done for remuneration and for supply of materials used in the execution of the works for a price; it may be a contract for work in which the use of materials is accessory or incidental to the execution of the work; or it may be a contract for work and use or supply of materials though not accessory to the execution of the contract is voluntary or gratuitous. In the last class there is no sale because though property passes it does not pass for a price. Whether a contract is of the first or the second class must depend upon the circumstances; if it is of the first, it is a composite contract for work and sale of goods; where it is of the second category, it is a contract for execution of work not involving sale of goods."

The contract in question in this case is of the second variety.

Counsel relied upon *Patnaik and Company v. State of Orissa*³, and *McKenzie Ltd. v. The State of Maharashtra*⁴. But in both these cases the Court held on a consideration of the terms of the contract and the circumstances that the assesses had agreed to and did supply "motor-bus bodies" and the contract being one for sale of chattels, they were liable to pay sales-tax.

Our attention was also invited to *Commissioner of Sales Tax, Maharashtra State v. Arun Electrics*⁵. In that case a firm of electrical contractors undertook the job of installing electrical fittings in the houses of their customers, which involved the supply and fixing of goods, such as wire, brass clips, wall brackets and tube lights with accessories. The assessee charged their customers consolidated rates for the materials consumed and labour involved, in carrying out the contracts. The Sales Tax Officer charged to tax under the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959, the value of materials supplied in carrying out the contracts. It was held by the High Court of Bombay that the transaction of the assessee with their customers was not a pure works contract, but a combination of two distinct and separate contracts, one for the supply or the sale of goods for consideration, and the other for the supply of work and labour, and only that part of the contract, which consisted of supply of goods for consideration, was liable to tax under the Sales Tax Act. That case was brought in appeal to this Court at the instance of the assessee. This Court in *Arun Electrics, Bombay v. Commissioner of Sales Tax, Maharashtra State*¹, discharged the answer recorded by the High Court, holding that the conclusions recorded by the Deputy Commissioner and the Tribunal were based on no evidence, and the High Court could not record, on the facts found, an answer to the question referred. The Deputy Commissioner had proceeded only upon the terms of the invoice in which a charge was made for supplying and "fixing" the materials and providing light points complete with 1/8 GTS. wire, brass clips, tapes and all approved accessories. The conclusion of the departmental authorities was not based on any intention of the parties as disclosed by the evidence, but plainly on the terms of the invoice which was ambiguous.

In *The State of Madras v. Richardson and Gruddas Ltd.*², the assessee without a formal contract agreed to supply fabricate and erect steel structures for a sugar factory. The assessee completed the contract. A bill was submitted by the assessee for charges for fabrication, supply and erection of steel structures at certain rates. The High Court of Madras on a consideration of the evidence held that there was a stipulation for a consolidated lump-sum payment of Rs. 1,160 per ton for fabricating, supplying and erecting at site all steel work etc.; there was no stipulation for passing of property in the goods to the factory before actual completion of the erection work; there the contract did not contemplate dissecting the value of the goods supplied and the value of work and labour bestowed in the execution of the work; and the predominant idea underlying the contract was the bestowing of special skill and labour by the experienced engineers and mechanics of the assessee. This Court agreed with the High Court and held that the contract was a works contract and not a contract for sale.

Our attention was invited to a judgment of the Court of Appeal in *Love v. Norman Wright (Builders) Ltd.*³. In that case the respondents contracted with the Secretary of State for War to do the work and supply the material mentioned in the Schedules to the contract, including the supply of black-out curtains, curtain rails and battens and their erection at a number of Police Stations. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the respondents were liable to pay purchase-tax. Reliance was placed upon the observations made by Goddard, L.J., at page 482:

"If one orders another to make and fix curtains at his house the contract is one of sale though work and labour are involved in the making and fixing, nor does it matter that ultimately the property was to pass to the War Office under the head contract. As between the plaintiff and the defendants the former passed the property in the goods to the defendants who passed it on to the War Office."

We do not think that these observations furnish a universal test that whenever there is a contract to "fix" certain articles made by a manufacturer the contract must be deemed one for sale and not of service. The test in each case is whether the object of the party sought to be taxed is that the chattel as chattel passes to the other party and the services rendered in connection with the installation are under a separate contract or are incidental to the execution of the contract of sale.

1. (1966) 17 S.T.C. 576.

2. (1968) 21 S.T.C. 245.

3. L.R. (1944) 1 K.B. 484.

In the present case, the specifications of the windows were set out in the contract. The primary undertaking of the respondent was not merely to supply the windows but to "fix" the windows. This service is not rendered under a separate contract, nor is the service shown to be rendered customarily or normally as incidental to the sale by the person who supplies window-leaves. The "fixing" of windows in the manner stipulated required special technical skill. If the windows were not properly "fixed," the contract would not be complete, and the respondent could not claim the amount agreed to be paid to it. We agree with the High Court that it was only upon the "fixing" of the window-leaves and when the window leaves had become a part of the building construction that the property in the goods passed under the terms of the contract.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

PRESENT :—V. RAMASWAMI AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

National and Grindlays Bank Ltd.

v.

The Municipal Corporation for Greater Bombay

.. Respondents.

Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (III of 1888), sections 146, 147, 154, 155 and 156— Interpretation—Property tax—Levy of—Lease of the land—Lessee building upon the land—Composite assessment of tax upon the land and building taken together—Primary liability on the lessor of the land if warranted under section 146 (2) (a).

Interpretation of Statutes—Contemporanea expositio—Meaning of the enactment obscure—Construction put upon it by authorities for a long time—Court, if may resort to contemporary construction.

Has primary liability been imposed on the appellant under the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (III of 1888) to pay property taxes to the respondent, i.e., the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay in respect of land owned by the appellant and let on a monthly basis to a third party who has constructed a building thereon?

Held that, The language of section 146 (2) indicates that the Legislature contemplated that in a case where the land and the building are owned by different persons there should be a composite assessment of property tax. The reason is that in section 146 (1) and (2) the word 'premises' is used in contrast to section 146 (3) where the words 'land and building' are separately mentioned. In section 154 (1) of the Act again, the Legislature uses the expression 'building or land.' Then section 155 provides for the right of the Commissioner to call information from the owner or the occupier in order to enable him to determine the rateable value of any building or land and the person primarily liable for the payment of any property tax levied in respect thereof. Section 156 provides that the Commissioner shall maintain a book to be called the assessment book which book is to contain among other things a list of all lands and buildings. Therefore, the scheme of section 146 is that when the land is let and the tenant has built upon the land, there should be a composite assessment of tax upon the land and building taken together. In the case of such a composite unit the primary liability of assessment of tax is intended to be on the lessor of the land under section 146 (2) (a) of the Act. Section 146 (3) of the Act furnishes the key to the interpretation of section 146 (2) (a). In the context of section 146 (3) the lessor of the premises as mentioned in section 146 (2) (a) must be construed as to mean the lessor of the land on which the building has been constructed by the tenant.

In this connection, reference should be made to section 147 which provides for an apportionment of responsibility for property tax when the premises assessed are let or sub-let. The language of sub-section suggests that the lessor of the land has the right of recovering from his tenant the amount of tax which he has paid in excess of the tax which the property is liable to pay on the basis of the rent recovered by the lessor. It is also clear that the intention of the Legislature in fixing the primary liability of property tax upon the owner of the land in a case not falling under section 146 (3) of the Act is to facilitate the collection of property. In the case of a monthly tenant who puts up a temporary shack or asbestos shed on the land and who may at any time terminate the lease at a short notice, it is not always possible for the Corporation to keep track of the lessee and to collect the property tax from him. It is not unreasonable therefore that in a case of this description the Legislature should impose the primary liability for the payment of the property tax upon the lessor of the land and to give him the right of recoupment under section 147.

Assuming that the meaning of section 146 (2) of the Act is obscure and that it is possible to interpret it as throwing the primary liability for payment of property tax upon the lessee who has constructed a building on the land, the Court may resort to contemporary construction, that is the construction which the authorities have put upon it by their usage and conduct for a long time. The principle applicable is "optima legum interpres est consuetudo". The Act was passed in the year 1888 and there appears to be a practice followed by the Bombay Municipal Corporation for a very long time of treating the land and the building constructed upon it as single unit and charging the property tax upon the owner of the land in a case where the land is let for a period of less than one year to a tenant who has constructed a building thereon.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Order dated the 25th March, 1964 of the Bombay High Court in Letters Patent Appeal No. 28 of 1964.

S.V. Gupte, Senior Advocate (P.P. Khambatta, D.P. Mehta and Miss Bhuvnesh Kumari, Advocates, and O.C. Mathur, Advocate of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji & Co., with him), for Appellant.

M. G. Chagla, Senior Advocate (I.N. Shroff, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by *

* Ramaswami, J.—The question of law involved in this appeal is whether the primary liability is imposed on the appellant under the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, 1888 (Act No. III of 1888) to pay property taxes to the respondent, i.e., the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay in respect of land owned by the appellant and let on a monthly basis to a third party who has constructed a building thereon.

The appellant is a banking company incorporated in the United Kingdom and has established places of business in India. The appellant is the sole trustee of the estate of the late Mr. F.E. Dinshaw and in that capacity is the owner of a plot of land at Manjubhai Road, Malad, Greater Bombay in the State of Maharashtra, bearing No. P-Ward No. 6418, Street No. 299-B. The said plot of land had been leased by the former trustee of the estate to one Mr. R.R. Pande (hereinafter referred to as the lessee) since a number of years at a monthly rent of Rs. 12-50. The lessee had constructed at his own cost a tiled house on the said plot of land. The Malad area merged into Greater Bombay on 1st February, 1957. Up to the date of the merger the Malad District Municipality was assessing and levying taxes on the land and the structure separately and recovering the same from the landlord and the tenant. After the merger, the Bombay Municipal Corporation issued a notice to the appellant under section 167 of the Act informing him that the assessment book had been amended by inserting the name of the appellant and that the rateable value of the house had been fixed at Rs. 430. Being aggrieved by this order the appellant preferred an appeal to the Chief Judge, Small Causes Court, Bombay under section 217 of the Act. The appeal was dismissed by the Chief Judge, Small Causes Court by his order dated 3rd August, 1960. The appellant took the matter in further appeal to the Bombay High Court. The appeal was heard by Mr. Justice Patel and was dismissed on the 14th January, 1964. The learned Judge felt that he was bound by the decision of Chagla, C.J., and Shah, J., in *Ramji Keshavji v. Municipal Corporation for Greater Bombay*¹. The appellant thereafter preferred a Letters Patent Appeal No. 28 of 1964 which was summarily dismissed by Chief Justice H.K. Chainani and Mr. Justice Gokhale on 25th March, 1964. The present appeal is brought by Special Leave from the judgment of the Bombay High Court, dated 25th March, 1964.

Section 3 (r) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, 1888 (Act No. 3 of 1888) (hereinafter called the Act) defines 'land' as including land which is being built upon or is built upon or covered with water.....". Section 3 (s) defines 'building' as including a house, out-house, stable, shed, but and every other such structure, whether of masonry bricks, wood, mud, metal or any other material whatever. Section 3 (gg) defines 'premises' as including messuages, buildings and lands of any tenure, whether open or enclosed, whether built on or not and whether public or private. Section 140 states :

"140. The following taxes shall be levied on buildings and lands in Greater Bombay and shall be called "property taxes", namely :—

(a) a water tax of so many per centum of their rateable value as the corporation shall deem reasonable for providing a water-supply for Greater Bombay;

(b) a halalkhor-tax of so many per centum, not exceeding five of their rateable value as will, in the opinion of the corporation, suffice to provide for the collection, removal and disposal, by municipal agency, of all excrementitious and polluted matter from privies, urinals and cesspools and for efficiently maintaining and repairing the municipal drains constructed or used for the receptions or conveyance of such matter, subject however, to the provisions that the minimum amount of such tax to be levied in respect of any one separate holding of land, or of any one building or of any one portion of a building which is let as a separate holding, shall be six annas per month, and that the amount of such tax to be levied in respect of any hotel, club or other large premises may be specially fixed under section 172;

(c) a general tax of not less than eight and not more than twenty-six per centum of their rateable value, together with not less than one-eighth and not more than three-quarters per centum of their rateable value added thereto in order to provide for the expense necessary for fulfilling the duties of the corporation arising under clause (k) of section 61 and Chapter XIV;

(d) betterment charges leviable under Chapter XII-A".

Section 146 provides :—

"146. (1) Property-taxes shall be leviable primarily from the actual occupier of the premises upon which the said taxes are assessed, if such occupier holds the said premises immediately from the Government or from the corporation or from a fazendar :

Provided that the property taxes due in respect of any premises owned by or vested in the Government and occupied by a Government servant or any other person on behalf of the Government for residential purposes shall be leviable primarily from the Government and not the occupier thereof.

(2) Otherwise the said taxes shall be primarily leviable as follows, namely :—

(a) if the premises are let, from the lessor ;

(b) if the premises are sub-let, from the superior lessor ; and

(c) if the premises are unlet, from the person in whom the right to let the same vests.

(3) But if any land has been let for any term exceeding one year to a tenant and such tenant or any person deriving title howsoever from such tenant has built upon the land, the property taxes assessed upon the said land and upon the building erected thereon shall be leviable primarily from the said tenant or such person, whether or not the premises be in the occupation of the said tenant or such person”.

Section 147 states :

“147. (1) If any premises assessed to any property tax are let, and their rateable value exceeds the amount of rent payable in respect thereof to the person from whom, under the provisions of the last preceding section, the said tax is leviable, the said person shall be entitled to receive from his tenant the difference between the amount of the property tax levied from him, and the amount which would be leviable from him if the said tax were calculated on the amount of rent payable to him.

(2) If the premises are sub-let and their rateable value exceeds the amount of rent payable in respect thereof to the tenant by his sub-tenant, or the amount of rent payable in respect thereof to a sub-tenant by the person holding under him the said tenant shall be entitled to receive from his sub-tenant or the said sub-tenant shall be entitled to receive from the person holding under him, as the case may be, the difference between any sum recovered under this section from such tenant or sub-tenant and the amount of property-tax which would be leviable in respect of the said premises if the rateable value thereof were equal to the difference between the amount of rent which such tenant or sub-tenant receives and the amount of rent which he pays.

(3) Any person entitled to receive any sum under this section shall have, for the recovery thereof, the same rights and remedies as if such sum were rent payable to him by the person from whom he is entitled to receive the same.”

Section 154 (1) enacts as follows :

“In order to fix the rateable value of any building or land assessable to a property-tax, there shall be deducted from the amount of the annual rent for which such land or building might reasonably be expected to let from year to year a sum equal to ten per centum of the said annual rent and the said deduction shall be in lieu of all allowances for repairs or on any other account whatever”.

Section 155 enacts :

“155. (1) To enable him to determine the rateable value of any building or land and the person primarily liable for the payment of any property tax leviable in respect thereof the Commissioner may require the owner or occupier of such building or land, or of any portion thereof, to furnish him, within such reasonable period as the Commissioner prescribes in this behalf, with information or with a written return signed by such owner or occupier—

(a) as to the name and place of abode of the owner or occupier, or of both the owner and occupier of such building or land ; and

(b) as to the dimensions of such building or land, or of any portion thereof, and the rent, if any, obtained for such building, or land, or any portion thereof.

(2) Every owner or occupier on whom any such requisition is made shall be bound to comply with the same and to give true information or to make a true return to the best of his knowledge or belief.

(3) The Commissioner may also for the purpose aforesaid make an inspection of any such building or land”.

*Hindustan Commercial Bank Ltd. v.
Punnu Sahu (dead) through L.Rs.*
Civil Appeal No. 1694 of 1966.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 21, rule 90, Proviso clause (b) (as amended by Allahabad High Court)—‘Entertain’ meaning of—Power of Court is discretionary—Court to give opportunity to the applicant to comply with clause (b).

Words and Phrases—“Entertain” meaning of.

“Entertain” means adjudicate upon or proceed to consider on merits.

From the language of the proviso, it is clear that the power conferred on the Court is discretionary power. It is expected that the Court would ordinarily give an opportunity to the applicant to comply with clause (b) of the proviso and could reject the application if the same were still not complied with. That should be particularly so in an application made before clause (b) was incorporated into the proviso.

On facts, held that in the interest of justice the High Court should have remanded the case to the executing Court leaving it to that Court to exercise its discretion under clause (b).

Orissa Agricultural Income-tax Act, section 29 (iii)—Assessments on the basis of ‘best judgment’—Enhancement of assessment by assistant Collector, rejecting materials placed before him by assessee as unreliable—Order not disclosing the basis for enhancement—Confirmation by Tribunal without giving reasons—Interference by High Court—Whether justified.

The Assistant Collector’s order does not disclose the basis on which he has enhanced the assessment. The mere fact that the material placed by the assessee before the assessing authorities is unreliable does not empower those authorities to make an arbitrary order. The power to levy assessment on the basis of best judgment is not an arbitrary power, it is an assessment on the basis of best judgment. In other words that assessment must be based on some relevant material. It is not a power that can be exercised under the sweet will and pleasure of the concerned authorities.

The Agricultural Income-tax Tribunal gave no reasons in its order for affirming the decision of the Assistant Collector. It appears to have been of the view that once the assessing authorities reject the material placed before them as being unreliable those authorities can proceed to levy whatever tax they may levy. It failed to bear in mind the scope of the power of the assessing authorities to levy assessment on the basis of best judgment. Therefore the tribunal was clearly in error in confirming the decision of the Assistant Collector.

Held, the High Court was justified in interfering with the order of the Tribunal.

Civil Appeal No. 2554 of 1966.

Constitution of India (1950), Articles 309, 310 (1) and 311 (1) and Central Provinces and Bihar Police Regulations 228 and 229—Scope of Article 311 (1)—Whether power conferred on Superintendent of Police under Regulations ultra vires.

Words and Phrases—"Conditions of Service."

Article 311 (1) does not in terms require that the authority empowered under that provision to dismiss or remove an official, should itself initiate or conduct the enquiry preceding the dismissal or removal of the officer or even that that enquiry should be done at its instance. The only right guaranteed to a civil servant under that provision is that he shall not be dismissed or removed by an authority subordinate to that by which he was appointed.

The expression "conditions of service" in the Proviso to Article 309 is an expression of wide import. The dismissal of an official is a matter which falls within "conditions of service" of public servants. The expression means all those conditions which regulate the holding of a post by a person right from the time of his appointment till his retirement and even beyond it in matters like pension, etc. But for the incorporation of Article 311 in the Constitution even in respect of matters provided therein, rules could have been framed under Article 309. The provisions in Article 311 confer additional rights on the civil servants.

Held, the guarantee given under Article 311 (1) does not include within itself a further guarantee that the disciplinary proceedings resulting in dismissal or removal of a civil servant should also be initiated and conducted by the authorities mentioned in the Article.

W.P. No. 287 of 1969.

Preventive Detention Act (IV of 1950), section 3 (2)—Acts of detenu, such as molestation and assault, directed against individuals—Whether amount to breach of public order or likelihood of breach of public order—Detention, whether justified.

Public order was said to embrace more of the community than law and order. Public order is the even tempo of the life of the community taking the country as a whole or even a specified locality. Disturbance of public order is to be distinguished from acts directed against individuals which do not disturb the society to the extent of causing a general disturbance of public tranquillity. It is the degree of disturbance and its effect upon the life of the community in a locality which determines whether the disturbance amounts only to a breach of law and order. An act by itself is not determinative of its own gravity. In its quality it may not differ from another but in its potentiality it may be very different. The question whether a man has only committed a breach of law and order or has acted in a manner likely to cause a disturbance of the public order is a question of degree and the extent of the reach of the act upon the society. A large number of acts directed against persons or individuals may total up into a breach of public order. The question to ask is ; Does it lead to disturbance of the current of life of the community so as to amount to a disturbance of the public order or does it affect merely an individual leaving the tranquillity of the society undisturbed? This question has to be faced in every case on facts. There is no formula by which one case can be distinguished from another.

On facts held, all acts of molestation were directed against the family of Phanindra C. Das and were not directed against women in general from the locality. Assaults also were on individual. The conduct may be reprehensible but it does not add up to the situation where it may said that the community at large was being disturbed or in other words there was breach of public order or likelihood of breach of public order.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), section 33-B—Show cause notice to revise assessment order—Assessee served—Assessee absenting himself on the date of hearing—Income-tax Officer directing fresh assessment—Appeal to Tribunal not filed—Petition for writ of certiorari—Interference.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 226 and Income-tax Act—Writ of certiorari—Adequate alternative remedy available—Failure to avail—Interference in writ—Scope of.

The Income-tax Act provides a complete and self-contained machinery for obtaining relief against improper action taken by the departmental authorities, and normally the party feeling himself aggrieved by such action cannot be permitted to refuse to have recourse to that machinery and to approach the High Court directly against the action. The assessee had an adequate remedy under the Income-tax Act which he could have availed of; he, however, did not move the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal which was competent to decide all questions of fact and law which the assessee could have raised in the appeal including the grievance that he had no adequate opportunity of making his representation and invoked the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court. Held, no adequate ground was made out for entertaining the petition.

A writ of certiorari is discretionary; it is not issued merely because it is lawful to do so. Where the party feeling aggrieved by an order of an authority under the Income-tax Act has an adequate alternative remedy which he may resort to against the improper action of the authority and he does not avail himself of that remedy the High Court will require a strong case to be made out for entertaining a petition for a writ. Where the aggrieved party has an alternative remedy the High Court would be slow to entertain a petition challenging an order of a taxing authority which is ex-facie with jurisdiction. A petition for a writ of certiorari may lie to the High Court, where the orders are on the face of it erroneous or raises question of jurisdiction or of an infringement of fundamental rights of the petitioner. The present case was one in which the jurisdiction of the High Court could not be invoked.

On facts, held, that there was proper service of the notice and that the High Court was right in holding that the order under section 33-B of the Act was properly made.

Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (XLIV of 1954), section 24 (2) and Constitution of India (1950), Article 226—Power of Settlement Commissioner to cancel an allotment—Nature of—Competency of the High Court to interfere with the order of the Commissioner.

The Chief Settlement Commissioner has power under sub-section (2) of section 24 to cancel an allotment if he is satisfied that the order of allotment of land had been obtained by means of fraud, false representation or concealment of any material fact. The power is judicial and by the use of the expression 'is satisfied' the Chief Settlement Commissioner is not made the final arbiter of the facts on which the conclusion is reached. The jurisdiction of the Chief Settlement Commissioner arises only if an allotment is obtained by means of fraud, false representation or concealment of material facts. The relevant satisfaction is a jurisdictional fact on the existence of which alone the power may be exercised. A superior authority or the High Court in a writ petition would, therefore, be entitled to consider whether there was due satisfaction by the Settlement Commissioner on materials placed before him and that the order was made not arbitrarily, capriciously or perversely.

On facts held, the order of the Chief Settlement Commissioner being quasi-judicial in character and his satisfaction not being decisive of the matter, the High Court was justified in holding that the conclusion of the Chief Settlement Commissioner, that the respondents 1 to 3 were guilty of fraud, was based on no evidence and the Court was competent to set aside the order of the Chief Settlement Commissioner.

A number of serious allegations were made by the appellant in his petition, in support of his plea that the order passed against him was made out of malice, and, practically, no reply was submitted to that by the State. Apparently the plea was urged before the High Court. The High Court observed in the course of the judgment that the appellant had challenged the order on the "ground of malu fide" but did not proceed to consider that plea. Held, that there has been no fair trial of the petition filed by the appellant. C.A. No. 1337 of 1969.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sections 4 and 6—Section 4 notification for construction of road—Parts of survey numbers sought to be acquired not set out with precision—No plans demarcating the land to be acquired published or made available to the owners of the land—Notification under section 6—Parties purchasing lands subsequent to notification dates, constructing houses after obtaining sanction from Municipality—Right to challenge notification.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 226—Writ—Dismissal in limine when justified—Jurisdiction to deal with questions of fact.

The pleas raised by the petitioners about the infirmity in the notification and the proceedings for compulsory acquisition were serious.

The High Court observed that they will not deal with disputed question of fact in a writ petition. But what facts were in dispute and what were admitted could only be determined after an affidavit in reply was filed by the State. The High Court, however, proceeded to dismiss the petition in limine. The High Court is not deprived of its jurisdiction to entertain a petition under Article 226 merely because in considering the petitioner's right to relief questions of fact may fall to be determined. In a petition under Article 226 the High Court has jurisdiction to try issues both of fact and law. Exercise of the jurisdiction is, it is true, discretionary, but the discretion must be exercised on sound judicial principles. When the petition raises questions of fact of a complex nature, which may for their determination require oral evidence to be taken, and on that account the High Court is of the view that the dispute may not appropriately be tried in a writ petition, the High Court may decline to try a petition. Rejection of a petition in limine will normally be justified where the High Court is of the view that the petition is frivolous or because of the nature of the claim made dispute sought to be agitated or that the petition against the party against whom relief is claimed is not maintainable or that the dispute raised thereby is such that it would be inappropriate to try it in the writ jurisdiction, or for analogous reasons.

On facts held, the High Court was not justified in dismissing the petition on the ground that it will not determine disputed questions of fact. The High Court has jurisdiction to determine questions of fact, even if they are in dispute and the present is a case in which in the interests of both the parties the High Court should have entertained the petition and called for an affidavit in reply from the respondents, and should have proceeded to try the petition instead of relegating the appellants to a separate suit.

If the notification under section 4 was vague the three appellants who are purchasers of the land had title thereto may challenge the validity of the notification. The appellants have spent in putting up substantial structures considerable sums of money and merely because they had purchased the lands after the issue of the notification under section 4 they are not debarred from challenging the validity of the notification, or from contending that it did not apply to their lands.

In computing the taxable income of an assessee, whether an amount claimed as expenditure was laid out or expended wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the business, profession or vocation of the assessee must be decided on the facts and in the light of the circumstances of each case. Resolution of the assessee fixing the remuneration to be paid to an employee and production of vouchers for payment together with proof of rendering service do not exclude an enquiry whether the expenditure was laid out wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the assessee’s business. It is open to the tax officers to hold, agreement to pay and payment notwithstanding, that the expenditure was not laid out wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the business.

Where an amount paid to an employee pursuant to an agreement is excessive because of “extra-commercial considerations”, the taxing authority has jurisdiction to disallow a part of the amount as expenditure not incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the business.

An inference from the facts found that the expenditure was wholly and exclusively laid out for the purpose of the business is one of law and not of fact, and the High Court in a reference under section 66 of the Income-tax Act is competent to decide that the inference raised by the Tribunal is erroneous in law.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 2, rule 2—Bar under—When attracted—

The requirement of Order 2, rule 2 is that every suit should include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of a cause of action. Cause of action is a cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit. If that cause of action enables a person to ask for a larger and wider relief than that to which he limits his claim, he cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance in independent proceedings.

In the instant case, the cause of action on the basis of which the previous suit was brought does not form the foundation of the present suit. The cause of action mentioned in the earlier suit, assuming the same afforded a basis for a valid claim, did not enable the plaintiff to ask for any relief other than those he prayed for in that suit. In that suit he could not have claimed the relief which he seeks in this suit. Hence the trial Court and the High Court were not right in holding that the plaintiff’s suit is barred by Order 2, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), section 2 (11) (i) (a) Proviso—Scope—“Previous year”—Meaning of the expressions “assessed” and “assessee” in the proviso.

It is necessary to note that section 2 (11) (i) (a) does not refer to the income of the assessee generally but to his "separate sources of income, profits and gains." Hence it is possible for an assessee to have a different "previous year" for each "separate source of income, profits and gains." In Rhodesia Metals Ltd. v. Commissioner of Taxes, (1941) I.T.R. Supp. 45, the Judicial Committee observed that "source" means not a legal concept but which a practical man would regard as a real source of income.

The words "assessed", "assessment" and "assessee" have different meanings in different contexts. The word "assessment" is used in the Act as meaning sometimes the computation of income, sometimes the determination of the amount of tax payable and sometimes, the procedure laid down in the Act for imposing liability upon the taxpayer. Similarly the word "assessee" connotes different meanings in different contexts.

The expression "where in respect of a particular source of income, profits and gains" in the proviso to section 2 (11) (i) (a) means the income from a particular source which has been brought to tax under the Act and not which has been taken into consideration for computing the total world income of the assessee. In the context the word "assessee" in the proviso to section 2 (11) (i) (a) refers to the person whose income, profits or gains, in respect of a particular source had been once assessed to tax. The word "assessed" in that proviso means subject to levy or imposition and not "compute".

Under section 123 (2) any direct or indirect interference or attempt to interfere on the part of the candidate or his agent, or of any other person with the consent of the candidate or his election agent with the free exercise of any electoral right would amount to undue influence and a corrupt practice within the meaning of the Act. The proviso to this sub-section shows that any person who induces or attempts to induce a candidate or an elector to believe that he or any person in whom he is interested, will become or will be rendered an object of divine displeasure or spiritual censure would be deemed to interfere in the free exercise of the electoral right of such candidate or elector within the meaning of this clause.

Once it is established that the appellant (returned candidate) had asked the Swamiji of Bhandura, who was a man of considerable influence in the locality, to make a speech supporting his cause, that he followed it up by taking the Swamiji to the meeting and made an introductory speech which was followed by the Swamiji using his eloquence to induce the electorate to support the Jan Sangh candidate as against the Congress nominees on the ground that the Congress Party had failed to protect the cow and was in fact allowing cow slaughter on a large scale, a vote for that party would be tantamount to committing sin of Gohatya, the case clearly falls within section 123 (2) of the Act so as to amount to a corrupt practice sufficient to set aside the election.

It will be noticed that rule 4 of the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Election Rules provides only one manner of presentation of nomination paper, i.e., delivery either in person by the candidate or by his proposer or seconder. Further it mentions the time within which it can be delivered, i.e., between the hours of eleven in the forenoon and three in the afternoon. If the nomination paper is not presented in person either by the candidate or by the proposer or the seconder it cannot be deemed to have been presented at all.

If a nomination paper is received by post it would be difficult to say that it has been presented and received before 3 o'clock on the last date appointed under clause (a) of section 4 (1) of the Act. Such a nomination paper could not be treated to have been received within the meaning of sub-rule (2) of rule 4 of the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Election Rules and the Returning Officer is entitled to reject it.

As soon as the Returning Officer finds that a nomination paper has not been duly presented and received he must reject it outright at the time it is handed over to him and it is not necessary for him to wait till the date of scrutiny.

The Rules contemplate only one method of presentation of nomination paper and if that method is not followed the nomination paper cannot be held to be validly presented and must be rejected outright. To hold otherwise would lead to utter confusion and delay in the completion of the election.

In the result, the challenge to the election of Sri G. S. Pathak to the office of the Vice-President of India, on the ground that the nomination paper of Dr. Ram Sharan Das, which was sent by post, was wrongly rejected, must fail.

Preventive Detention Act (IV of 1950), section 7—Detention under the Act—Communication of ground to the detainee—Necessity—"Communication"—What is.

Section 7 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, inter alia provides that the authority making the order of detention shall, as soon as may be, communicate to the person detained the ground on which the order of detention is made. The use of the word "communicate" is significant. The person detained must be made to understand the ground on which the order of his detention has been made because the object of this communication is to enable him to make a representation against that order. An effective representation can be possible only if the detainee fully understands the ground of his detention.

Where, therefore, the persons detained were illiterate, the mere fact that they were served with the ground of detention in English with a vernacular translation thereof, would not amount to compliance with the requirements of law.

Section 156 states ;

“ The Commissioner shall keep a book, to be called “ the assessment book ” in which shall be entered every official year—

(a) a list of all buildings and lands in Greater Bombay distinguishing each either by name or number, as he shall think fit ;

(b) the rateable value of each such building and land determined in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this Act ;

(c) the name of the person primarily liable for the payment of the property taxes, if any, leviable on each such building or land.....

* * * * *

It was contended by Mr. Khambatta that on a proper construction of section 146 (2) of the Act there should have been separate assessments in respect of the building and the land in the present case. It was argued in the alternative that even if section 146 (2) of the Act contemplates a composite assessment of the building and the land, the primary liability should be imposed upon the owner of the building and not on the owner of the land. It was said that the right to let the building vests in the lessee of the land and not in the appellant, and so, the primary liability was upon the lessee under section 146 (2) of the Act. The argument was pressed that the appellant cannot be treated as a lessor under section 146 (2) of the Act, because the appellant has not let the land with the building thereon as one unit to the lessee. The opposite view point was presented on behalf of the respondent. It was argued, in the first place, that section 146 (2) of the Act contemplates that there should be a composite assessment of the land and the building taken as one unit. In the case of such a composite assessment, the primary liability of the payment of tax was on the landlord under sub-section (2) (a) of section 146 except in the case referred to in sub-section (3) where the primary liability was upon the tenant and not upon the landlord. Admittedly, the present case did not fall under section 146 (3), and, therefore, the primary liability was placed upon the appellant. In our opinion, the argument put forward on behalf of the respondent is well-founded and must be accepted as correct. In the first place, the language of section 146 (2) indicates that the Legislature contemplated that in a case where the land and the building are owned by different persons there should be a composite assessment of property tax. The reason is that in section 146 (1) and (2) the word ‘ premises ’ is used in contrast to section 146 (3) where the words ‘ land and building ’ are separately mentioned. In section 154 (1) of the Act again, the Legislature uses the expression “ building or land ”. The section 155 provides for the right of the Commissioner to call information from the owner or the occupier in order to enable him to determine the rateable value of any building or land and the person primarily liable for the payment of any property tax levied in respect thereof. Section 156 provides that the Commissioner shall maintain a book to be called ‘ the assessment book ’ which book is to contain along other things a list of all lands and buildings. Therefore, the scheme of section 146 is that when the land is let and the tenant has built upon the land, there should be a composite assessment of tax upon the land and building taken together. We are further of opinion that in the case of such a composite unit the primary liability of assessment of tax is intended to be on the lessor of the land under section 146 (2) (a) of the Act. It was objected by Mr. Khambatta that the appellant was only the lessor of the land and not of the building and so, the appellant cannot be held to be the lessor within the meaning of section 146 (2) (a). We do not think that there is any merit in this objection. Section 146 (3) of the Act furnishes the key to the interpretation of section 146 (2) (a). In the context of section 146 (3) the lessor of the premises as mentioned in section 146 (2) (a) must be construed as to mean the lessor of the land on which the building has been constructed by the tenant. In this connection, reference should be made to section 147 which provides for an apportionment of responsibility for property tax when the premises assessed are let or sub-let. The language of this sub-section suggests that the lessor of the land has the right of recovering from his tenant the amount of tax which he has paid in excess of the tax which the property is liable to pay on the basis of the rent recovered by the lessor. It is also clear that the intention of the Legislature in fixing the primary liability of property tax upon the owner of the land in a case not falling under section 146 (3) of the Act is to facilitate the collection of property tax. In the case of a monthly tenant who puts up a temporary shack or asbestos shed on the land and who may at any time terminate the lease at a short notice, it is not always possible for the Corporation to keep track of the lessee and to collect the property tax from him. It is not unreasonable therefore that in a case of this description the Legislature should impose the primary liability for the payment of the property tax upon the lessor of the land and to give him the right of recoupment under section 147. A similar view with regard to the interpretation of section 146 of the Act was expressed by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court consisting of Chagla, C.J., and Shah, J. in *Ramji Kesahuji's case*¹. It was held by the learned judges in that case that where the owner of a land had leased it to a tenant for a period of one year and the tenant had put up a structure upon the land, the owner of the land was primarily liable to pay property tax together with the structure constructed thereon. Counsel on behalf of the appellant challenged the correctness of this decision, but for the reasons already expressed we hold that the ratio of this decision is correct.

We shall, however, assume in favour of the appellant that the meaning of section 146 (2) of the Act is obscure and that it is possible to interpret it as throwing the primary liability for payment of property tax upon the lessee who has constructed a building on the land. Even upon that assumption we think that the view of the law expressed by the Bombay High Court in this case ought not to be interfered with. The reason is that in a case where the meaning of an enactment is obscure, the Court may resort to contemporary construction, that is the construction which the authorities have put upon it by their usage and conduct for a long period of time. The principle applicable is "optima legum interpret est consuetudo"². In *Chilson's case*³, in dealing with the interpretation of section 39 of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, Stephen, J., said

"What weighs with me very greatly in coming to the present conclusion is the practice of the Inland Revenue Commissioners for the past sixteen years. So long ago as 1874 this very point was decided by Sir Thomas Henry, for whose decisions we all have very great respect; and the least that can be said with regard to the case before him is that he pointedly called the attention of the commissioners to the case—the learned magistrate having offered to state a case—an offer refused by the commissioner who by their refusal must be taken to have acquiesced in the decision. That is a very strong contemporaneous exposition of the meaning of the Act."

The same principle was referred to by Lord Blackburn in *Clyde Navigation Trustees v. Laird*⁴. The question in dispute in that case was whether the Clyde Navigation Consolidation Act, 1858 (repealing eight prior Acts) imposed navigation dues on timber floated up the Clyde in logs chained together. From 1858 to 1882 dues had been levied on this class of timber without resistance from the owners, and some judges in the Court of Session suggested that this non-resistance might be considered in construing the statute. On this point Lord Blackburn said:

"I think that submission raises a strong prima facie ground for thinking that there must exist some legal ground on which they (the owners) could not resist. And I think a Court should be cautious, and not decide unnecessarily that there is no such ground. If the Lord President (Inglis) means no more than this when he calls it contemporanea expositio of the statutes which is almost irresistible. I agree with him. I do not think that he means that enjoyment at least for any period short of that which gives rise to prescription, if founded on a mistaken construction of a statute, binds the Court so as to prevent it from giving the true construction. If he did, I should not agree with him, for whom I know of no authority, and I am not aware of any principle, for so saying."

In our opinion, the principle of contemporanea expositio applies to the present case. The Act was passed in the year 1888 and there appears to be a practice followed by the Bombay Municipal Corporation for a very long time of treating the land and the building constructed upon it as single unit and charging the property tax upon the owner of the land in a case where the land is let for a period of less than one year to a tenant who has constructed a building thereon (See *Ramji Kesahuji's case*¹).

For the reasons expressed, we hold that there is no merit in this appeal which is accordingly dismissed with costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT —S. M. SIKRI, R. S. BACHAWAT AND K. S. HEGDE, JJ.

Sheikh Abdul Rehman

v.

Jagat Ram Aryan

.. Respondent.

J. & K. Constitution, section 51 (a) and J. & K. Representation of the People Act (IV of 1957), section 47 (2) (2)—Scope requirement of making and subscribing an oath—Filing of signed oath forms, if amounts to subscribing the oath or affirmation before the Returning officer.

The requirement of making and subscribing of oath or affirmation was inserted in section 51 (a) of the J. & K. Constitution by the Constitution Sixth Amendment Act, 1965. There is ground for believing that Narain Dass and Nikka Ram were not aware of this provision and for this reason they omitted to make or subscribe any oath or affirmation before the Assistant Returning Officer.

Kahan Singh the Assistant Returning Officer was not conversant with these instructions. He did not ask either Narain Dass or Nikka Ram to read the oath or to sign the oath form in his presence. But the breach of these instructions does not entitle them to say that they had made and subscribed the oath before the Assistant Returning Officer when in fact they did not make or subscribe the oath before him.

In the present case signed oath forms along with nomination papers were filed with the Assistant Returning Officer on 23rd January, 1967 before the date fixed for scrutiny. But this fact makes no difference. They neither made nor subscribed the oath or affirmation before the Assistant Returning Officer as required by section 51 (a). On the date fixed for the scrutiny of nominations they were not qualified to be chosen to fill the seat in the Legislature under section 51 (a) of the J. & K. Constitution and their nomination papers were liable to be rejected under section 47 (2) (a) of the J. & K. Representation of the People Act, 1957.

Appeal under section 123 of the Jammu and Kashmir Representation of the People Act, 1957 from the Judgment and Order dated the 29th April, 1968 of the Jammu and Kashmir High Court in Election Petition No. 33 of 1967.

R. N. Bhalgotra and S. S. Khanduja, Advocates, for Appellant.

R. K. Garg, S. G. Agarwal and D. P. Singh, Advocates of M/s. Ramamurthi & Co., and Miss S. Chakrawarti, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bachawat, J.—This appeal is directed against a judgment of a Single Judge of the High Court of Jammu and Kashmir dismissing an election petition for setting aside the election of the respondent Jagat Ram Aryan to the Legislative Assembly of the State of Jammu & Kashmir from the Bahderwah Scheduled Caste Assembly constituency.

1. (1954) 56 Bom L.R. 1132.

The last date for filing the nomination papers was 20th January, 1967. The date of scrutiny of nomination papers was 23rd January, 1967. The date of poll was 21st February, 1967. The date of counting and declaration of result was 1st March, 1967. Several candidates filed their nomination papers from this constituency. The candidates were (1) Jagat Ram Aryan, (2) Faquir Chand, (3) Narain Dass, (4) Nikka Ram, (5) Bhagat Ram, (6) Om Parkash and (7) Swami Raj. The first five filed their nomination papers on 23rd January, 1967 before the Assistant Returning Officer, Kahan Singh, a Tahsildar of Bahderwah. On scrutiny of the nomination papers, the Returning Officer Abdul Gani accepted as valid the nomination papers of Jagat Ram and Faquir Chand and rejected the nomination papers of the remaining candidates for various reasons. At the poll the contest was between Jagat Ram, the congress candidate and Faquir Chand, the National Conference candidate. Respondent Jagat Ram having secured larger number of votes was declared elected.

The appellant, a voter in the constituency, filed the election petition for setting aside the respondent's election on the ground that the nomination papers of Narain Dass, Nikka Ram and Bhagat Ram were improperly rejected. The High Court found that the nomination paper of Bhagat Ram was properly rejected and this finding is no longer challenged.

The nomination paper of Nikka Ram was rejected on three grounds (1) he did not make and subscribe the oath or affirmation as required by section 51 (a) of the Jammu & Kashmir Constitution; (2) he was not a member of a Scheduled Caste and (3) his father's name was not correctly shown in the electoral rolls. The nomination paper of Narain Dass was rejected on two grounds: (1) he did not make and subscribe the oath or affirmation as required by section 51 (a) and (2) he was not a member of a Scheduled Caste. The High Court found that both Narain Dass and Nikka Ram were members of the Scheduled Caste "Megh." It also held that the error in the electoral roll with regard to the name of Nikka Ram's father was not a ground for rejecting his nomination paper having regard to section 44 (4) of the J. & K. Representation of the People Act, 1957. The High Court also rejected the additional contention that Narain Dass had not made a deposit of Rs. 125 in conformity with section 45 (2) of the Act. All these findings are no longer challenged.

The only point now in issue is whether Narain Dass and Nikka Ram made and subscribed the oath or affirmation as required by section 51 (a) of the J. & K. Constitution. Section 51 (a) provides :

"A person shall not be qualified to be chosen to fill a seat in the Legislature unless he—

(a) is a permanent resident of the State, and makes and subscribes before some person authorised in that behalf by the Election Commission of India an oath or affirmation according to the form set out for the purpose in the fifth Schedule."

The Returning Officer and the Assistant Returning Officer were authorised in this behalf by the Election Commission of India by Notification No. 3/4 J. & K. 65 as the persons before whom the oath or affirmation could be made and subscribed. The prescribed form of oath or affirmation to be made by a candidate of the State Legislature is :—

"I, A. B., having been nominated as a candidate to fill a seat in the Legislative Assembly, (or Legislative Council) do swear in the name of God/solemnly affirm that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution of the State as by law established and that I will uphold the sovereignty and integrity of India."

Section 44 of the J. & K. Representation of the People Act, 1957 provides for presentation of nomination papers and prescribes certain requirements for a valid nomination. Section 45 provides for deposits. Section 46 deals with notice of nominations and the time and place for their scrutiny. Section 47 (2) (a) reads:—

“The returning officer shall then examine the nomination papers and shall decide all objections which may be made to any nomination, and may, either on such objection or on his own motion, after such summary enquiry, if any, as he thinks necessary, reject any nomination on any of the following grounds:

(a) that on the date fixed for the scrutiny of nominations the candidate either is not qualified or is disqualified for being chosen to fill the seat under any of the provisions of sections 51 and 69 of the Constitution and Part VI of this Act....”

Form 2-A of the J. & K. Representation of the People (Conduct of election and election petition) Rules, 1957 prescribes the form of nomination paper for election to the legislative assembly.

It is common case that along with their nomination papers both Narain Das and Nikka Ram filed oath forms signed by them. The appellant's case is that at the time of the presentation of their nomination papers both Narain Dass and Nikka Ram made oaths and signed the oath forms in the presence of the Assistant Returning Officer. In support of this case, the appellant examined Narain Dass, Nikka Ram, Abdul Qayum and Abdul Rehman. The respondent's case is that Narain Dass and Nikka Ram did not make or subscribe any oath or affirmation before the Assistant Returning Officer, that the oath forms had been filled up and signed before they were presented to him and were not signed in his presence. In support of his case the respondent examined Kahan Singh, the Assistant Returning Officer, and Abdul Gani, the Returning Officer. The High Court accepted the respondent's case.

It should be remembered that the requirement of making and subscribing an oath or affirmation was inserted in section 51 (a) of the J. & K. Constitution by the Constitution Sixth Amendment Act, 1965. There is ground for believing that Narain Dass and Nikka Ram were not aware of this provision and for this reason they omitted to make or subscribe any oath or affirmation before the Assistant Returning Officer.

Our attention was drawn to Instruction No. 7 (7) in Chapter II at page 19 of the Handbook for Returning Officers, issued by the Election Commission, India, for General Elections, 1967. The aforesaid instruction was as follows:—

“The oath or affirmation has first to be made and then signed by the candidate before the authorised officer. It should be borne in mind that mere signing on the paper on which the form of oath is written out is not sufficient. The candidate must make the oath before the authorised officer. Accordingly he will ask the candidate to read aloud the oath or affirmation in English or the regional language and then to sign and date the paper on which the oath or affirmations written. In the case of illiterate persons who want to contest elections, and who cannot properly make and subscribe the oath or affirmation the authorised officer, should read out the prescribed oath and ask the candidate to repeat the same and thereafter take his thumb-impression on the form on which the oath is printed or cyclostyled in token of his having subscribed the oath. The authorised officer should endorse on this paper that the oath or affirmation has been made and subscribed before the candidate on that day. He will immediately furnish to the candidate a certified copy thereof keeping a copy for year record. The candidate will produce this copy as evidence before you at the time of scrutiny of nomination papers. This copy will be given to the candidate forthwith without his applying for it, nor any fee be charged for it.”

Kahan Singh the Assistant Returning Officer was not conversant with these instructions. He did not ask either Narain Dass or Nikka Ram to read the oath or to sign the oath form in his presence. But the breach of these instructions does not entitle them to say that they had made and subscribed the oath before the Assistant Returning Officer when in fact they did not make or subscribe the oath before him.

It is admitted by the appellant that the oath forms filed by Narain Dass and Nikka Ram did not bear any endorsement of the Assistant Returning Officer stating that the oath or affirmation had been made and subscribed before him nor was any certificate of such endorsement furnished to them. The absence of the endorsement on the oath forms tend to suggest that no oath or affirmation was made and subscribed by them before the Assistant Returning Officer. Neither Narain Dass nor Nikka Ram could produce before the Returning Officer, Abdul Gani any evidence of their making and subscribing the oath or affirmation. Abdul Gani gave them an opportunity to produce affidavits in proof of this fact but they did not file any affidavit or any other evidence before him. The appellant examined witnesses to prove that attempts were made to file such affidavits, but the High Court rightly rejected the testimony of these witnesses. The materials on the record corroborate the testimony of Kahan Singh, the Assistant Returning Officer that Narain Dass and Nikka Ram did not sign the oath forms in his presence and did not make the oath or affirmation before him. Narain Dass and Nikka Ram were Jana Sangh Candidates. Abdul Qayum and Abdul Rehman were their party men. All of them were interested witnesses. Having regard to all the materials on the record it is impossible to prefer their testimony to that of Kahan Singh. In agreement with the High Court we hold that neither Narain Dass and Nikka Ram signed the oath forms before the Assistant Returning Officer nor did they make the oath or affirmation before him.

On 23rd, January, 1967 both Narain Dass and Nikka Ram filed with the Assistant Returning Officer signed and filled up oath forms along with their nomination papers. In our opinion, this was not sufficient compliance with the requirement of section 51 (a).

In *Pasupati Nath v. Harihar Prasad*¹, this Court held that the nomination paper was liable to be rejected under section 36 (2) (a) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 corresponding to section 47 (2) (a) of the J. & K. Representation of the People Act, 1957 if the qualification required by Article 173 (a) of the Constitution corresponding to section 51 (a) of the J. & K. Constitution did not exist on the date of scrutiny of nominations. In that case no signed oath form was attached to the nomination paper or filed before the date fixed for scrutiny. In the present case signed oath forms along with nomination papers were filed with the Assistant Returning Officer on 23rd January, 1967 before the date fixed for scrutiny. But this fact makes no difference. They neither made nor subscribed the oath or affirmation before the Assistant Returning Officer as required by section 51 (a). On the date fixed for the scrutiny of nominations they were not qualified to be chosen to fill the seat in the Legislature under section 51 (a) of the J. & K. Constitution and their nomination papers were liable to be rejected under section 47 (2) (a) of the J. & K. Representation of the People Act, 1957.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT —MR. M. HIDAYATULLAH, Chief Justice AND G. K. MITTER, J.
 Patel Bhuder Mavji, etc. .. *Appellants

v.

Jat Mamdaji Kalaji (dead) by his legal representatives etc. .. Respondents.

Saurashtra Land Reforms Act (XXV of 1951) and Saurashtra Agricultural Debtor's Relief Act (XXIII of 1954)—Object—Change in the relationship between the Girasdar and tenants—Rights of debtors and creditors—Scaling down of debts and restoration of property to debtors—Occupancy Certificates given to the mortgagees, if extinguish the title of the mortgagors (debtors).

The main question for determination is whether the debtors had lost all their interest in the lands mortgaged by reason of the operation of the Saurashtra Land Reforms Act XXV of 1951 and as such were not competent to make an application under the Saurashtra Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, 1954.

The object of the Land Reforms Act, as is the improvement of the land revenue administration and putting an end to the Girasdari system and granting of occupancy rights to the Girasdars and/or their tenants, whereas the Debtors Relief Act governs the rights of the debtors and creditors inter se inter alia by scaling down the debts and providing restoration of their property to debtors. The rights of the debtors in this case were not extinguished under the Land Reforms Act and it was open to the Court exercising jurisdiction under the Debtors Relief Act to scale down the debt and provide for restoration of the land in possession of the mortgagees to the mortgagors on taking fresh accounts between the parties and directing payments by one party to the other as has been done in this case. The fact that they had all along paid the revenue and other dues to the State, if any, would not clothe them with the right of the tenants. Under section 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgagee in possession must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Government revenue, all other charges of a public nature and all rent accruing due in respect thereof during such possession. But even if they could not meet the revenue and other State dues out of the income and paid the same out of their own pockets in order to save the security, the mortgagees were only entitled under section 72 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act to add the amount to the mortgage money. They could not by paying such rent or revenue acquire a title in derogation of the rights of the mortgagors and the payments, if any, are to be taken into account when the mortgagors seek to redeem the property. That apart it has not been shown that the debtors were awarded any compensation in respect of the khalsa lands given in mortgage to the appellants. The occupancy certificates, if any, given by the Special Mamlatdar to the appellants cannot under the provisions of the Land Reforms Act extinguish the title of the mortgagors.

Appeals by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 28th April, 1965 of the Gujarat High Court in Civil Revision Applications Nos. 88 and 93 of 1961.

P.B. Patwari, Senior Advocate (K.L. Hathi, Advocate of M/s. Hathi & Co., and S.K. Begga and Shureshta Begga, Advocates, with him), for Appellants.

P.M. Rawal, Advocate, and P.G. Bhartari, Advocate for M/s. J.B. Dadachanji & Co., for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mitter, J.—These are two appeals by Special Leave from judgments of the Gujarat High Court, dated 28th April, 1965 in Civil Revision Application Nos. 88 and 93 of 1961. As the questions involved in both the applications were the same, the High Court delivered the main judgment in Civil Revision Application No. 88 of 1961 and referred to the same in its judgment in Civil Revision Application No. 93 of 1961. The two applications in the High Court arose out of certain proceedings under the Saurashtra Agricultural Debtors Relief Act. The applicants before the High Court and the appellants before this Court were mortgagees in possession of certain lands belonging to the debtors who are now represented by the respondents. The main question before the High Court was and before us is, whether the debtors had lost all their interest in the lands mortgaged by reason of the operation of the Saurashtra Land Reforms Act XXV of 1951 and as such were not competent to make an application under the Saurashtra Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, 1954. Hereinafter the two Acts will be referred to as the Land Reforms Act and the Debtors Relief Act.

It is not necessary to deal separately with the facts in the two appeals as the course of proceedings in both cases were similar giving rise to common questions of law. We therefore propose to take note of the facts in Civil Revision Application No. 88 of 1961. The creditors, appellants before us, were in possession of the properties—the subject matter of litigation, under two mortgage deeds of a Samvat years 1997 and 1999. The first mortgage was for Rs. 991 and the second for Rs. 1,011. The mortgages were with possession and the mortgagees have been appropriating the income of the usufruct thereof for the last 50 years. There is nothing to show whether they were under a liability under the documents of mortgage to pay the revenue and other dues to the State but there is no dispute that they have been doing so for many years past. The lands were situate in Bajana State with its own peculiar land tenure system known as the Girasdari system.

The Land Reforms Act which came into force on 23rd July, 1951 purported to effect important and far reaching changes in the said system. The Preamble to the Act shows that its object was “the improvement of land revenue administration and for ultimately putting an end to the Girasdari system” and the regulation of the relationship between the Girasdari and their tenants, to enable the latter to become occupants of the land held by them and to provide for the payment of compensation to the Girasdars for the extinguishment of their rights. It will be noted at once that the Act aimed at regulating the relationship of persons in the position of landholders and their tenants and to enable the tenants to become the real owners of the soil under direct tenancy from the State. It was not meant to extinguish or affect the rights of the landholders as mortgagors unless the persons in occupation had become tenants either by contract or by operation of law.

The Act came into force in the whole of Saurashtra area of the State of Gujarat. Under section 2 (15) ‘Girasdar’ meant any talukdar, bhagdar, bhayat, cadet or mal girasia, etc. Under section 2 (13) ‘estate’ meant all land of whatever description held by a Girasdar including uncultivable waste whether used for the purpose of agriculture or not and ‘Gharkhod’ meant any land reserved by or allotted to a Girasdar before the 20th May, 1950 or for being cultivated personally and in his personal cultivation. A tenant under section 2 (30) meant an agriculturist who held land on lease from a Girasdar or a person claiming through him and included a person who was deemed to be a tenant under the provisions of the Act. Under section 3 the provisions of the Act were to have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law for the time being in force. Section 4 provided that “all land of whatever description held by a Girasdar is and shall continue to be liable to the payment of land revenue to the State of Gujarat.” Section 5 classified Girasdars according to the measure of their holding and under clause (c) thereof a Girasdar was to belong to class C if the total area of agricultural land comprised in his estate did not exceed Ac. 120-00. Section 6 (1) of the Act laid down that any person who was lawfully cultivating any land belonging to a Girasdar was to be deemed for the purposes of the Act to be the tenant if he was not a member of the Girasdar’s family or a servant on wages payable in cash or in kind, etc., or a mortgagee in possession. The Explanation to the sub-section however shows that a person who was otherwise deemed to be a tenant was not to cease to be such only on the ground that he was a mortgagee in possession. Under section 19 it was open to any Girasdar to apply to the Mamlatdar for the allotment to him of land for personal cultivation within a certain fixed time. Such application had to be made in a specified form giving the prescribed particulars. The applicant had to show inter alia, the area and location of the land in respect of which the allotment was prayed for, the right under which he claimed the land and full particulars of his estate as also the area of khalsa land, if any in his possession. Under 20 of the Act it was for the Mamlatdar to issue notice to the tenant or tenants concerned on receipt of an application under section 19 and make an enquiry in the prescribed manner after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard. After such inquiry the Mamlatdar was required to pass an order making an allotment to the Girasdar of such land as may be specified in the order and this was to be followed by the issue of an occupancy certificate to a Girasdar in respect of his Gharkhed and the land, if any, allotted to him under the section. Under sub-section (4) no Girasdar was to obtain possession of any land held by a tenant except in accordance with the order under the section. Section 24 laid down the total area of the holding which a C class Girasdar could be allotted for personal cultivation. Sub-section (2) of the section provided that a C class Girasdar could not be allotted any khalsa land if it was held by a tenant. Chapter V containing sections 31 to 41 provided for acquisition of occupancy rights by tenants and section 31 laid down the consequences which were to ensue in the wake of grant of occupancy certificates. A tenant who was granted such a certificate was to be free of all relations and obligations as tenant to the Girasdar. The Girasdar in his turn was to be entitled to receive and be paid compensation as provided in the Act. Under section 36 the right, title and interest of the Girasdar in respect of an occupancy holding were to be deemed to have been extinguished on the payment by the Government of the last instalment of compensation. The functions of a Mamlatdar are laid down in section 46 of the Act. It was for him to decide inter alia what land should be allotted to a Girasdar for personal cultivation and to make such allotment to decide whether a person was or was not a tenant, to determine whether a tenancy shall be terminated under section 12 and many other matters. Under section 51 an appeal lay to the Collector against any order of the Mamlatdar.

The above analysis of the relevant provisions of the Land Reforms Act amply demonstrate the manner in which a change was to be brought about in the relationship between the Girasdar and his tenants and the rights which they were respectively to acquire under the orders of the Special Mamlatdar. The said officer had no jurisdiction to terminate any rights under mortgage.

The full text of the order of the Mamlatdar on the application of the Girasdars (the respondents to the appeal) is not before us. The copy of the order on the respondents' application marked Exhibit 8/1 bearing date 16th January, 1964 was handed over to us. It appears therefrom that the Girasdar was allowed to keep as Gharkhed certain lands by paying six times the assessment in the treasury but with regard to section Nos. 684 and 685 (the lands given to the mortgagees) the same were held by the Mamlatdar to be khalsa and full assessment thereof was ordered to be taken. The Mamlatdar further noted that there was no need to grant any occupancy rights.

On 2nd May, 1955 the respondents applied for adjustment of their debt to the Civil Judge exercising jurisdiction under the Debtors Relief Act. The creditors relied on the order of the Special Mamlatdar declaring the lands as khalsa as fortified by the decision of the Bhayati Court of Bajana State. It was contended that the lands having been declared khalsa the debtors had lost their rights therein. Reliance was also placed on Forms 7 and 8 by Counsel for the appellants to show that his clients had acquired proprietary rights in the said khalsa lands. According to the Civil Judge the judgment of the Bhayati Court had merely decided that the Bajana State had no title or interest in the land in question and that the Jats Mul-Girasdars were independent proprietors thereof. The Judge however remarked that it was not for the Special Mamlatdar to decide any question as to title and he had merely ordered recovery of full assessment from the persons in actual possession and this in no way vested any title in the creditors. In the result the Civil Judge directed the restoration of the lands to the debtors subject to certain limitations and conditions.

The creditors went up in appeal to the Assistant Judge, Surendranagar. There it was contended on their behalf that the mortgages had been extinguished by the title of the paramount power and on the date of the application under the Debtors Relief Act there was no subsisting mortgage between them and the respondents. Reliance was placed on the decision of the Special Mamlatdar declaring the land to be khalsa land as extinguishing the mortgages by forfeiture of the land to the State. The Assistant Judge dealt with the question at some length and came to the conclusion that the mortgages had not been extinguished and not being tenants within the meaning of section 6 the creditors could not have got an occupancy certificate in respect of the lands in their possession. He further stressed on the decision of the Special Mamlatdar to show that only the liability for the full assessment of the lands was indicated without any disturbance to the rights inter se between the mortgagors and the mortgagees. Dealing with the question of the advances made and the amounts still due to the creditors, it was ordered that the debtors should pay Rs. 1,698 in twelve yearly instalments and the award was directed to be modified accordingly.

The matter was then taken up by way of Civil Revision to the High Court of Gujarat. The High Court arrived at the following conclusions :—

(a) The decision of the Bhayati Court merely declared that the State was entitled to recover taxes of various kinds from the lands in possession of tenants or mortgagors. There was no decision that the lands in possession of the mortgagees were confiscated to the State.

(b) The Special Mamlatdar rejected the application of the debtor and directed the lands in possession of the different creditors to be treated as Government lands as according to him the decision of the Bhayati Court amounted to a forfeiture of the lands by the Bajana State.

(c) It was not necessary to test the correctness of the decision of the Special Mamlatdar as in view of the provisions in the Debtors Relief Act which was an Act subsequent to the Land Reforms Act the provisions of the latter Act were to prevail.

In the result the High Court affirmed the order of the Assistant Judge in appeal directing possession to be handed over to the debtors.

Before us great stress was laid on the decision of the Special Mamlatdar and it was argued that subject to any appeal from his order his decision was binding on the parties and not having gone up in appeal from the order of the Special Mamlatdar the debtors could not be allowed to agitate their rights to the lands ignoring the said order. We have not before us the full text of the order of the Special Mamlatdar relied on by the appellants nor are we satisfied from copies of Form 7 prescribed under Rule 81 of the Rules promulgated under the Land Reforms Act that there was any adjudication of the rights of the debtors and the creditors inter se. In our view all that the Special Mamlatdar decided and had jurisdiction to decide under the Act was, whether the debtors could be given occupancy certificates or allotted any land. Gharkhed and the Special Mamlatdar merely ordered that the lands being khalsa full assessment had to be taken in respect of them and there was no need to grant occupancy rights. In order to get such occupancy rights the creditors had to show that they had become tenants which obviously they could not be under the provisions of section 6 of the Land Reforms Act. The fact that they had all along paid the revenue and other dues to the State, if any, would not clothe them with the right of the tenants. Under section 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgagee in possession must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Government revenue, all other charges of a public nature and all rent accruing due in respect thereof during such possession. We do not know whether there was a contract in the contrary and whether the mortgagors had covenanted to pay the rent and the revenue. But even if they could not meet the revenue and other State dues out of the income and paid the same out of their own pockets in order to save the security, the mortgagees were only entitled under section 72 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act to add the amount to the mortgage money. They could not by paying such rent or revenue acquire a title in derogation of the rights of the mortgagors and the payments, if any, are to be taken into account when the mortgagors seek to redeem the property.

That apart, it has not been shown to us that the debtors were awarded any compensation in respect of the khalsa lands given in mortgage to the appellants. The occupancy certificates, if any, given by the Special Mamlatdar to the appellants cannot under the provisions of the Land Reforms Act extinguish the title of the mortgagors. Whether the mortgagors as C class Girasdar can be allowed to retain land in excess of the limits specified in the Act and whether as a result of the restoration of the lands to them by the award such limit will be exceeded in this case, are not questions for us to consider. The right of the mortgagors not being extinguished under any provision of law to which our attention was drawn, no fault can be found with the award as finally modified by the judgment of the Assistant Judge and effect must be given thereto. In our view, it is not necessary to consider the point canvassed at length before the High Court and dealt with in the judgment of the said Court as to whether the provisions of the Debtors Relief Act over-ride those in the Land Reforms Act. The object of the two Acts are different. The object of the Land Reforms Act, as already noted is the improvement of the land revenue administration and putting an end to the Girasdari system and granting of occupancy rights to the Girasdar and/or their tenants, whereas the Debtors Relief Act governs the rights of the debtors and creditors inter se inter alia by scaling down the debts and providing for restoration of their property to debtors. In our view, the rights of the debtors in this case were not extinguished under the Land Reforms Act and it was open to the Court exercising jurisdiction under the Debtors Relief Act to scale down the debt and provide for restoration of the land in possession of the mortgagees to the mortgagors on taking fresh accounts between the parties and directing payments by one party to the other as has been done in this case.

The appeals therefore fail and are dismissed with costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J. M. SHELAT AND V. BHARGAVA, JJ.

The Praga Tools Corporation

v.

G. V. Imanual and others.

.. Respondents.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 226—Writ of mandamus—When can lie—Company non-statutory body incorporated under Companies Act—Whether writ of mandamus lies against the company—Agreement between company and its workmen—Court holding writ of mandamus against company not maintainable but declaring agreement to be illegal and void—Validity of—No relief by way of declaration as to invalidity of agreement can be granted.

No doubt, Article 226 provides that every High Court shall have power to issue to any person or authority orders and writs including writs in the nature of habeas corpus mandamus, etc. or any of them for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution and for any other purpose. But it is well understood that a mandamus lies to secure the performance of a public or Statutory Body in the performance of which the one who applies for it has a sufficient legal interest. Thus, an application for mandamus will not lie for an order of reinstatement to an office which is essentially of a private character nor can such an application be maintained to secure performance of obligations owed by a company towards its workmen or to resolve any dispute. The condition precedent for the issue of mandamus is that there is one claiming it a legal right to the performance of a legal duty by one against whom it is sought. An order of mandamus is, in form, a command directed to a person, corporation or/and inferior tribunal requiring him or them to do a particular thing therein specified which appertains to his or their office and is in the nature of a public duty. It is, however, not necessary that the person or the authority on whom the statutory duty is imposed need be a public official or an official body. A mandamus can be issued to an official of a society to compel him to carry out the terms of the statute under or by which the society is constituted or governed and also to companies or corporation to carry out duties placed on them by the statute authorising their undertakings. A mandamus would also lie against a company constituted by a statute for the purpose of fulfilling public responsibilities.

On facts held, the company being a non-statutory body and one incorporated under the Companies Act there was neither a statutory nor public duty imposed on it by a statute in respect of which enforcement could be sought by means of a mandamus, nor was therein its workmen any corresponding legal right for enforcement of any such statutory or public duty held. The High Court was right in holding that no writ petition for a mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus could lie against the company.

Declaration of invalidity can be issued against a person or an authority or a Corporation where the impugned act is in violation of or contrary to a statute under which it is set up or governed or a public duty or responsibility imposed on such person, authority or body by such a statute.

Once the writ petition was held to be misconceived on the ground that it could not lie against a company which was neither a statutory company nor one having public duties or responsibilities imposed on it by a statute no relief by way of a declaration as to invalidity of an impugned agreement between it and its employees could be granted. The High Court in these circumstances ought to have left the workmen to resort to the remedy available to them under the Industrial Disputes Act by raising an industrial dispute thereunder. The only course left open to the High Court was therefore to dismiss it. No such declaration against a company registered under the Companies Act and not set up under any statute or having any public duties and responsibilities to perform under such a statute could be issued in writ proceedings in respect of an agreement which was essentially of a private character between it and its workmen. Held, The High Court was in error in granting the said declaration.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 16th April, 1965 of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Writ Appeal No. 37 of 1964.*

S. V. Gupte, Senior Advocate (R. Thaiagarajan, Advocate of M/s. Aiyar & Aiyar, with him), for Appellant.

Janardan Sharma, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shelat, J.—The Praga Tools Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the company) is a company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. At the material time, however, the Union Government and the Government of Andhra Pradesh between them held 56 per cent and 32 per cent of its shares respectively and the balance of 12 per cent shares were held by private individuals. Begin the largest shareholder, the Union Government had the power to nominate the company's directors. Even so, being registered under the Companies Act and governed by the provisions of that Act, the company is a separate legal entity and cannot be said to be either a Government Corporation or an industry run by or under the authority of the Union Government.

At the material time there were two rival workmen's unions in the company, the Praga Tools Employees' Union and the Praga Tools Corporation Mazdoor Sabha (hereinafter referred to as the union and the sabha respectively). On 1st July, 1961 a settlement was arrived at between the company and the said union under which the workmen inter alia agreed to observed industrial truce for a period of three years and not to resort to strikes, stoppage of work or go-slow tactics. On 10th December, 1962 the company and the said union entered into a supplementary settlement under which the company agreed not to retrench or lay-off any of the workmen during the said period of truce on an assurance from the said union of co-operation and willingness of the workmen to carry out alternative tasks assigned to them even if they were in a slightly lower cadre without loss of emoluments. The said two settlements were arrived at and recorded in the presence of the Commissioner of Labour under sections 2 (j) and 18 (1) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 and were to be in force as aforesaid until 1st July, 1964. On 20th December, 1963, however, the company entered into an agreement with the said union to which the said sabha was not a party. The agreement recited that there were several disputes between the company and the union and that some of them were the subject-matter of conciliation proceedings and some were pending arbitration or adjudication. Clause (1) provided that the said agreements dated 1st July, 1961 and 10th December, 1962 to the extent that they were inconsistent with this agreement would stand automatically repealed or modified by this agreement. Clause (6) stated that there was an immediate, unavoidable need for reducing substantially the overhead expenditure of the company and for effecting economy and therefore notwithstanding the agreement dated 10th December, 1962 "both the parties have prepared a list of the categories and persons who would be retrenched after careful consideration." The said list was attached to the agreement as Annexure VI. Clause (6) also provided that the agreement dated 10th December, 1962 stood modified so as to allow the said retrenchment to take place immediately in accordance with law. The clause further provided that in order to mitigate the consequences of the proposed retrenchment the company had evolved a scheme of voluntary retirement with terminal benefits superior to those provided under the Industrial Disputes Act, but the scheme of voluntary retirement would be available to the workmen only for a period of 10 days from the date of the agreement. It further provided that the company and the said union had agreed that an attempt would be made to rehabilitate the retrenched persons by helping them to obtain alternative employment and the company had for the purpose contacted public sector and other industries and in particular the Heavy Engineering Corporation, Ranchi for absorption as far as possible of the retrenched personnel. The effect of this agreement was to enable the company, notwithstanding the two earlier settlements, to carry out retrenchment of 92 workmen mentioned in Annexure VI thereto with effect from 1st January, 1964.

Respondent 1 and 40 other workmen thereupon filed a writ petition under Article 226 in the High Court of Andhra Pradesh challenging the validity of the said agreement impeaching therein the company, the said union and the Regional Assistant Commissioner as respondents. The petition claimed a writ of mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus or any other order or direction restraining the respondents to implement or enforce the said agreement. The writ petition was in the first instance heard by a learned Single Judge of the High Court before whom the workmen raised the following contentions; (1) that the said agreement dated 20th December, 1963 was invalid as it was entered into by the union in collusion with the company and was in violation of the said two earlier settlements, (2) that there could be no industrial dispute within the meaning of section 2 (k) of the Act as the said two earlier settlements, not having been terminated under section 19 (2), were in force, that therefore there could not be a valid conciliation under section 12 and accordingly the fact of the Conciliation Officer having signed the impugned agreement gave no binding force to it, (3) that the retrenchment of the 92 workmen was illegal and void as it was in breach of section 25 (f) inasmuch as no notice thereof was given to the appropriate Government, and (4) that the company being under the management of the Union Government, the appropriate Government in regard to the dispute was the Central Government and not the State Government and consequently the impugned agreement which was signed by the Conciliation Officer appointed by the State Government was not valid and no retrenchment could validly be effected under the force of such agreement.

The learned Single Judge negatived these contentions holding that the company was neither an industry run by or under the authority of the Union Government nor under its management but being a company registered under the Companies Act the appropriate Government was the State Government. He also held that there was no proof of the said union having entered into the impugned agreement in collusion with the company. He further held that the union by its letter dated 5th April, 1963, had raised an industrial dispute and had thereby requested that the question of retrenchment should be settled between the parties, that the said dispute with the consent of the company and the union was brought for conciliation before the Conciliation Officer and that the impugned agreement, having been brought about in the course of the said conciliation proceedings, was binding on all workmen including the petitioners in the writ petition despite the fact that they were members of the Sabha and not of the Union. In this view the learned Single Judge held that it was not necessary for him to decide the preliminary objection raised by the company that no writ petition for a mandamus could lie against it. He dismissed the writ petition on merits on the basis of the aforesaid findings given by him. 28 out of the said 41 workmen who had filed the writ petition filed a Letters Patent Appeal against the said judgment. The Division Bench of the High Court which heard the appeal held; (1) that since the dispute relating to the company's right to retrenchment was already settled under section 18 (1) by the said supplementary settlement of 10th December, 1962, no industrial dispute could be said to exist or arise until the said settlement was duly terminated under section 19 (2), that therefore there could be no valid conciliation proceedings in respect of the question of retrenchment and that the impugned agreement permitting the company to retrench, though it bore the signature of the Conciliation Officer, was not a valid agreement; (2) that so long as the earlier settlements were not terminated they held the field, and (3) that the said letter dated 5th April, 1963 relied on by the learned Single Judge as having raised an industrial dispute regarding retrenchment did not in fact contain or raise any such question. The Division Bench held that the said letter raised only the question of revision of wage-structure and other demands but not the question of retrenchment. The letter of 29th July, 1963 of the Conciliation Officer to the company relied on by the company also referred to the demands contained in the said letter of 5th April, 1963, namely, the revision of wage-structure dearness allowance, promotion and other matters, but not the question of the company's right to retrenchment. The Division Bench therefore held that there was nothing on record to show that retrenchment was the subject-matter of any conciliation before the conciliation officer and therefore any agreement conferring on the company the right to retrench so long as the said earlier settlements were not terminated was invalid in spite of the Conciliation Officer having given his assent to and affixed his signature on it. The learned Judges, however, held that the company being one registered under the Companies Act and not having any statutory duty or function to perform was not one against which a writ petition for a mandamus or any other writ could lie. No such petition could also lie against the conciliation officer as on the facts of the case that officer did not have to implement the impugned agreement. The Division Bench, however, held that though the writ petition was not maintainable it could grant a declaration in favour of three workmen, namely, appellants 6, 16 and 25 before it, that the impugned agreement was illegal and void and dismissed the writ petition subject to the said declaration. The company challenges in this appeal by Special Leave the validity of this judgment making such a declaration.

Thus the only question which arises in this appeal is whether in the view that it took that the writ petition was not maintainable against the company the High Court could still grant the said declaration.

In our view the High Court was correct in holding that the writ petition filed under Article 226 claiming against the company mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus was misconceived and not maintainable. The writ obviously was claimed against the company and not against the Conciliation Officer in respect of any public or statutory duty imposed on him by the Act as it was not he but the company who sought to implement the impugned agreement. No doubt, Article 226 provides that every High Court shall have power to issue to any person or authority orders and writs including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, etc. or any of them for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution and for any other purpose. But it is well understood that a mandamus lies to secure the performance of a public or statutory duty in the performance of which the one who applies for it has a sufficient legal interest. Thus, an application for mandamus will not lie for an order of re-instatement to an office which is essentially of a private character nor can such an application be maintained to secure performance of obligations owed by a company towards its workmen or to resolve any private dispute. [See *Sohan Lal v. Union of India*¹]. In *Regina v. Industrial Court and others*², mandamus was refused against the Industrial Court though set up under the Industrial Courts Act, 1919 on the ground that the reference for arbitration made to it by a Minister was not one under the Act but a private reference. "This Court has never exercised a general power" said Bruce, J. in *R. v. Lewisham Union*³, "to enforce the performance of their statutory duties by public bodies on the application of anybody who chooses to apply for a mandamus. It has always required that the applicant for a mandamus should have a legal and a specific right to enforce the performance of those duties". Therefore, the condition precedent for the issue of mandamus is that there is in one claiming it a legal right to the performance of a legal duty by one against whom it is sought. An order of mandamus is, in form, a command directed to a person, Corporation or an inferior tribunal requiring him or them to do a particular thing therein specified which appertains to his or their office and is in the nature of a public duty. It is, however, not necessary that the person or the authority on whom the statutory duty is imposed need be a public official or an official body. A mandamus can issue, for instance, to an official of a society to compel him to carry out the terms of the statute under or by which the society is constituted or governed and also to companies or Corporations to carry out duties placed on them by the statutes authorising their undertakings. A mandamus would also lie against a company constituted by a statute for the purposes of fulfilling public responsibilities Cf. Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd Edn.), Vol. II, page 52 and onwards].

The company being a non-statutory body and one incorporated under the Companies Act there was neither a statutory nor a public duty imposed on it by a statute in respect of which enforcement could be sought by means of a mandamus, nor was there in its workmen any corresponding legal right for enforcement of any such statutory or public duty. The High Court therefore, was right in holding that no writ petition for a mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus could lie against the company.

The grievance of the company, however, is that though the High Court held rightly that no such petition was maintainable, it nevertheless granted a declaration in favour of three of the said workmen, a declaration which it could not issue once it held that the said writ petition was misconceived. The argument was that such a declaration, if at all, could only issue against public bodies or companies or Corporations set up or controlled by statutes in respect of acts done by them contrary to or in breach of the provisions of such statutes. If a public authority purports to dismiss an employee otherwise than in accordance with mandatory procedural requirements or on grounds other than those sanctioned by the statute the Courts would have jurisdiction to declare its act a nullity. Thus, where a Hospital Services' Board dismissed a clerk for reasons not authorised by the relevant conditions of service a declaration was granted to the applicant by the House of Lords. [*Mc. Ghelland v. Northern Ireland General Health Services Boards*¹]. Even where the statutory power of dismissal is not made subject to express procedural requirements or limited to prescribe grounds Courts have granted a declaration that it was invalidly exercised if the authority has failed to observe rules of natural justice or has acted capriciously or in bad faith or for impliedly unauthorised purposes. [See *Ridge v. Baldwin*² and *Short v. Poole Corporation*³]. Declarations of invalidity have often been founded on successful assertions that a public duty has not been complied with. [See *Attorney-General v. St. Ives R.D.C.*⁴]. It is, therefore, fairly clear that such a declaration can be issued against a person or an authority or a Corporation where the impugned act is in violation of or contrary to a statute under which it is set up or governed or a public duty or responsibility imposed on such person, authority or body by such a statute.

The High Court however, relied on two decisions of this Court as justifying it to issue the said declaration. The two decisions are *Bidi Bidi, Leaves and Tobacco Merchants' Association v. The State of Bombay*⁵, and *A.B. Abdul Kadir v. The State of Kerala*⁶. But neither of these two decisions is a parallel case which could be relied on. In the first case, the declaration was granted not against a company, as in the present case, but against the State Government and the declaration was as regards the invalidity of certain clauses of a notification issued by the Government in pursuance of power under section 5 of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948 on the ground that the said clauses were beyond the purview of that section. In the second case also, certain rules made under the Cochin Tobacco Act of 1981 (M.E.) and the Travancore Tobacco Regulation of 1987 (M.E.) were declared void hab initio. These cases were therefore not cases where writ petitions were held to be not maintainable as having been filed against a company and despite that fact a declaration of invalidity of an impugned agreement having been granted. In our view once the writ petition was held to be misconceived on the ground that it could not lie against a company which was neither a statutory company nor one having public duties or responsibilities imposed on it by a statute, no relief by way of a declaration as to invalidity of an impugned agreement between it and its employees could be granted. The High Court in these circumstances ought to have left the workmen to resort to the remedy available to them under the Industrial Disputes Act by raising an industrial dispute thereunder. The only course left open to the High Court was therefore to dismiss it. No such declaration against a company registered under the Companies Act and not set up under any statute or having any public duties and responsibilities to perform under such a statute could be issued in writ proceedings in respect of an agreement which was essentially of a private character between it and its workmen. The High Court, therefore, was in error in granting the said declaration.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed and the said declaration set aside. In the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs.

Uttar Pradesh (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act (III of 1947), sections 3 (3) and 7-F—Scope—Suit for eviction—Permission to institute—State Government cancelling the permission given by the Commissioner—Suit, if becomes incompetent—Judicial process.

The question for determination is whether a suit for eviction of a tenant by a landlord, after obtaining the permission of the Commissioner under sub-section (3) of section 3 of the Uttar Pradesh (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947 becomes incompetent on the making of an order by the State Government under section 7-F cancelling the permission to sue given by the Commissioner. Held, that once a suit is validly instituted it must take its course and the decree passed therein must be given effect to unless the words of the statute render the decree inexecutable or liable to re-opening in a proper case on grounds mentioned in the statute. It was pointed out by this Supreme Court in Bhagwan Das's case, C.A. No. 1617 of 1958 dated 27th September, 1968, that the Legislature had provided for a decree for eviction of a tenant passed before the commencement of the Act liable to be rendered in executable unless it was based on any of the grounds mentioned in sub-section (3). The Legislature might, if so advised, have provided for a similar result in a case where the State Government had revoked the permission to sue granted by the Commissioner. It would make a mockery of the judicial process if it were to be held on the language of the sections as they stand at present, that irrespective of a decree being passed by the trial Court being upheld in appeal by the High Court or by this Court, the order of the State Government would nullify all proceedings.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 13th December, 1968 of the Allahabad High Court in Second Appeal No. 3474 of 1963.

J.P. Goyal, G.N. Wantoo and V.G. Parashar, Advocates, for Appellant.

K.P. Gupta, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mitter, J.—The question in this appeal by Special Leave is, whether a suit for eviction of a tenant by a landlord, after obtaining the permission of the Commissioner under sub-section (3) of section 3 of the Uttar Pradesh (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947 becomes incompetent, on the making of an order by the State Government under section 7-F cancelling the permission to sue given by the Commissioner.

The relevant facts for disposal of this appeal are as follows. The respondent-landlord obtained permission of the District Magistrate to file a suit for eviction against the appellant under section 3 (1) of the Act on 29th May, 1961. The tenant went up to the Commissioner of Agra Division under section 3 (2) of the Act. On 26th July, 1961, the Commissioner dismissed the revision application. The tenant then filed a further revision application to the State Government under section 7-F of the Act. Before the disposal of the last revision application, the landlord filed a suit for ejectment on 18th January, 1962, in the Court of the Munsif, Etah in pursuance of the permission given by the Commissioner. On 16th June, 1962, the State Government set aside the order of the Commissioner and revoked the permission granted to the landlord. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif of Etah on 17th November, 1962. The Civil Judge of Etah allowed the appeal of the landlord on 28th September, 1963. The tenant went up in Second Appeal to the High Court. On 13th December, 1968, a learned single Judge of the Allahabad High Court dismissed the tenant's appeal following a judgment of this Court in *Bhagwan Das v. Paras Nath*¹. Learned Counsel for the appellants contended that some aspects of the question had not been raised before and/or considered by this Court on the prior occasion which might have induced the Court to come to a different conclusion. Having heard Counsel at some length, we are convinced that there is no merit in his submissions. We respectfully agree with the decision in *Bhagwan Das's case*¹, and are satisfied that Counsel has not been able to show that any relevant aspect of the question was not considered on the former occasion.

There was no unanimity of opinion in the Allahabad High Court as regards the effect of an order passed by the State Government contrary to the Commissioner's order on the basis of which a suit for eviction was filed in the subordinate Courts. So far as the High Court was concerned, the matter was laid at rest by a Full Bench decision in the case of *Bansi Ram v. Mantri Lal*². This Court while not concurring with all that was said in *Bansi Ram's case*², agreed with the Full Bench that a suit validly instituted after obtaining permission as required by section 3 did not cease to be maintainable even if the State Government thereafter revoked the permission granted.

Section 3 (1) of the Act restricts the rights of landlords to institute suits for eviction of tenants to cases covered by clauses (a) to (g) of that sub-section except with the permission of the District Magistrate. The words of this sub-section are imperative and show that no such suit can be filed without the permission of the said authority. Under the Transfer of Property Act the only pre-requisite to the institution of a valid suit for eviction of a monthly tenant is the service of a proper notice to quit. The landlord is not obliged to make out any ground for such eviction. Where he seeks to eject a tenant and can make out a case which falls within any of the sub-clauses (a) to (g), he need not approach the District Magistrate for permission to sue. It follows that the District Magistrate must consider the justification for the institution of a suit in all other cases. His order is expressly made subject to any order under sub-section (3) of the section. In order that power under the latter sub-section can be exercised, it is necessary for the aggrieved party to apply to the Commissioner to revise the order of the Magistrate by making an application under sub-section (2) of the section within 30 days from the date on which the order is communicated to him. Sub-section (3) enjoins upon the Commissioner to hear the application, as far as may be, within six weeks from the date of making it and his powers in this regard are not subject to any limitation. A landlord may file a suit for eviction on getting the permission of the District Magistrate to do so but he runs the risk of such permission being revoked by the Commissioner in which case his suit will become infructuous as by the express words of sub-section (1) the permission of the District Magistrate is made subject to revision by the Commissioner. The question arises whether the same result will follow if the order of the Commissioner is in its turn upset by the State Government acting under section 7-F and whether sub-section (4) of section 3 should be so construed. In our opinion, an order under section 7-F cannot affect a suit filed prior thereto if the landlord has obtained the necessary sanction from the Commissioner. The relevant portion of the sections are quoted below* for facility of reference.

Under sub-section (1) the maintainability of a suit on grounds other than those mentioned in clauses (a) to (g) is made expressly subject to an order under sub-section (3). It will be noted that the Legislature has conferred various powers on the State Government besides the power to reverse orders under section 3. For reasons of its own the Legislature did not provide that the right to file a suit would be subject to or dependent upon an order under section 7-F in the same way as an order under section 3 (3).

Various reasons were given by this Court in *Bhagwan Das's case*¹ for coming to the conclusion that section 7-F was not to be construed in the same way as section 3 (3) and we are in entire agreement therewith. When a landlord files a suit for eviction only with the permission of the District Magistrate he knows that it would be open to the tenant to ask for revocation of the permission by an application to the Commissioner within 30 days from the communication of the order of the District Magistrate to him. He is also aware that the Commissioner must, except for unavoidable reasons, hear the application and dispose of it within six weeks thereafter. At the most, therefore he has to wait for about ten weeks from the order of the District Magistrate granting permission to find out whether he can safely institute a suit. But so far as the revisional powers of the State Government are concerned there is no time-limit fixed either for application by an aggrieved party or for the disposal thereof. It may be made at any time and the State Government is further authorised by this section (section 7-F) to act suo motu. In such a state of affairs, it would not be right to hold that the landlord must wait indefinitely and find out whether the permission granted to him will be upheld by the State Government should the tenant make an application for revision of the order of the Commissioner.

Apart from the above consideration, the words of section 7-F in our opinion, indicate that the State Government can only exercise its jurisdiction to revise the order of the Commissioner before the actual institution of the suit. The language of section 7-F shows that on the facts of the case before it the State Government must consider whether the grant of or refusal to grant permission for the filing of a suit should be upheld or not. The section does not seem to be aimed at invalidating a suit already instituted and can only operate at a stage before the landlord launches his proceeding. There is nothing in sub-section (4) of section 3 read with section 7-F to show that a landlord should wait till the powers of the revising authorities have been exhausted. If the Legislature had so intended, it could have used words in sub-section (1) of section 3 to indicate that the grant of permission by the District Magistrate would also be subject to an order under section 7-F. The same result might have been achieved by providing for the stay of a suit in case the State Government made an order under section 7-F contrary to that of the Commissioner.

*3. Restrictions on eviction.—(1) Subject to any order passed under sub-section (3) no suit shall, without the permission of the District Magistrate, be filed in any civil Court against a tenant for his eviction from any accommodation, except on one or more of the following grounds:—

(a) to (g)

**

(2) Where any application has been made to the District Magistrate for permission to sue a tenant for eviction from any accommodation and the District Magistrate grants or refuses to grant the permission, the party aggrieved by his order may, within 30 days from the date on which the order is communicated to him, apply to the Commissioner to revise the order.

(3) The Commissioner shall hear the application made under sub-section (2), as far as may be, within six weeks from the date of making it, and he may, if he is not satisfied as to the correctness legality or propriety of the order passed by the District Magistrate or as to the regularity of proceedings held before him alter or reverse his order, or make such other order as may be just and proper.

(4) The order of the Commissioner under sub-section (3) shall, subject to any order passed by the State Government under section 7-F be final.

7-F.—Revision to State Government.—The State Government may call for the record of any case granting or refusing to grant permission for the filing of a suit for eviction referred to in section 3 or requiring any accommodation to be let or not to be let any person under section 7 or directing a person to vacate any accommodation under section 7-A and may make such order as appears to it necessary for the ends of justice.

Once a suit is validly instituted it must take its course and the decree passed therein must be given effect to unless the words of the statute render the decree inexecutable or liable to re-opening in a proper case on grounds mentioned in the statute. It was pointed out by this Court in *Bhagwan Das's case*¹ that the Legislature had provided for a decree for eviction of a tenant passed before the commencement of the Act liable to be rendered inexecutable unless it was based on any of the grounds mentioned in sub-section (3). The Legislature might, if so advised, have provided for a similar result in a case where the State Government had revoked the permission to sue granted by the Commissioner.

It was also pointed out in *Bhagwan Das's case*¹, that it would make a mockery of the judicial process if we were to hold on the language of the sections as they stand at present, that irrespective of a decree being passed by the trial Court being upheld in appeal by the High Court or by this Court, the order of the State Government would nullify all proceedings.

There is nothing in the judgment of this Court in *Shri Bhagwan v. Ram Chand*² read with section 16 of the Act which would incline us to come to any different conclusion. On the strength of the decision in that case read in the light of section 16, it was argued that the order of the State Government being quasi-judicial in nature section 16 (inset) placed the order of the State Government beyond the pale of scrutiny by a Court of law. We cannot see any force in this argument. The permission to sue given by the Commissioner has no effect on the course of the trial of the issues involved in that suit. That permission is only a pre-requisite to a suit as a notice under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court trying the suit for eviction has to find out whether a proper notice to quit was given and whether the tenancy was properly determined. It must also examine the grounds on the basis of which the landlord seeks to evict the tenant and decide for itself whether such grounds exist. Neither the District Magistrate nor the Commissioner nor the State Government is obliged to disclose any reasons which may influence the said authorities in coming to their decision and the Court is not called upon to examine whether the conclusion of any of the said authorities was properly arrived at.

Learned Counsel for the appellant would have us hold that section 16 ousted the jurisdiction of the Court to consider the propriety of any order of the State Government. In our view, that is not the effect of that section. The decision in *Shri Bhagwan v. Ram Chand*², shows that the State Government must offer a reasonable opportunity to both the parties while it exercises its jurisdiction under section 7-F and an order which is made in violation of the principles of natural justice may be quashed. Once the jurisdiction under section 16 is properly exercised the Court cannot examine the propriety of the order made thereunder.

In our view, as already pointed out, jurisdiction under section 7-F is only exercisable at a point of time anterior to the filing of a suit and Courts of law can therefore disregard any order under that section which is made after the filing of a suit.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Two months time granted from today for vacating subject to payment of rent and an undertaking given that the property would be handed over peacefully within that time.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 11—Res judicata—Plea, when can be said to be barred—Order 9, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code.Bihar Land Reforms Act (XXX of 1950), sections 2, 3, 4, 6 and 14—Scope—Estate subject to mortgage vesting in the State—No suit to lie in any civil Court for the recovery of any money due from the proprietor (of the Estate) or tenure holder—Mortgage decree, if has become unexecutable.

The real question for decision in this case is whether the dismissal of Misc. Cases Nos. 94 and 110 of 1959 for default of the judgment-debtors can be said to be a final decision of the Court after hearing the parties. Before a plea can be held to be barred by the principles of res judicata, it must be shown that the plea in question had not only been pleaded but it had been heard and finally decided by the Court. A dismissal of a suit for default of the plaintiff, would not operate as res judicata against a plaintiff in a subsequent suit on the same cause of action. If it was otherwise there was no need for the Legislature to enact rule 9 of Order 9, Civil Procedure Code, which in specific terms says that where a suit is wholly or partly dismissed under rule 8, the plaintiff should be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. Only a decision by a Court could be res judicata, whether it be statutory under section 11, Civil Procedure or constructive as a matter of public policy on which the entire doctrine rests. Before an earlier decision can be considered as res judicata the same must have been heard and finally decided.

There is no dispute that the property mortgaged was an Estate within the meaning of section 2 (i) and the notification issued under section 3 covered the entirety of the estate. Reading sections 3, 4 and 6 together, it follows that all Estates notified under section 3 vest in the State free of all encumbrances. The quondam proprietors and tenure-holders of those Estates lose all interests in those Estates. As proprietors they retain no interest in respect of them whatsoever. But in respect of the lands enumerated in section 6 the State settled on them the rights of raiyats. Though in fact the vesting of the Estates and the deemed settlement of raiyats rights in respect of certain classes of lands included in the Estate took place simultaneously, in law the two must be treated as different transactions; first there was a vesting of the Estates in the State absolutely, and free of all encumbrances. Then followed the deemed settlement by the State of raiyat's rights on the quondam proprietors. Therefore in law it would not be correct to say that what vested in the State are only those interests not coming within section 6. Section 4 (d) provides that 'no suit shall lie in any civil Court for the recovery of any money due from such proprietor (proprietor whose estate has vested in the State) or tenure holder the payment of which is secured by a mortgage or is a charge on, such estate or tenure and all suits and proceedings for the recovery of any such money which may be pending on the date of vesting shall be dropped'. Proceedings in this section undoubtedly include execution proceedings. This is not a case where only a part of the mortgaged property has vested in the State. Under the circumstances the only remedy open to the decree holders is that provided in Chapter IV of the Act i.e., a claim under section 14 before the Claims Officer for "determining the amount of debt legally and justly payable to each creditor in respect of his claim".

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 3rd February, 1964 of the Patna High Court in Appeal from Appellate Order No. 99 of 1963.

Sarjoo Prasad, Senior Advocate (R.C. Prasad, Advocate, with him), for Appellants.

K. K. Sinha and S. K. Bisaria, Advocates, for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hegde, J.—This appeal against the judgment of the Patna High Court dated the 3rd February, 1964, in its Appellate Order No. 99 of 1963 was filed after obtaining Special Leave from this Court. It arises from a proceeding under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. In execution of a mortgage decree, the decree-holders sought to proceed against Bakasht lands of the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors objected to the same on the ground that the execution was barred under section 4 (d) of the Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act). But that objection was overruled by the executing Court on two different grounds namely (1) that the objection in question is barred by the principles of res judicata and (2) the bar of section 4 (d) pleaded is not tenable. The decision of the execution Court was affirmed in appeal but reversed in second appeal by the High Court.

The two questions that arise for decision in this appeal are (1) whether the objection as regards the executability of the decree pleaded by the judgment-debtors is barred by the principles of res judicata and (2) whether the mortgage decree has become unexecutable in view of the provisions of the Act.

We shall now briefly set out the material facts of the case. The mortgagees, the appellants in this appeal obtained a preliminary decree on 26th June, 1947 on the basis of a mortgage. The property mortgaged was an Estate within the meaning of the Act. That property included both Bakasht lands as well as other lands. The Act came into force after the passing of the aforementioned preliminary decree. The decree-holders filed petition for passing a final decree on 19th September, 1955. The Estate mortgaged vested in the State of Bihar on 1st January, 1956 as a result a notification issued under section 3 (1) of the Act. A final decree was passed in the mortgage suit on 1st October, 1956. Thereafter the mortgagees applied under section 14 of the Act and got determined the compensation to which they were entitled under the Act. It is said that they did not proceed any further in that proceeding but on the other hand filed on 18th June, 1958, an execution petition to execute the mortgage decree against the Bakasht lands. The judgment-debtors resisted that execution by filing an application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, (Misc. Case No. 94 of 1959) on the ground that the decree cannot be executed in view of the provisions of the Act. That application was dismissed for the default of the judgment-debtors on 12th September, 1959. A second application raising the same ground (Misc. Case No. 110 of 1959) was filed by the judgment-debtors on 24th September, 1959. That against was dismissed on 23rd July, 1960, for default of the judgment-debtors. A third application raising the same ground of objection (Misc. Case No. 91 of 1960) was filed by the judgment-debtors on 12th September, 1960. That application was dismissed on 4th January, 1962, after examining the contentions of the parties. Therein the execution Court came to the conclusion that the objection raised by the judgment-debtors is barred on the principles of res judicata and further that the same has no merits. This decision as mentioned earlier was affirmed by the appellate Court but reversed by the High Court.

We shall first take up the contention that the objection taken by the judgment-debtors is barred by principles of res judicata. Though at one stage, learned Counsel for the appellants-decree-holders attempted to bring the case within Explanation 5, section 11, Civil Procedure Code, he did not pursue that line of argument but tried to support his contention on the broader principles of res judicata. The real question for decision in this case is whether the dismissal of Misc. Cases Nos. 94 and 110 of 1959 for default of the judgment-debtors can be said to be a final decision of the Court after hearing the parties. Before a plea can be held to be barred by the principles of res judicata, it must be shown that the plea in question had not only been pleaded but it had been heard and finally decided by the Court. A dismissal of a suit for default of the plaintiff, we think, would not operate as res judicata against a plaintiff in a subsequent suit on the same cause of action. If it was otherwise there was no need for the Legislature to enact rule 9, Order 9, Civil Procedure Code, which in specific terms says that where a suit is wholly or partly dismissed under rule 8, the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh-suit in respect of the same cause of action. The contention that the dismissal of a previous suit for default of the plaintiffs operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit in respect of the same claim was repelled by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in *Maharaja Radha Parshad Singh v. Lal Sahah Rai and others*¹. Therein the Judicial Committee observed thus:

"None of the questions, either of fact or law, raised by the pleadings of the parties, was heard or determined by the Judge of the Shahabad Court in 1881; and his decree dismissing the suit does not constitute res judicata within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code. It must fall within one or other of the sections of Chapter VII of the Code; in the present case it is immaterial to consider which, the severest penalty attached to such dismissal in any case being that the plaintiff cannot bring another suit for the same relief."

From this decision it is clear that the Judicial Committee opined that before a plea can be held to be barred by res judicata that plea must have been heard and determined by the Court. Only a decision by a Court could be res judicata, whether it be statutory under section 11, Civil Procedure Code or constructive as a matter of public policy on which the entire doctrine rests. Before an earlier decision can be considered as res judicata the same must have been heard and finally decided—see *Palvearthi Venkata Subba Rao v. Valluri Jagannadha Rao and others*².

The Courts in India have generally taken the view that an execution petition which has been dismissed for the default of the decree-holder though by the time that petition came to be dismissed, the judgment-debtor had resisted the execution on one or more grounds, does not bar the further execution of the decree in pursuance of fresh execution petitions filed in accordance with law—see *Lakshmibai Anant Kondkar v. Ravji Bhikaji Kondkar*³. Even the dismissal for default of objections raised under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, does not operate as res judicata when the same objections are raised again in the course of the execution—see *Bahir Das Pal and another v. Girish Chandrh Pal*⁴; *Bhagwati Prasad Sah v. Radha Kishun Sah and others*⁵; *Jethmal and others v. Mst. Sakina*⁶; *Bishwanath Kundu v. Smt. Subala Dassi*⁷. We do not think that the decision in *Ramnaraian v. Basudeo*⁸, on which the learned Counsel for the appellant placed great deal of reliance is correctly decided. Hence we agree with the High Court that the plea of res judicata advanced by the appellant is unsustainable.

The next question is whether the execution is barred under the provisions of the Act. The contention of the judgment-debtors is that is so barred where as according to the appellants as the Bakasht lands which form part of the mortgaged property had not vested in the State, the execution can proceed against those lands. Therefore we have to see whether the entire mortgaged property had vested in the State in pursuance of the notification under section 3 or only the mortgaged property minus the Bakasht lands.

There is no dispute that the property mortgaged was an Estate within the meaning of section 2 (i) and notification issued under section 3 covered the entirety of the Estate. But what was urged on behalf of the appellants is that what had vested in the State was the non-bakasht lands as well as the proprietary interest in the Bakasht lands and hence the Bakasht lands do not have the protection of section 4 (d); Consequently it is not necessary for them to exclusively proceed under section 14.

The consequences of the vesting of an Estate is set out in section 4. Section 4 (a) provides that once an Estate vests in the State the various rights in respect of that Estate enumerated therein shall also vest in the State, absolutely free from all encumbrances. Among the rights enumerated therein undoubtedly includes the right of possession. In view of section 4 (a) there is hardly any doubt that the proprietor loses all his rights in the estate in question. After setting out the various interests lost by the proprietor that section proceeds to say "such proprietor or tenure-holder shall cease to have any interests in such estate or tenure, other than the interests expressly saved by or under the provisions of this Act." In order to find out the implication of the clause extracted above we have to go to section 6 which provides that on and from the date of vesting all lands used for agriculture or horticultural purposes which were in khas possession of an intermediary on the date of vesting (including certain classes of land specified in that section) shall subject to the provisions of sections 7-A and B be deemed to be settled by the State with such intermediary and he shall, be entitled to retain possession thereof and hold the as a raiyat under the State having occupancy rights in respect of such lands, subject to the payment of such fair and equitable rent as may be determined by the Collector in the prescribed manner.

Reading sections 3, 4 and 6 together, it follows that all Estates notified under section 3 vest in the State free of all encumbrances. The quondam proprietors and tenure-holders of those Estates lose all interests in those Estates. As proprietors they retain no interest in respect of them whatsoever. But in respect of the lands enumerated in section 6 the State settled on them the rights of raiyats. Though in fact the vesting of the Estates and the deemed settlement of raiyats rights in respect of certain classes of lands included in the Estates took place simultaneously, in law the two must be treated as different transactions; first there was a vesting of the Estates in the State absolutely, and free of all encumbrances. Then followed the deemed settlement by the State of raiyat's rights on the quondam proprietors. Therefore in law it would not be correct to say that what vested in the State are only those interests not coming within section 6.

Section 4 (d) provides that "no suit shall lie in any civil Court for the recovery of any money due from such proprietor (proprietor whose estate has vested in the State) or tenure-holder the payment of which is secured by a mortgage of, or is a charge on, such estate or tenure and all suits and proceedings for the recovery of any such money which may be pending on the date of vesting shall be dropped." Proceedings in this section undoubtedly include execution proceedings. This is not a case where only a part of the mortgaged property has vested in the State and as such the rule laid down by this Court in *Raj Kishore v. Ram Pratap*¹, is not attracted. As mentioned earlier the entire Estate mortgaged had vested though some interest in respect of a portion of the mortgaged property had been settled by the State on the mortgagors.

Under the circumstances the only remedy open to the decree-holders is that provided in Chapter IV of the Act i.e., a claim under section 14 before the Claims Officer for "determining the amount of debt legally and justly payable to each creditor in respect of his claim." The procedure to be followed in such a proceeding is prescribed in sections 15 to 18. Provisions relating to the assessment and payment of compensation payable to the quondam proprietor and tenure-holders are found in Chapter V of the Act (sections 19 to 31). Section 24 (5) provides that "in the case where the interest of a proprietor or tenure-holder is subject to a mortgage or charge, the compensation shall be first payable to the creditor holding such mortgage or charge and the balance, if any, shall be payable to the proprietor or tenure-holder concerned...." That sub-section further prescribes the maximum amount that can be paid to such a creditor.

1. (1967) 2 S.C.R. 56 : (1968) 1 S.C.J. 75 : A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 801.

In view of what has been stated above it follows that under the circumstances of this case it is not open to the appellants to proceed with the execution. Their only remedy is to get compensation under the Act.

Our conclusion receives strong support from some of the decisions of this Court. In *Rana Sheo Ambar Singh v. Allahabad Bank Ltd., Allahabad*¹, a question identical to the one before us, but arising under the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, came up for consideration by this Court. One of the questions that arose for decision in that case was whether the Bhumidari right settled by the State on a previous proprietor whose estate had vested in the State was liable to be proceeded against in execution of a mortgage decree against the Estate that had vested in the State. This Court held that it was not liable to be proceeded against. Therein it was ruled that the intention of the U.P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act was to vest the proprietary rights in the Sir and Khudkasht land and grove land in the State and resettle on intermediary not as compensation but by virtue of his cultivatory possession of lands comprised therein and on a new tenure and confer upon the intermediary a new and special right of Bhumidari, which he never had before by section 18 of the Act. The provisions in that Act relating to vesting and settlement of Bhumidari rights are in all essential particulars similar to those in the Act relating to vesting and settlement of Bakasht lands. This Court further ruled in that case that the mortgagee could only enforce his rights against the mortgagor in the manner as provided in section 6 (h) of the U. P. Act read with section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act and follow the compensation money under the Act.

In *Krishna Prasad and others v. Gauri Kamari Devi*², the question that arose for decision by the Court was whether a mortgage-decree-holder could proceed against the properties of the mortgagor other than those mortgaged in enforcement of the personal covenant when the property mortgaged had vested in the State under the provisions of the Act. That question was answered in the negative. In the course of the judgment Gajendragadkar, J., (as the then was) who spoke for the Court observed that there is no doubt "that the scheme of the Act postulates that where the provisions of the Act apply, claims of the creditors have to be submitted before the Claims Officer, the claimants have to follow the procedure prescribed by the Act and cannot avail of any remedy outside the Act by instituting suit or any other proceeding in the Court of ordinary civil jurisdiction." Proceeding further he observed:

"It is in the light of this scheme of the Act that we must refer to section 4 (a) and determine what is true scope and effect are. Mr. Jha contends that in construing the words of section 4 (d) it would be necessary to bear in mind the object of the Act which was merely to provide for the transference to the State of the interests of the proprietors and tenure-holders in land and of the mortgagees and lessees of such interests. It was not the object of the Act, says Mr. Jha, to extinguish debts due by the proprietors or tenure-holders and so, it would be reasonable to confine the operation of section 4 (d) only to the claims made against the estates which have vested in the State and no others. In our opinion, this argument proceeds on an imperfect view of the aim and object of the Act. It is true that one of the objects of the Act was to provide for the transference to the State of the estates as specified. But as we have already seen, the provisions contained in section 16 in regard to the scaling down of the debts due by the proprietors and tenure-holders clearly indicate that another object which the Act wanted to achieve was to give some redress to the debtors whose estates have been taken away from them by the notifications issued under section 3. Therefore, in construing section 4 (d), it would not be right to assume that the interests of the debtors affected by the provisions of the Act do not fall within the protection of the Act"

2. (1962) 3 S.C.R. (Supp.) 564: A.I.R. 1962

"Having regard to the said scheme, it is difficult to confine the application of section 4 (d) only to execution proceedings in which the decree-holder seeks to proceed against the estate of the debtor. In fact, an execution proceeding to recover the decretal amount from the estate which has already vested in the State, would be incompetent because the said estate no longer belong to the judgment-debtor."

Summarising the effect of the aforementioned decisions this is what this Court observed in *Raj Kishore's case*¹, a case arising under the Act :

"From the principles laid down by this Court in the above two decisions, it follows that where the whole of the property mortgaged is an estate, there can be no doubt that the procedure prescribed by Chapter IV has to be followed, in order that the amount due to the creditor should be determined by the claims officer and the decision of the Claims Officer or the Board has been made final by the Act."

For the reasons mentioned earlier we are of the opinion that the decision of the majority of the judges in the Full Bench decision in *Sidheswar Prasad Singh v. Ram Saroop Singh*² is not correct. The true effect of the decisions of this Courts in *Rana Sheo Ambar Singh's case*³, and *Krishna Prasad's case*⁴, is as explained by Kamla Sahai, J., in that case.

In the result this appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Calcutta High Court Rules—Two suits, one of which is a Partition suit, referred to the sole arbitration after Presiding Judge, extra. cursum curiae—Presiding Judge Passing a Preliminary decree—Whether such an order is an order of an arbitrator or decree by a Court—Registrar on the original side whether can be restrained from keeping the judgment on the record of the suit.

The following agreement was put forward before the Court referring the dispute in both the suits to the sole arbitration of the Presiding Judge, 'extra cursum curiae.'

"It is recorded that all the parties consent to this Tasta. Suit as well as Partition suit being Suit No. 1045 of 1957 and all the disputes involved in these two matters be settled and referred to the sole arbitration of the Honble Mr. Justice P.C. Mallick and the parties agree to abide by any decision that will be given and no evidence need be taken except or to what his Lordship might desire and the evidence need not be recorded in any formal manner. Parties agree that his Lordships would have all the summary Powers including the power to divide and Partition the Properties and to make such decrees as his Lordship thinks fit and Proper and for the purpose of partition if necessary to engage or appoint surveyors and Commissioner as his Lordship thinks best.

It is recorded that all parties have referred this matter to the learned Judge in what is known as extra cursum curiae Jurisdiction of this Court.

It is further recorded that all parties agree that they will not prefer any appeal from or against the decree or order that may be passed by his Lordship" the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mallick, Construing this agreement held that in a case like the Present, where the arbitration agreement envisages that the Presiding Officer after Court should himself act as an arbitrator, he, in such circumstances, will obviously occupy a dual capacity. He will be both an arbitrator to decide the matters referred to him by the agreement of the Parties, and a Court before which the suit continues to remain pending having Jurisdiction to deal with the suit in accordance with the provisions of the arbitration Act. The actual order passed by Justice Mallick also makes it clear that, in passing that order, he purported to act as the Court deciding the suit and not as the arbitrator to whom some matters in dispute were referred by the parties. At the beginning of the order, Mallick, J. described himself as the "Court." When making the operative order, he used the following language "in the result, for the present, I will pass a preliminary decree as under," on the face of it, when he passed this order, he acted as a judge seized of the suit who alone was competent to pass a preliminary decree in the suit. Consequently, the submission that the order made by Mallick, J., should be held to be an award of an arbitrator pure and simple and not a decree by a Court was not accepted.

The sole relief claimed before the High Court was the issue of a writ of mandamus directing the Registrar on the original side to recall, cancel and withdraw this order and to take it off the record, on the ground that it was an award and not a judgment after Court. Since it has been held that it was a judgment of the Court, the Registrar on the original side, under the Rules of the Calcutta High Court, was bound to file it on record and retain it there. The appellant could have sought appropriate remedy to having that judgment vacated and, if such a remedy had been sought against that judgment, directly, the question whether it was a good judgment and should be retained on the record or not could have been appropriately decided. The remedy sought by the appellant of seeking a writ to restrain the Registrar on the original side from keeping the judgment on the record of the suit could not possibly be allowed, while the judgment stood and was not vacated.

Bhargava, J.—This appeal, by Special Leave, is directed against a judgment of the Appellate Bench of the High Court of Calcutta, dated 18th February, 1965, dismissing an appeal against an order of a single Judge by which he dismissed a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution on 26th August, 1964. The facts leading up to this litigation are that one Shrish Chandra Paul died in the year 1930, leaving behind his widow Pramila Sundari, his daughter Arati, and 4 sons Balai, Kanai, Netai and Gour. In the year 1945, Netai died leaving his mother Pramila Sundari as his sole heiress. On 27th September, 1946, a deed of gift in respect of two premises Nos. 60/11 and 60/12 in Gour Beria Lane was executed by Pramila Sundari in favour of her three sons Balai, Kanai and Gour. On 18th March, 1952, there was an agreement for partition between Pramila Sundari and her three sons Balai, Kanai and Gour, by which the joint estate left by Shrish Chandra Paul was partitioned into four lots and a small portion of the property was left joint. On 13th June, 1957, Pramila Sundari instituted Suit No. 1045 of 1957 against Balai, Kanai and Gour for a declaration that the deed of gift and the agreement of partition were void and inoperative, and for a fresh declaration of the shares of the parties and partition of the joint properties. In this suit, Arati was also impleaded as a defendant. On 26th August, 1957, Pramila Sundari executed a will bequeathing her entire estate absolutely to Arati Paul and Gour in equal shares. On 13th January, 1958, Pramila Sundari died, and consequently, on 12th December, 1958, and order was made in Suit No. 1045 of 1957 transposing Arati Paul as the plaintiff. On 3rd February, 1960, Arati Paul applied in the Calcutta High Court for grant of Letters of Administration, with a copy of the will of Pramila Sundari annexed. This testamentary proceeding was contested and was marked in the year 1962 as Testamentary Suit No. 12 of 1962. On 17th December, 1962, the Testamentary Suit No. 12 of 1962 and the Partition Suit No. 1045 of 1957 appeared in the peremptory list of Mallick, J., and the Testamentary Suit was partly heard. On 2nd and 3rd January, 1963, there was further hearing in the testamentary suit. On 4th January, 1963, an agreement was put forward before Mallick, J., referring the dispute in both the suits to the sole arbitration of Mallick, J., extra cursum curiae. Since this reference is of importance, we may quote it in full :—

“It is recorded that all the parties consent to this Tasta. Suit as well as the partition Suit being Suit No. 1045 of 1957 and all the disputes involved in these two matters be settled and referred to the sole arbitration of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice P. C. Mallick and the parties agreed to abide by any decision that will be given and no evidence need be taken except or to what his Lordship might desire and the evidence need not be recorded in any formal manner. Parties agree that his Lordship would have all the summary powers including the power to divide and partition the properties and to make such decrees as his Lordship thinks fit and proper and for the purpose of partition if necessary to engage or appoint Surveyors and Commissioners as his Lordship thinks best.

It is recorded that all the parties have referred this matter to the Learned Judge in what is known as extra cursum curiae jurisdiction of this Court.

When this note was recorded, all the parties to the two proceedings were represented through their Counsel. In pursuance of this agreement, Mallick, J., passed an order in Suit No. 1045 of 1957 on 1st April, 1963. It may be mentioned that the main dispute in the present case is whether this order of Mallick, J., in this partition suit amounts to an award or a judgment in a suit. On the same day, by a separate order, he also granted Letters of Administration in the testamentary Suit. On 5th April, 1963, Arati Paul filed an objection to the recording of this order as a judgment. On 4th May, 1963, drafts of decrees drawn up in terms of that order were issued. On 13th May, 1963, Arati Paul applied for change of her Attorney, in the partition Suit No. 1045 of 1957. On 17th May, 1963, the order of Mallick, J., dated 1st April, 1963 was filed on the record of Suit No. 1045 of 1957 as a judgment. On 24th July, 1963, the application of Arati Paul for change of Attorney was allowed. Thereafter, on 20th August, 1963, Arati Paul presented a Letter of Demand to the Registrar of the Original Side of the High Court to recall, cancel and withdraw the filing of the order of Mallick, J., dated 1st April, 1963 from the record of the suit and to take it off the file of that suit.

Failing to get any response, Arati Paul, on 4th September, 1963, presented a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution praying for issue of a writ in the nature of mandamus directing the Registrar of the High Court on the Original Side to forthwith recall, cancel and withdraw the filing of the said pretended Award (that is how the order of Mallick, J., was described in this petition), dated 1st April, 1963 as a judgment in the said Suit No. 1045 of 1957 as part of the records of the said suit, and another writ of mandamus directing the Registrar of the High Court to forthwith take off the said pretended Award, dated 1st April, 1963 from the file and/or records of the said Suit No. 1045 of 1957. In this petition, apart from the Registrar of the High Court on the Original Side, Balai, Kanai and Gour were also impleaded as opposite parties. This petition under Article 226 of the Constitution was numbered as Matter No. 366 of 1963 and was summarily rejected by Banerjee, J., on 5th September, 1963. On 16th September, 1963, Appeal No. 228 of 1963 was entertained against this judgment under the Letters Patent, but an application presented for an interim injunction restraining the Registrar from taking any steps pursuant to the judgment of Mallick, J., dated 1st April, 1963 pending disposal of the appeal was rejected. On 27th November, 1963, Arati Paul obtained Special Leave to appeal from this Court against the refusal of the interim injunction by the interlocutory order, dated 16th September, 1963. While this appeal was still pending in this Court, the Appellate Bench of the High Court, on 28th April, 1964, allowed Appeal No. 228 of 1963, directed issued of a Rule in Matter No. 366 of 1963, and ordered stay of all proceedings pursuant to the order of Mallick, J., dated 1st April, 1963, till the final disposal of the Rule. Since the appeal in this Court had become infructuous, it was not prosecuted and was dismissed for non-prosecution on 29th April, 1964. On 10th June, 1964, two of the parties Kanai and Balai took out a notice of motion for revocation of Letters of Administration which had been granted to Arati Paul by the order of Mallick, J., dated 1st April, 1963 in the Testamentary Suit. This notice was returnable on 15th June, 1964. Matter No. 366 of 1963, having been remanded by the Appellate Bench, appeared for final hearing before Sinha, J., on 15th July, 1964, but it was directed to go out of the list as an objection was taken on behalf of Kanai and Balai to the matter being taken up by him on the ground that he was a member of the Appellate Bench which had directed issue of the Rule in that Matter. On 16th July, 1964, this Matter No. 366 of 1963 was mentioned before the Chief Justice for being assigned to some other Judge, when a direction was made by the Chief Justice that a letter should be written by the party concerned to his Secretary. On 27th July, 1964, the Notice of Motion taken out by Kanai and Balai for revocation of Letters of Administration was partly heard by Mallick, J., who recorded the following minutes:—

“Part Head. The Rule issued by the Appeal Court in Matter No. 366 of 1963 in the matter of Arati Paul v. Registrar, O.F., appears to be intimately connected with the application that is now pending before me. I direct that this matter with the said Matter No. 366 be placed before the Hon'ble C.J., for proper determination. Let this matter along with the matters appear day after tomorrow when I shall give directions. Interim Order to continue except that Arati Paul will collect rent.”

It appears that, simultaneously with these proceedings, an application for taking proceedings for Contempt of Court were also pending before him in this connection. Hearing in Matter No. 366 of 1963 was concluded on 12th August, 1964, and then an order was made that this Matter as well as the proceedings relating to Notice of Motion for revocation of the Letters of Administration and the application for taking proceedings for contempt should appear in the list for judgment one after the other. On 26th August, 1964, Mallick, J., passed an order discharging the Rule in Matter No. 366 of 1963 as well as dismissing the other two applications. Subsequently, on 1st September, 1964, the preliminary decree drawn up on the basis of the order of Mallick, J., dated 1st April, 1963 in Partition Suit No. 1045 of 1957 was signed by him, and on 3rd September, 1964, the decree was filed. On 21st September, 1964, Arati Paul filed Appeal No. 226 of 1964 challenging the order, dated 26th August, 1964, passed by Mallick, J., dismissing Matter No. 366 of 1963. The appeal was dismissed by the Appellate Bench of the High Court on 18th February, 1965 and the order of the High Court in the appeal was filed on 16th March, 1965. Arati Paul then applied for a certificate under Article 133 (1) of the Constitution for Leave to appeal to this Court. That having been refused, she obtained Special Leave from this Court and has now come up in this appeal challenging the confirmation by the Appellate Bench of the order of dismissal of Matter No. 366 of 1963.

The prayer in the writ petition (Matter No. 366 of 1963) has been pressed before us by Mr. Chagla on behalf of the appellant on the sole ground that the order of Mallick, J., dated 1st April, 1963 was in the nature of an award made by an arbitrator and not a judgment in the partition suit, so that the appellant was entitled to obtain a writ for its recall, cancellation and withdrawal and for taking it off the record of the suit. Being a mere award of an arbitrator, it could not be treated as a judgment in the suit, nor could a decree be drawn up on its basis. On behalf of the respondents, other than the Registrar of the High Court on the Original Side,

Mr. Goswami has argued that, even though, under the agreement, dated 4th January, 1963 Mallick, J., was requested to act extra cursum curiæ and the suit was left to his arbitration, he, in fact, when passing the order, dated 1st April, 1963, acted as a Court and passed a preliminary decree. According to him, a preliminary decree in a suit for partition can only be passed by a Court and not be an arbitrator when giving an award in the dispute referred to him. He has, therefore urged that the Registrar, was right in filing that order on the record of Suit No. 1045 of 1957 as a judgment, and no writ of mandamus can be issued to him to recall, cancel or withdraw it or take it off the record. Learned Counsel for the Registrar also urged that all that the Registrar did was to file the order of Mallick, J., in accordance with the Rules of Court, because it was a judgment passing a preliminary decree in the suit, so that the appellant was not entitled to the writ of mandamus sought in Matter No. 366 of 1963.

Mr. Chagla, in support of his argument, relied primarily on two decisions of Courts in England and on the principle enunciated by Russell in his book on "The Law of Arbitration", 17th Edition. In this book at page 117, Russell has enunciated the principle as follows :—

"The subject-matter of an action may be referred to a judge as arbitrator. The judge in such a case will, if such is the intention of the parties, be merely an arbitrator and have no special powers by virtue of the fact that he is a judge and his award will not be subject to appeal."

After laying down this principle, Russell goes on to elaborate it in the subsequent notes with reference to some decision, and one of these principles enunciated is :

"When, with the consent of both parties, a judge deviates from the regular course of procedure of the Court, he ceases to act judicially and becomes an arbitrator, whose decision is subject to no appeal."

In support of this last proposition, Russell has quoted the decisions in *Bickett v. Morris*¹, and *Waite v. Buccleuch (Duke)*². We examined the decisions in these two cases, but could not find any specific statement in them that the decision given by a Judge on deviation from the regular course of procedure of the Court has to be held to be an award, though it was held in both cases that it would not be subject to an appeal.

The principal case on which reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant is the decision of the House of Lords in *Robert Murray Burgess v. Andrew Morton*³. In that case, a suit was first brought for recovery of a certain amount and the cause was set down for trial before the Lord Chief Justice, when there being no likelihood of its being reached, the parties, with the consent of the learned judge, agreed to withdraw it from trial, and to state a special case for the decision of the Court. It was held by the House of Lords that the special case so stated did not raise directly any question of law and its decision only depended on questions of fact, so that the statement of the special case did not confer jurisdiction on the Court to deal with it as such. The learned Judges of the Divisional Court seized of the special case pointed out the incompetency and inexpediency of trying such a question by means of a special case, but expressed their willingness to do the best they could to decide it, if the parties desired them to do so, and on that footing, they heard the case and gave judgment. On appeal, the Court of Appeal reversed that judgment. This judgment of the Court of Appeal was brought up before the House of Lords which had to consider the nature of the judgment given by the Divisional Court. Lord Watson in his speech held :—

"There are several decisions of this House, in cases coming from Scotland, which appear to me to affirm that the judgment of a Court below, pronounced extra cursum curiæ, is in the nature of an arbiter's award, and that, as a general rule at least, no appeal from it will lie. An appeal was held, on that ground, to be incompetent in *Graig v. Duffus*¹; *Dudgeon v. Thomson*², and Magistrates of Renfrew v. Hoby.³

Lord Shand also expressed a similar view, taking note of the fact that, as soon as it became apparent to the learned Judges of the Divisional Court that the special case raised only a question of fact for their determination, they would have been warranted in declining to give judgment on it. It was apparent that the learned Judge yielded to the entreaties of both parties in entertaining and disposing of the case; and, on this basis, expressed his opinion as follows :—

“ I agree in thinking that the proceeding was extra cursum curiae, and that the decision of the dispute between the parties was of the nature of an award by arbitrator, as, indeed, the learned judges of the Divisional Court seem themselves to have thought, as appears not only from the terms of Wills, J.’s judgment, but from the observations of both judges when the defendant proposed to appeal.”

Reliance was also placed on the decision of Goddard, J., in *Wyndham v. Jackson*⁴. The facts of that case were that the plaintiff issued a writ in the Chancery Division claiming an account and payment of all sums due to her under a contract entered into by the plaintiff with the defendants. An order was made in the action by consent directing an account and the master, who dealt with that order, extended the ambit of his enquiry beyond the terms of the order at the invitation of both parties, gave a decision on a matter which was not covered by the Judge’s order for an account, and issued a certificate to the effect that a certain sum was due from the defendant to the plaintiff. The question that was raised before Goddard, J., by the plaintiff was that she was entitled to recover the amount certified by the master, on the ground that the certificate was equivalent to an award having been made pursuant to an oral submission by Counsel, who asked him to deal with all matters in dispute, though not technically covered by the order directing an account. It was also submitted on her behalf that the minute in the master’s book, indicating an order that he was prepared to make on the plaintiff’s application for an order for payment, was also an award entitling her, not only to the amount mentioned, but also to the costs of the Chancery proceedings. After considering the views expressed in a number of cases, Goddard, J., held :—

“ I must take it that it has been finally decided, in a matter between the parties, that the certificate was given extra cursum curiae. Then, as I find it was the result of a hearing which both parties requested, and to which they assented, I think it falls within the line of cases on which the plaintiff relies, and can be enforced as an award.”

This case went up in appeal before the Court of Appeal whose decision is reported in *Wyndham v. Jackson*⁵. That Court differed from Goddard, J., on the nature of the order made by the master and held that the determination by the master was not a final determination and was never intended to be treated as a final arrangement between the parties. That matter was still to go before the Judge who had made the order for account and the master’s certificate could not be binding until it had been confirmed by the Judge. The position of the master was held to be exactly analogous to the position of an arbitrator to whom the Court may have referred a matter to make a report to the Court in order that the Court may give a final decision between the parties. On this view, the Appeal Court did not go into the question whether the decision given by the master amounted to a decision given extra cursum curiae and whether it was enforceable as an award. The award of the master, being treated as provisional and subject to confirmation by the Judge, could obviously not be enforced as such. Thus, the view expressed by Goddard, J., that the decision of the master could be enforced as an award, if it had been final, was neither affirmed nor set aside.

The cases in India relied upon are two decisions of the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts. In *Sayad Zain v. Kalabhai Lalubhai*¹, before the case came to a regular hearing before the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Surat, the parties as well as their pleaders signed an application which ran as follows:—

“We have decided that the Court should make a settlement of the dispute between us according to Chapter XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code, and we will abide by whatever decision the Court may give.”

We have specially decided that the Court should have full authority to obtain information from the parties in whatever way the Court may think proper, but the parties are not to produce any evidence except documentary records.”

The Subordinate Judge, in pursuance of this agreement, proceeded, to deal with the case and ordered defendant to pay plaintiff a certain sum, having dispensed with the requirement of going through the formal procedure of rejecting the suit and registering their application as a fresh suit, because the parties referred him to the decision in *Raoji Trimbak Nagarkar v. Govind Vinaya, Nagarkar*². An appeal against this decision was taken to the High Court of Bombay which noted the fact that the Subordinate Judge had referred to the case mentioned above and held:—

“The very mention of that case shows that the parties must have intended that the decision of the Subordinate Judge as arbitrator should be final. In that case, as in this, the parties solemnly agreed by themselves and by their pleaders to abide by the decision of the Court to be made in a particular way. They cannot, therefore, appeal from it.”

The Court further expressed the opinion that:

“The fact that the express provisions of Chapter XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code, were knowingly disregarded, shows that the proceedings were extra cursum curiae, and thus the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was in the nature of an arbitrator's award, against which an appeal cannot be entertained if the competency of the appellate Court is objected to by the party holding the judgment. The fact that the Subordinate Judge gave his award in the form of a decree will not make it a decree from which a regular appeal can lie.”

In *Baikanta Nath Goswami v. Sita Nath Goswami*³, after the hearing of a suit in a Munsif Court had commenced and some evidence had been recorded, the parties agreed to leave the questions in dispute between them to the determination of the Munsif after he had inspected the locality, and also agreed not to raise any objection to the decision so arrived at by the Munsif and to hold themselves bound by the decision of the Munsif. It was specifically stated in the agreement that neither of the parties shall be competent to raise any objection to the decision or to prefer an appeal. Acting on this submission, the Munsif made a local inspection and passed an order with which the plaintiffs were not content, so that they applied to the Munsif under section 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, for a review. The Munsif granted the review and passed a second order in modification of his first order, and again embodied the order in what purported to be a decree in the suit. Against this decree, an appeal was filed by the defendants before the District Judge who entertained the appeal and made an order of remand. On second appeal the High Court of Calcutta held that the first judgment of the Munsif was in the nature of an award and that it did not lose that character because he embodied the operative part of that judgment in what purported to be a decree in the suit. He was in fact an arbitrator by the submission of the parties and his decision was an award. It was not open to him to alter that award when made or to review his decision. It was further held that no appeal, consequently, lay to the District Judge against that decision. It is on the basis of these cases that it was argued that, in the present case also, the order made by Mallick, J. should be held by us to be in the nature of an award made by an arbitrator, so that it cannot be treated as a decree and filed as such in the partition suit which was pending before him.

As against these cases cited on behalf of the appellant, our attention has been drawn on behalf of the respondents to the views in Halsbury's Laws of England, and to certain decisions of Courts in India. In Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., Vol. 2, at page 8 in para. 15, it is stated :—

“An arbitration agreement must be an agreement to refer disputes to some person or persons other than a Court of competent jurisdiction. In principle a judge sitting extra cursum curiae may sit as arbitrator under an arbitration agreement and a reference to a Foreign Court has been treated as an arbitration agreement for the purpose of exercising the jurisdiction to grant a stay of proceedings arising out of the same subject-matter. An agreement that the decision of a Judge sitting in Court should be unappealable is however, despite the language of some of the decisions cited, not an arbitration agreement; the decision, when given, is a judgment, not an award, and the Judge is not placed in the position of an arbitrator.”

Reliance is placed particularly on the last sentence of the above extract from Halsbury's Laws of England.

In *Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya*¹, parties in a suit pending before the District Munsif presented a petition undertaking that both parties would abide by the decision of the Court that may be passed, as it thinks just, after perusing the documents filed by both parties and all the records in the said suit, and after measuring the sites and inspecting the marks, etc., which are thereon. The District Munsif ordered accordingly, inspected the site, and found in favour of the plaintiff and pronounced judgment giving him the order claimed, and granted the injunction. It was held by the Madras High Court on appeal that the District Munsif acted as arbitrator by consent of parties and that, consequently, no appeal lay from his decision which must be looked upon as an award. It was, however, added that, as no attempt had been made to attack that award on any of the grounds specified in section 521 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court must look on the decree of the District Munsif as one passed in accordance with the award and uphold it as such.

In *Chinna Venkatasami Naicken v. Venkatasami Naicken and another*², in a suit for money due upon a mortgage bond, after the examination of some witnesses, parties agreed to refer the questions of law and fact arising in the case to the decision of three persons, viz., the Subordinate Judge and two friends of the parties. An award was made by the majority. Thereupon, an application was presented by the defendants to set aside the award on various grounds. The Subordinate Judge over-ruled the objections and passed a decree in accordance with the award. In the Revision before the Madras High Court, the main ground taken was that the reference to the Subordinate Judge as one of the arbitrators was illegal and that the whole award was vitiated thereby. Seshagiri Ayyar, J., in confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, held :—

“In my opinion, therefore, although the procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge in dealing with the matter as if it was a reference under the Second Schedule and as if the provisions of the Code applied was wrong, inasmuch as a decree passed in terms of the award, the defendant as a party to the reference is entitled to contest its finality and to request that the case should be heard again.”

Wallis, C.J. said :—

“I think a reference of the suit to the presiding Judge must be held to be altogether extra cursum curiae and not the less so when two others are joined with him, and that the decree passed in accordance with their decision must be regarded as a consent decree, and as not subject to the provisions of the Second Schedule."

1. (1903) I.L.R. 26 Mad. 76.

In *Neti Venkata Somayajulu Garu v. Adusumilli Venkanna*¹, in a suit claiming an easement of necessity in respect of certain lands, the District Munsif, at the request of the defendant, made a local inspection of the site, whereafter the plaintiff was examined-in-chief and some documents were filed. Thereafter, the parties requested the Court to give a decision on the evidence already on the record and intimated that they proposed to adduce no further evidence. The Munsif gave his decision partly in favour of the plaintiff and partly against him. The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge who dismissed the appeal, holding it to be barred by reason of the joint statement given by the parties before the Munsif. On further appeal the High Court of Madras held that, although the proceeding was not extra cursum curiae, the right of appeal was nevertheless barred by reason of the special agreement.

In *K. P. Dalal v. R. S. Janadar*², in an application registered as a suit for ejectment from a premises, the Judge trying the suit, at the first hearing of the suit, after pleadings of parties had been put in, enquired of the Advocates of the parties as to whether they wanted a formal trial or whether they were prepared to leave the matter to him to be summarily decided as an arbitrator after hearing the respective Advocates and inspecting the premises. Both the Advocates agreed to the learned Judge hearing the facts from them and after inspection of the premises by the Court to submit to his decision as suggested. Thereafter, the Judge inspected the premises and ultimately, on a further agreement by both parties that the matters in dispute should be decided by the Judge as an arbitrator, he gave his decision. When the case came up in revision before the Bombay High Court, the learned Judge of that Court referred to the quotations from Halsbury's Laws of England and Russell on Arbitration which we have noticed earlier, and expressed his opinion that he did not think that those observations necessarily meant that the Judge ceased to be a Judge and became a pure arbitrator in the sense that he could refer the dispute to himself and also remit the award to himself. The order of the trial Judge dismissing the application and making no order as to costs was upheld on the view that the trial Judge had not lost his capacity as a Judge and had not become a pure arbitrator governed by the Arbitration Act and, therefore, the provisions of that Act would not apply to him. So that the order passed by the trial Judge was correct.

In *Bajinath v. Dhani Ram*³, a suit for declaration removal of certain encroachments, and a perpetual injunction came for trial before the Munsif where the parties agreed that the Munsif should decide the case on inspection of the documents filed by the parties and on inspection of the locality. They further agreed to accept the decision of the Munsif. The Munsif wrote a judgment and decreed the suit in part. There was an appeal to the District Judge which was dismissed and the second appeal came before the High Court of Allahabad which was also dismissed. While the appeal before the District Judge was pending, an application for review of judgment was also presented before the Munsif. In disposing of this application, the Munsif held that he was an arbitrator and that his decision was binding on the parties, so that an application for review did not lie as there was no sufficient cause for review. This order was again taken up in Revision before the High Court, and the question arose whether the Munsif could not entertain the application for review because he was an arbitrator. The Court held :—

"The Munsif, in accepting the position of an arbitrator, had a twofold capacity. He was an arbitrator, but he was also the Court. If the arbitrator left anything undecided, the parties would be entitled to go to the Court and to ask the Court to remit the award to the arbitrator. The fact that the two capacities were constituted in the same person should not deprive a party of his right of having matters set right."

2. A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 478.

3. (1929) I.L.R. 51 All. 103.

On this view, the Court was of the opinion that an application for review lay against the judgment of the Munsif, allowed the revision and directed the Munsif to take up the application for review afresh and consider it on the merits.

In *Edapalli Kotamma v. Nullabani Mangamma and others*¹, in a suit for mandatory injunction directing the defendants to remove certain constructions and for a permanent injunction restraining them from obstructing the flow of surplus water from plaintiff's land, the parties, after a Commissioner appointed to inspect the locality had prepared certain plans and submitted his reports, signed and filed a memorandum before the District Munsif in the following terms:—

“Both parties agreed to abide by the decision of the Hon'ble Court after personal inspection. The parties are not adducing oral evidence. Documentary evidence can be received.”

The District Munsif inspected the locality, placed on record a detailed note of the physical features of the locality, etc., and, on the basis of Commissioner's plans and reports and his own personal inspection, gave a judgment for the plaintiff's. A decree was also drawn up in the usual course. The first defendant preferred an appeal which was rejected by the first appellate Court on the ground that it was incompetent. In second appeal before the Andhra Pradesh High Court, the question arose whether the first appellate Court was right in holding that no appeal lay to it from the decree of the trial Court. A learned single Judge of the Andhra Pradesh High Court differed from the view expressed in *Nidamartai Mukkanti's case*², and held that there could not be a reference to arbitration by the Judge to himself. He expressed the view by saying:

“It would be fantastic to say that in a case like the present, the Court made a reference to itself, fixed the time for the making of the award, stayed its hand till the expiry of the time fixed for the submission of the award, received the award, gave time for objections to the award, heard the objection and, finding no grounds for setting aside the award, pronounced judgment in accordance therewith.” He went on to hold:—

“The Arbitration Act of 1940 makes it clear that a reference to arbitration could be made only in accordance with the Act and the procedure prescribed by the Act should have been followed before sections 17 and 39 of the Act barring appeals from decrees on awards, could be invoked. Consequently, the decision of the trial Court could not be treated as the award of an arbitrator and the decree that followed, could not be held to be a decree on an award and therefore not open to appeal.”

He then proceeded to examine the question whether, there being no statutory provisions barring a right of appeal in that case, there was any principle of law which deprived the parties of the right of appeal. He noted the fact that, in that case, there was no express agreement not to appeal; but the controversy turned on the question whether, by their conduct, the parties should be deemed to have given up their right of appeal and whether the waiver of the right of appeal should be implied from the terms of the agreement between the parties. The learned Judge held that there had been no waiver of the right of appeal, so that the appeal before the first appellate Court was competent. The order dismissing that appeal was set aside and the case was remanded for a decision of the appeal on merits.

Reference may also be made to a decision of the Privy Council in *Pisani v. Attorney-General of Gibraltar*³. In that case, the Crown claimed certain lands as escheated for want of heirs of the deceased owner. The defendants to the action were a purchaser from that owner, a person who claimed that the purchaser was only a trustee for him, and certain legatees and beneficiaries under a will of the deceased. During the course of trial, it became evident that the title of the Crown by escheat was unsustainable, but, instead of dismissing the suit, the Court, with the consent of the parties, allowed an amendment of the pleadings by the addition of a prayer that the rights of the several defendants might be ascertained and declared by the decree of the Court. The Court then enquired into the rival claims of the defendants, and declared their respective rights. One of the defendants preferred an appeal from the judgment to the Privy Council and a preliminary objection was taken to the competency of the appeal. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that, though the amendment of the pleadings in the Court below could not have been made except by a consent of parties and though the Court below had been invited by the rival claimants to adjudicate upon their rights inter se, there was no stipulation that the right of appeal should be given up. The parties did not contemplate that the Judge was to hear the cause otherwise than as a Judge or that the litigation was not to go on subject to all the incidents of a cause regularly heard in Court, including an appeal to the Judicial Committee. There was nothing in the proceedings suggesting that the parties waived their right of appeal. It was in this context that the Judicial Committee made the following observations:—

“It is true that there was a deviation from the cursum curiae, but the Court had jurisdiction over the subject and the assumption of the duty of another tribunal is not involved in the question. Departures from ordinary practice by consent are of every day occurrence; but unless there is an attempt to give the Court jurisdiction which it does not possess, or something occurs which is such a violent strain upon its procedure that it puts it entirely out of its course, so that a Court of appeal cannot properly review the decision, such departures have never been held to deprive either of the parties of the right of appeal”

The Privy Council added that it was wrong to regard the decision of the Court as an award of an arbitrator or to attribute an intention to the parties that the decision should not be open to appeal.

A review of all these decisions shows that the question as to the nature of an order made in circumstances similar to those with which we are concerned has been considered both in England and in India primarily for the purpose of deciding whether such an order is subject to an appeal like an ordinary judgment of a Court from which an appeal lies. In some cases, the right of appeal was negatived on the ground that such a decision was in the nature of an arbitrator's award. In other cases, it has been treated as a judgment amounting to a decision by consent of parties. In the case before us, the position is different. No appeal was ever sought to be filed against the order of Mallick, J., dated 1st April, 1963. Further the language of the agreement of the parties, on the basis of which Mallick, J., proceeded to make that order, was different from that considered in these various decisions. At the first stage, the parties got it recorded that the matters were to be settled and referred to the sole arbitration of Mallick, J. The parties agreed to abide by any decision that might be given by him and that no evidence need be taken except or to whatever extent Mallick, J. might desire. The evidence need not be recorded in any formal manner. Mallick, J., was to have all the summary powers, including the power to divide and partition the properties. The conferment of these powers on Mallick, J., who was already seized of the partition suit, was clearly intended to enable him to function as an arbitrator so as not be bound by the rules of procedure applicable to him as a Court. At the same time, the parties added that Mallick, J., was to make such decrees as he thought fit and proper and, for the purpose of partition, if necessary, he could engage or appoint Surveyors and Commissioners as he thought best. On the face of it, an arbitrator could not pass any decree. The decree could only be passed by Mallick, J., in his capacity of Court seized of the suit. Even if it be held that the first part of the agreement had the effect of bringing about a reference to him in his capacity as arbitrator, he did not cease to be seized of the partition suit as a Court. Even under the Arbitration Act if a reference is made to an arbitrator in a suit pending in a Court, the Court does not cease to have jurisdiction over the suit. All that is required by the provisions of the Arbitration Act is that no further proceedings are to be taken by the Court, except in accordance with the other provisions of that Act. The suit continues to remain pending before the Court. In a case like the present, where the arbitration agreement envisages that the Presiding Officer of the Court should himself act as an arbitrator, he, in such circumstances, will obviously occupy a dual capacity. He will be both an arbitrator to decide the matters referred to him by the agreement of the parties, and a Court before which the suit continues to remain pending having jurisdiction to deal with the suit in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act. It is a question whether a reference to arbitration by a Presiding Judge, before whom a suit is pending, can be competently made under the Arbitration Act, but that is a point on which we need express no opinion, because if it be held that there was no reference to arbitration in the present case, the order passed by Mallick, J., must be held to be a preliminary decree passed by him as a Court seized of the partition suit. On the other hand, even if it be held that there was a competent reference, it is clear that, after deciding the matters left to his decision as an arbitrator by the parties Mallick, J., proceeded further to deal with the suit himself as a Court and to pass a preliminary decree in it which course being adopted by him was envisaged by the parties themselves when they stated that he could make such decrees in the suit as he thought fit. The actual order passed by Mallick, J. also makes it clear that, in passing that order, he purported to act as the Court deciding the suit and not as the arbitrator to whom some matters in dispute were referred by the parties. At the beginning of the order, Mallick, J., described himself as "the Court". When making the operative order, he used the following language:—

"In the result, for the present, I will pass a preliminary decree as under :—"

On the face of it, when he passed this order, he acted as a Judge seized of the suit who alone was competent to pass the preliminary decree in the suit. Consequently, we cannot accept the submission made by Mr. Chagla that the order made by Mallick, J., should be held to be an award of an arbitrator pure and simple and not a decree by a Court.

We are not concerned in this appeal with the question whether it was appropriate for Mallick, J., to have dealt with the suit in this manner, nor whether the actual order made by him passing the preliminary decree was correct or was liable to be set aside on the ground of the incorrect procedure adopted by him. As we have mentioned earlier, the sole relief claimed before the High Court was the issue of a writ of mandamus directing the Registrar on the Original Side to recall, cancel and withdraw this order and to take it off the record, on the ground that it was an award and not a judgment of the Court. Since we have held that it was a judgment of the Court, the Registrar on the Original Side, under the Rules of the Calcutta High Court, was bound to file it on the record and retain it there. The appellant could have sought appropriate remedy for having that judgment vacated and, if such a remedy had been sought against that judgment directly, the question whether it was a good judgment and should be retained on the record or not, could have been appropriately decided. The remedy sought by the appellant of seeking a writ to restrain the Registrar on the Original Side from keeping the judgment on the record of the suit could not possibly be allowed, while the judgment stood and was not vacated.

In the result, we have to hold that the order of the High Court dismissing the petition filed by the appellant was correct and justified. The appeal is dismissed, but, in view of the special circumstances of this case, we direct parties to bear their own costs.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 80—Object of—Notice issued by Karta of undivided joint family—Disruption, of the family subsequent to notice—Suit by all divided members—Cause of action mentioned and relief claimed in the notice same as in the plaint—Notice given by karta sufficient to sustain suit brought by divided coparceners.

The object of the notice under section 80, Civil Procedure Code is to give to the Government or the public servant concerned an opportunity to reconsider its or his legal position and if that course is justified to make amends or settle in claim out of Court. The section is no-doubt imperative; failure to serve notice complying with the requirements of the statute will entail dismissal of the suit. But the notice must be reasonably construed. Any unimportant error or defect cannot be permitted to be treated as an excuse for defeating a just claim. In considering whether the provisions of the statute are complied with, the Court must take into consideration the following matters in each case (1) whether the name, description and residence of the plaintiff are given so as to enable the authorities to identify the person serving the notice, (2) whether the cause of action and the relief which the plaintiff claim are set out with sufficient particularity; (3) whether a notice in writing has been delivered to or left at the office of the appropriate authority mentioned in the section; and (4) whether the suit is instituted after the expiration of two months next after notice has been served, and the plaint contains a statement that such a notice has been delivered or left. In construing the notice the Court cannot ignore the object of the Legislature viz., to give to the Government or public servant concerned an opportunity to reconsider its or his legal position. If on reasonable reading of the notice the plaintiff is shown to have given the information which the statute requires him to give, any incidental defects or irregularities should be ignored. It is true that the terms of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code must be strictly complied but that does not mean that the terms of the notice should be scrutinized in an artificial or pedantic manner.

On facts held, it is true that Beohar Raghubir Singh did not expressly describe himself as the karta. But reading of the contents of the notice Exhibit P-8 in a reasonable manner it appears that the claim of Beohar Raghubir Singh was made on behalf of the joint family. There was identity between the person giving the notice and the persons filing the suit because it must be deemed in law that each of the plaintiffs had given the notice under section 80, Civil Procedure Code through the Karta Beohar Raghubir Singh. The notice given by the karta was sufficient to sustain the suit brought by the divided coparceners.

On facts held, that the plaintiffs had not established their title.

Appeals by Special Leave from the Judgment and Decree dated the 16th April, 1963 of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in First Appeal No. 217 of 1959.

S. V. Gupte, Senior Advocate (P.C. Bhartari, Advocate, and J.B. Dadachanji, Advocate of Messrs. J. B. Dadachanji & Co., with him), for Appellants (In C.A. No. 386 of 1966) and Respondents (In C.A.No. 387 of 1966).

I. N. Shroff, Advocate and Miss Rama Gupta, Government Advocate of Madhya Pradesh for State of Madhya Pradesh.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Ramaswami, J.—These appeals are brought by Special Leave from the judgment of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh dated 16th April, 1963, in First Appeal No. 217 of 1959, whereby the High Court modified partly the judgment of the First Additional District Judge, Jabalpur dismissing Civil Suit No. 10-A of 1954.

The suit was instituted against the State of Madhya Pradesh by Beohar Raghubir Singh and his three grand-sons. Beohar Raghubir Singh's son Beohar Rajendra Sinha, was a pro forma defendant. A notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code had been given by Raghubir Singh on 11th January, 1954. Plaintiffs 2, 3 and 4, his grand-sons were joined as plaintiffs because in a partition made subsequent to the giving of the notice, they were each entitled to 1/5th share along with the first plaintiff. Beohar Rajendra Sinha was joined as a defendant because he did not choose to join as the plaintiff. The plaintiffs sought a declaration (1) that the three nazul plots in suit had been in possession of the plaintiffs and their predecessors in their own right from time immemorial and their status was that of Rajya Sarkar; and (2) that the order of the State Government in the Survey and Settlement Department refusing to recognise their possession over the plots was wrong and ultra vires. The dispute relates to Phoota Tal, a tank situated within the town of Jabalpur. It was plot No. 282 in the settlement of 1863 A.D. Its area then was 5.24 acres. It was recorded as Malkiat Sarkar and in the last column there was an entry showing possession of Aman Singh Thakur Prasad. The next settlement took place in 1890-91. The survey number of Phoota Tal was changed to plot No. 325. Its area remained the same, it was recorded as "water (pani)" and in the last column, the entry showed the possession of Beohar Narpatsingh Raghubir Singh. The third settlement took place in 1909-10. The plot number of Phoota Tal was then changed to 327. Its area remained the same, it was still recorded as "water" but there was no entry in favour of any one showing possession. The nazul settlement took place in 1922-23. In this settlement, the tank was given new numbers 33, 34, 35, 36, 37 and 171. Its area was recorded as 5.2 acres. In this settlement about 2 acres of land was found to be occupied by the Municipal Committee, Jabalpur. The land so found to be occupied was recorded as in the possession of the Municipal Committee, Jabalpur and the remaining land was again recorded as "malkiat sarkar". There was no entry regarding possession in the remarks column so far as the remaining land was concerned. The plaintiffs alleged that Thakur Prasad and Aman Singh were their ancestors, that they had been in continuous possession of the disputed land and the omission to record their possession in the last two settlements of 1909-10 and 1922-23 was due to some oversight. In 1948 the first plaintiff made an application for correction to the Deputy Commissioner, Jabalpur who made an order in his favour Exhibit P-5. The order of the Deputy Commissioner was however set aside by the State Government on 28th May, 1953 and it was held that the plaintiffs had no title to the disputed land. The plaintiff therefore prayed for a declaration of the title to the disputed plots and for the correction of the entry in the settlement record showing the status of the plaintiff as that of "Raiyat Sarkar". The suit was contested by the State of Madhya Pradesh. It was urged that the plaintiff had no possession over the disputed land and the order of the State Government dated 28th May, 1953, was correct. It was contended that plaintiffs 2, 3 and 4 had no right to institute the suit because no notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code was given on their behalf. The suit was not contested by the second defendant Beohar Rajendra Sinha. By its judgment dated 24th January, 1959 the trial Court held that there was no documentary evidence from 1891 to 1932 to support the possession of the ancestors of the plaintiffs regarding Phoota Tal. The trial Court also held that in all the settlement entries, the land was recorded as belonging to the Government "Milkiat Sarkar". In any event, between 1891 to 1932 there was no evidence regarding the user of the property by the plaintiffs and in the subsequent years a part of the property was found in possession of the Municipal Committee. The trial Court dismissed the suit. Against the judgment of the trial Court the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the High Court. The High Court held in the first place that the notice Exhibit P-8 was not in conformity with section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. The High Court held that Beohar Raghubir Singh had lost the right to represent the joint family as karta at the time of institution of the suit because there had been a severance of joint status and the notice served by Beohar Raghubir Singh could not ensure to the benefit of the other plaintiffs. On the merits of the case, the High Court found that the plaintiffs had established their possession for the statutory period of 60 years. The High Court held that the plaintiffs had acquired the right of Raiyat Sarkar and that the order of the State Government refusing to correct the revenue record was illegal. On these findings the High Court modified the judgment of the trial Court to the extent that there was a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs that they were entitled to 1/5th share of the property in dispute and the claim regarding the 4/5th share was dismissed. The order of the State Government dated 28th May, 1953 refusing to recognise the possession of the plaintiffs was held to be wrong and illegal.

The first question to be considered in these appeals is whether the High Court was right in holding that the notice given under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code by the first plaintiff was effective only with regard to Raghubir Singh and the notice was ineffective with regard to the other plaintiffs and therefore Raghubir Singh alone was entitled to a declaration as regards the 1/5th share of the disputed plot. On behalf of defendant No. 1 it was contended by Mr. Shroff that at the time of giving notice the plaintiffs and the second defendant were joint and plaintiff No. 1 Raghubir Singh was karta of the joint family. The notice was given on 11th January, 1954 and the suit was instituted on 20th July, 1954. It was admitted that between these two dates there was a disruption of the joint family of which Raghubir Singh was karta. It was argued that the right of the first plaintiff to represent the family had come to an end before the institution of the suit, and hence plaintiffs 2, 3 and 4 had to comply individually with the provisions of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code before appearing as plaintiffs in the suit. In our opinion, there is no justification for this argument. We consider that there is substantial identity between the person giving the notice and the persons filing the suit in the present case. At the time of giving notice the first plaintiff Beohar Raghubir Singh was admittedly the eldest member of the joint family and being a karta he was entitled to represent the joint family in all its affairs. The cause of action had accrued at the time of giving of the notice and it was not necessary to give a second notice merely because there was a severance of the joint family, before 20th July, 1954 when the suit was actually instituted. It is obvious that the notice was given by Beohar Raghubir Singh as a representative of the joint family and in view of the subsequent partition the suit had to be instituted by all the divided members of the joint family. We are of the opinion that the notice given by Beohar Raghubir Singh on 11th January, 1954, was sufficient in law to sustain a suit brought by all the divided coparceners who must be deemed to be as much the authors of the notice as the karta who was the actual signatory of the notice. There is substantial identity between the person giving the notice and the persons bringing the suit in the present case and the argument of defendant No. 1 on this point must be rejected.

The object of the notice under section 80, Civil Procedure Code is to give to the Government or the public servant concerned an opportunity to reconsider its or his legal position and if that course is justified to make amends or settle the claim out of Court. The section is no doubt imperative; failure to serve notice complying with the requirements of the statute will entail dismissal of the suit. But the notice must be reasonably construed. Any unimportant error or defect cannot be permitted to be treated as an excuse for defeating a just claim. In considering whether the provisions of the statute are complied with, the Court must take into account the following matters in each case (1) whether the name, description and residence of the plaintiff are given so as to enable the authorities to identify the person serving the notice; (2) whether the cause of action and the relief which the plaintiff claims are set out with sufficient particularity, (3) whether a notice in writing has been delivered to or left at the office of the appropriate authority mentioned in the section; and (4) whether the suit is instituted after the expiration of two months next after notice has been served, and of the plaint contains a statement that such a notice has been so delivered or left. In construing the notice the Court cannot ignore the object of the Legislature, viz., to give to the Government or the public servants concerned an opportunity to reconsider its or his legal position. If on a reasonable reading of the notice the plaintiff is shown to have given the information which the statute requires him to give any incidental defects or irregularities should be ignored.

In the present case, the notice was served on 11th January, 1954 by Beohar Raghubir Singh. The notice stated the cause of action arising in favour of the joint family. The requirements as to cause of action, the name, description and residence of the plaintiff were complied with and the reliefs which the plaintiff claimed were duly set out in the notice. It is true that Beohar Raghubir Singh did not expressly describe himself as the karta. But reading the contents of the notice Exhibit P-8 in a reasonable manner it appears to us that the claim of Beohar Raghubir Singh was made on behalf of the joint family. It is true that the terms of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code must be strictly complied but that does not mean that the terms of the notice should be scrutinised in an artificial or pedantic manner. In *Dihan Singh Sobah Singh and another v. The Union of India and another*¹, Bhagwati, J., observed in the course of his judgment—

“We are constrained to observe that the approach of the High Court to this question not well-founded. The Privy Council not doubt laid down in *Bhakchand Dagadusa v. Secretary of State*², that the terms of this section should be strictly complied with. That does not however mean that the terms of the notice should be scrutinised in a pedantic manner or in a manner completely divorced from common sense. As was stated by Pollock C. B. in *Jones v. Nicholls*³. “We must import a little common sense into notices of this kind.” Beaumont G.J., also observed in *Chandu Lal Vadilal v. Government of Bombay*⁴, “One must construe section 80 with some regard to common sense and to the object with which it appears to have been passed.....”

As already pointed out, the suit was instituted in the present case by the divided members of the Hindu joint family on 20th July, 1954. The notice had been given on 11th January, 1954 by Beohar Raghubir Singh who was the karta of the undivided joint family. In our opinion, there was identity between the person giving a notice and the persons filing the suit because it must be deemed in law that each of the plaintiffs had given the notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code through the karta Beohar Raghubir Singh. It is not disputed that the cause of action set out in the notice remained unchanged in the suit. It is also not said that the relief set out in the plaint is different from the relief set out in the notice. We are accordingly of the opinion that the notice given by the karta was sufficient to sustain the suit brought by the divided co-parceners and the decision of the High Court on this point must be over-ruled.

The view that we have expressed is borne out by the Judgment of this Court in *State of Andhra Pradesh v. Gundugola Venkata Suryanarayan Garu*⁵. In that case, the Government of Madras applied the provisions of the Madras Estates Rent Reduction Act, 1947 to the lands in the village Mallindhapuram on the ground that the grant was of the whole village and hence an estate within the meaning of section

3 (2) (d) of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908. The respondent and another person served a notice under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the Government of the State of Madras in which they challenged the above mentioned notification and asked the Government not to act upon it. Out of the two persons who gave the notice, the respondent alone filed the suit. The trial Court held that the original grant was not of the entire village and was not so confirmed or recognised by the Government of Madras and as it was not an "Estate" within the meaning of section 3 (2) (d) of the Madras Estates Land Act, the Madras Rent Reduction Act, 1947 did not apply to it. But the suit was dismissed on the ground that although two persons had given notice under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure, only one person had filed the suit. The High Court agreed with the trial Court that the grant was not of an entire village but it also held that the notice was not defective and the suit was maintainable as it was a representative suit and the permission of the Court under Order 1, rule 8 had been obtained in this case. The High Court granted the respondent the relief prayed for by him. Against the order of the High Court the appellant appealed to this Court which dismissed the appeal holding that in the circumstances of the case there was no illegality even though the notice was given by two persons and the suit was filed by only one. If the Court grants permission to one person to institute a representative suit and if the person had served the notice under section 80, the circumstance that another person had joined him in serving the notice but did not join him in the suit, was not a sufficient ground for regarding the suit as defective. At page 953 of Report Shah, J., observed as follows :—

"The notice in the present suit was served by the plaintiff and Yegneswara Sastri. They raised a grievance about the notification issued by the Government of Madras on 16th May, 1950; it was not an individual grievance of the two persons who served the notice but of all the Inamdars, or aghahamdars. The relief for which the suit was intended to be filed was also not restricted to their personal claim. The notice stated the cause of action arising in favour of all the Inamdars, and it is not disputed that the notice set out the relief which would be claimable by all the Inamdars or on their behalf in default of compliance with the requisition. The plaintiff it is true alone filed the suit, but he was permitted to sue for and on behalf of all the Inamdars by an order of the Court under Order 1, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The requirements as to the cause of action, the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff was therefore complied with and the relief which the plaintiff claimed was duly set out in the notice. The only departure from the notice was that two persons served a notice under section 80 informing the Government that proceedings would be started, in default of compliance with the requisition, for violation of the rights of the Inamdars, and one person only out of the two instituted the suit. That in our judgment is not a defect which brings the case within the terms of section 80."

On behalf of respondent No. 1 reference was made to the two decisions of the Judicial Committee in *Vellayan Chatti and others v. Government of the Province of Madras and another*¹, and *Government of the Province of Bombay v. Pestonji Ardesir Wadia and others*². But the principle of these decisions has no bearing on the question presented for determination in the present case. In *Vellayan Chatti's*¹ case a notice was given by one plaintiff stating the cause of action, his name, description and place of his residence and the relief which he claimed although the suit was instituted by him and another. It was observed by the Judicial Committee :

"The section according to its plain meaning requires that there should be in the language of the High Court of Madras "identity of the person who issues the notice with the person who brings the suit." : See *Venkata Rangiah Appa Rao v. Secretary of State*³, and on appeal *Venkata Rangiah Appa Rao v. Secretary of State*⁴.

To hold otherwise would be to admit an implication or exception for which there is no justification."

Two persons had sued for a declaration that certain lands belonged to them, and for an order setting aside the decision of the Appellate Survey Officer in regard to those lands. It was found that one alone out of the two persons had served the notice. The relief claimed by the two persons was personal to them and the right thereto arose out of their title to the land claimed by them. It was held by the Judicial Committee that without a proper notice under section 80 the suit could not be instituted for to hold otherwise would be to admit an implication or exception for which there was no justification. In the other case, in *Pestonji Ardeshir Wadia's*¹ case two trustees of a trust served a notice in October, 1933 upon the Government of Bombay under section 80 intimating that the trustees intended to institute a suit against the Government on the cause of action and for the relief set out therein. One of the trustees died before the plaint was lodged in Court, and two more trustees were appointed in the place of the deceased trustee. Thereafter the two new trustees and the surviving trustee filed the suit out of which the appeal arose which was decided by the Judicial Committee. No notice was served on the Government on behalf of the two new trustees. The Judicial Committee accepted the view of the High Court that where there were three plaintiffs, the names and addresses of all of them must be given in the notice. Their Lordships observed that:

"the provisions of section 80 of the Code are imperative and should be strictly complied with before it can be said that a notice valid in law has been served on the Government. In the present case it is not contended that any notice on behalf of plaintiffs 2 and 3 was served on the Government before the filing of the suit."

It is clear that the principle of these two decisions of the Judicial Committee has no application in the present case because the material facts are different.

We proceed to consider the next question arising in these appeals, viz., whether the High Court was right in holding that the plaintiffs had established their title as raiyat sarkar with regard to 1/5th share in nazul plots Nos. 34/31, 33 and 171/1 mentioned in the Deputy Commissioner's order, dated 7th May, 1948 in Revenue Case No. 9 /45-46. It was argued on behalf of defendant No. 1 that there was no evidence to show that the plaintiffs were in possession of the land from 1909 to 1932, and the plaintiffs had not established their title by prescription for the statutory period of 60 years. It was contended that the High Court had no justification for holding that the plaintiffs had established the title of "Raiyat Sarkar" and the finding of the High Court was not based upon any evidence. In our opinion, the argument put forward on behalf of defendant No. 1 is well-founded and must be accepted as correct. In the settlement of 1863-64 Exhibit P-1 the names of Amansingh and Thakurprasad were noted in the remarks column. But the column regarding tenancy right is definitely blank. The owner is shown in the Khasra as the State "Milkiat Sarkar." In the settlement of 1890-91 Amansingh Narpatsingh is again shown in the remarks column of the karta. But the column regarding any kind of tenancy right is again blank. It is clear that in the settlements of 1860 and 1890-91 the ownership of the land is recorded as that of the Government. The possession of the plaintiffs or of their ancestors could not be attributed to ownership or tenancy right of the property. In the settlement of 1909-10, Exhibit P-3 there is no entry in the remarks column showing the possession of the ancestors of the plaintiffs. It was said on behalf of the plaintiffs that no notice was given to them of the proceedings of the settlement of 1909-10. Even assuming that this allegation is correct, the entries of the khasra P-3 cannot be treated to be a nullity and of no effect. In any event, it was open to the plaintiffs to adduce other reliable evidence to prove their possession between the years 1909 to 1932. But the plaintiffs have failed to produce any such evidence. In the nazul settlement of 1922-23 the tank was given new plot numbers 33, 34, 35, 36, 37 and 171 and its area was recorded as 5.24 acres. In this settlement about 2 acre of land was found to be occupied by the Municipal Committee, Jabalpur. The land so found to be occupied was recorded as in the possession of the Municipal Committee, Jabalpur and the remaining land was again recorded as "Malkiat Sarkar." There is no entry as regards the remaining land recording anybody's possession in the remarks column. Actually proclamations were made during this settlement and objections were invited as per Exhibit ID-14. A date was fixed upto 31st August, 1924 but no one came forward. The proclamation clearly recited that the vacant sites which were not in possession of anybody were not recognised as belonging to any person. It is impossible to believe that the plaintiffs or their ancestors were unaware of such a proclamation. Had they been in possession they would not have failed to make a claim. For the period after 1933-34 the plaintiffs produced account books to show that they exercised certain rights. Certain receipts were also proved but they also relate to a period after 1939. We have gone through the oral evidence produced by the plaintiffs and it appears to be unreliable. The result is that for the period 1891 till 1932 there is no reliable oral documentary evidence to prove that the plaintiffs or their ancestors had any possession over the disputed land. On the contrary the disputed land i.e., Phoota Tal was always recognised as Malkiat Sarkar and the State Government was justified in holding that the order of the Deputy Commissioner, dated 7th May, 1948 should be set aside.

In the course of the argument reference was made by Mr. Gupte to the following passage in the Central Provinces Settlement Instructions (Reprint of 1953) page 213 :

"In dealing with proposed method of the settlement of titles it will be convenient in order to remove all causes for misapprehension among residents, to lay emphasis on the policy of Government in making these settlements. That policy was defined in the Chief Commissioner's Resolution No. 502-BK dated the 19th October, 1917, in the Revenue and Scarcity Department, but its main principles will bear repetition.

As it is not the intention of Government in making the settlement to disturb long possession, but only to obtain an accurate record of the lands which are its property and to secure its right to any land revenue to which it may be entitled, long possession, even without clear proof of a definite grant from Government will be recognised as entitled the holder to possession. In deciding what constitutes long possession in any individual town, regard will be had to the special circumstances of the place, and while this point will be dealt with more particularly in the Deputy Commissioner's report, the following general principles will ordinarily be observed:

(1) all occupants who are able to prove possession to any land prior to 1891 or such later date as may be fixed for each town, either by themselves or by a valid title from a previous holder, and all occupants who can prove a definite grant or lease from Government will be recorded as entitled to hold such land as against Government (paragraph 6 of the Resolution)."

On the basis of this passage it was argued that it was the duty of the settlement officer to treat the plaintiffs as having established their title because they were shown to be in possession in the settlement of the year 1890-91. We are unable to accept this argument as correct. The passage quoted above only applies to a case where the ownership of the land was unknown, i.e., where possession is proved for a long time, but its original title could not be traced, and not to a case where the land is recorded as Government land.

For the reasons expressed, we hold that the suit brought by the plaintiffs being Civil Suit No. 10-A of 1954 should be dismissed. Civil Appeal 386 of 1966 is accordingly dismissed and Civil Appeal 387 of 1966 is allowed with costs in favour of defendant No. 1 i.e., State of Madhya Pradesh. There will be one hearing fee.

Practice—Judicial trial—Essential attributes—Disputed claim—Judicial determination, to be supported by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves to a Judge.Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 20, rules 1 to 8 and Order 49, rule 3—Scope—Chartered High Court not obliged to record a judgment strictly according to Order 20, Rules 4 and 5—Order 49, rule 3 how far applies to the trial of suits by Chartered High Courts—Judicial determination to be supported by reasons duly recorded.

It is true that rules 1 to 8 of Order 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure are, by the express provision contained in Order 49, rule 3, Clause (5) in applicable to a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction. A Judge of a Chartered High Court is not obliged to record a judgment strictly according to the provisions contained in rules 4 (2) and 5 of Order 20, Code of Civil Procedure. But the privilege of not recording a judgment is intended normally to apply where the action is under undefended, where the parties are not at issue on any substantial matter, in a summary trial of an action where leave to defend is not granted, in making interlocutory orders or in disposing of formal proceedings and the like. Order 49, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure undoubtedly applies to the trial of suits; but the question is not one merely of power but of exercise of judicial discretion in the exercise of that power. The function of a judicial trial is to hear and decide a matter in contest between the parties in open Court in the presence of parties according to the procedure prescribed for investigation of the dispute and the rules of evidence. The conclusion of the Court ought normally to be supported by reasons duly recorded. This requirement transcends all technical rules of procedure.

The plaintiff's case was founded upon extracts of Bank account; the extracts however do not evidence the agreement under which the money passed from the plaintiff to Ghosh (husband of the appellant). The plaintiff had to prove not only that money passed from him to Ghosh, he had to prove that money passed under the agreement pleaded by him. Oral testimony of the plaintiff had to be examined in the context of several weighty circumstances, e.g., complete absence of documentary evidence in the handwriting of Ghosh; absence of correspondence relating to the transactions between Ghosh and the plaintiff; absence of books of account in support of the transactions; improbability of a transaction of the nature pleaded between an attorney and the plaintiff, absence of any previous business or professional relationship between Ghosh and the plaintiff; absence of vouchers supporting the alleged payment of interest and repayment of part of the principal and other important circumstances. In reaching a conclusion the Court had to consider the probabilities and the circumstances in which the plaintiff alleged that he had deposited the two sums of money with Ghosh. It was essentially a case in which there should have been a full record of the reasons which persuaded the learned Trial Judge to reach the conclusion he did. A mere order directing payment of the money, not supported by reasons, does not do duty or a judgment according to law.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 4th August, 1964 of the Calcutta High Court in Appeal from Original Order No. 99 of 1963.

D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Appellant.

S. C. Majumdar, Advocate, for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—Birendra Krishna Ghosh—hereinafter called “Ghosh”—was practising as an attorney-at-law in the High Court of Calcutta. He died in August, 1950. H. K. Banerjee—the first respondent herein—commenced in 1951 an action in the High Court of Calcutta on the original side against Swaran Lata and Arun Kumar—widow and minor son respectively of Ghosh—on a decree of Rs. 15,000 claiming that it was the balance of “capital deposits” due to him from Ghosh and Rs. 1,535 interest due thereon. The plaintiff claimed that he had deposited with Ghosh Rs. 6,000 on 10th December, 1946 for the “specific purpose of investing the amount” and the latter agreed to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum and to repay the same or any portion thereof when demanded; that on or about 17th February, 1948, he had deposited Rs. 10,000 with Ghosh also for “the specific purpose of investing” that sum, and the latter had agreed to pay interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum and to repay the same or part thereof when demanded; that under the agreement Ghosh paid diverse sums of money as interest, and on 3rd July, 1947 Ghosh repaid Rs. 1,000 out of Rs. 6,000 deposited; and that the balance of Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 1,535 interest due thereon were repayable by the defendants to the plaintiff.

Swaran Lata filed a written statement denying the claim of the plaintiff. She denied that the sums of Rs. 6,000 and Rs. 10,000 were entrusted to or deposited with her husband as alleged by the plaintiff: she denied that her husband repaid any amounts towards interest or part payment of principal; and she submitted that the suit was in any event barred by the law of limitation.

The trial of the suit commenced before Law, J., on 12th July, 1962. In support of the plaintiff's case four witnesses were examined. The plaintiff tendered in evidence extracts from certain Bank accounts and correspondence. He produced no documentary evidence in support of his case that any amount was deposited with Ghosh, on terms set out in the plaint. Apparently he relied upon the entries in the extracts from the statements of account with the United Bank of India Ltd., the Imperial Bank of India, the Hooghly Bank Ltd. and correspondence between him and Swaran Lata. The learned Judge by order, dated 17th August, 1962 passed the following order:

“There will be a decree for Rs. 15,000 with interest on judgment on Rs. 15,000 at 6 per cent. per annum and costs. No interim interest allowed.”

Pursuant to that order a decree was drawn up.

Against the decree Swaran Lata appealed to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and raised several grounds in the memo. of appeal on the merits. The High Court disposed of the appeal by a short judgment observing:

“We think that the plaintiff sufficiently proved the case made in the plaint. On the 10th December, 1946, the plaintiff entrusted and deposited with Birendra Krishna Ghosh a sum of Rs. 6,000 for the express and specific purpose of investing the sum to yield interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. He also entrusted and deposited with Birendra Krishna Ghosh on the 17th February, 1948 a sum of Rs. 10,000 for “the express and specific purpose of investing the sum to yield interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum.”

The Court observed that the amounts paid to Ghosh were deposits, within the meaning of Article 60 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and since interest was paid in respect of both the deposits within three years of the institution of the suit, no question of limitation arose, and the Trial Court had “rightly decreed the suit.” The High Court, however, modified the decree passed by the Trial Court and declared that the liability of the defendants was not personal and was limited only to “the assets and properties” of Ghosh received by them. With Special Leave, Swaran Lata Ghosh has appealed to this Court.

The defendants had filed a written statement denying the averments in the plaint and had contested the claim of the plaintiff. The learned Judge apparently raised no issues. We have found in the printed paper book no record of any issues raised. On behalf of the plaintiff, witnesses were examined to prove the two deposits and the terms of the deposit which it was claimed were orally agreed upon. There was no documentary evidence supporting the case of the plaintiff relating to the agreements between him and Ghosh. There was also no documentary evidence supporting the case of payment of interest on the amounts deposited, or of re-payment of a part of the principal. Indisputably the pleadings of the parties raised substantial issues of fact for trial, and a lengthy trial was held. But the learned Trial Judge delivered no judgment. He merely decreed the claim. The decree was on the face of it erroneous, because it directed Swaran Lata and her minor son Arun Kumar personally to pay the amount decreed.

Trial of a civil dispute in Court is intended to achieve, according to law and the procedure of the Court, a judicial determination between the contesting parties of the matter in controversy. Opportunity to the parties interested in the dispute to present their respective cases on questions of law as well as fact, ascertainment of facts by means of evidence tendered by the parties, and adjudication by a reasoned judgment of the dispute upon a finding on the facts in controversy and application of the law to the facts found, are essential attributes of a judicial trial. In a judicial trial the Judge not only must reach a conclusion which he regards as just, but, unless otherwise permitted, by the practice of the Court or by law, he must regard the ultimate mental process leading from the dispute to its solution. A judicial determination of a disputed claim where substantial questions of law or fact arise is satisfactorily reached, only if it be supported by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves to the Judge; a mere order deciding the matter in dispute not supported by reasons is no judgment at all. Recording of reasons in support of a decision of a disputed claim serves more purposes than one. It is intended to ensure that the decision is not the result of whim or fancy, but of a judicial approach to the matter in contest: it is also intended to ensure adjudication of the matter according to law and the procedure established by law. A party to the dispute is ordinarily entitled to know the grounds on which the Court has decided against him, and more so, when the judgment is subject to appeal. The Appellate Court will then have adequate material on which it may determine whether the facts are properly ascertained, the law has been correctly applied and the resultant decision is just. It is unfortunate that the learned Trial Judge has recorded no reasons in support of his conclusion, and the High Court in appeal merely recorded that they thought that the plaintiff had sufficiently proved the case in the plaint.

The defendants it is true led no oral evidence and produced no documentary evidence. But the defendants had apparently no personal knowledge about the transactions and there is no clear evidence on the record that the first defendant Swaran Lata had in her possession any books of account of the deceased which she could have produced and had withheld. The burden of proving the claim in all its details lay upon the plaintiff. Absence of a documentary evidence in support of the case made the burden more onerous.

We are unable to agree with Counsel for the plaintiff that “for all practical purposes” the action was undefended and that the Trial Judge recorded merely formal evidence in proof of the plaintiff’s case. The defendants had filed a written statement denying the plaintiff’s claim, had appeared by Counsel at the trial, and had challenged the plaintiff’s evidence by intensive cross-examination. The plaintiff who was the principal witness was asked as many as 317 questions and his examination appears to have taken the better part of a day. In the course of the examination in attempting to elicit the truth the learned Judge took no mean or insignificant part. Three more witnesses were also examined.

We are also unable to agree that the only plea raised at the trial and in the Court of appeal was about the personal liability of the defendants. The evidence led at the trial and the cross-examination amply establish that the defendants defended the claim on the merits. The High Court in appeal modified the decree and restricted it to the estate inherited by the defendants from Ghosh. But there is no reason to hold that the only point argued before the Trial Court related to the extent of liability of the defendants. The grounds in the memorandum of appeal belie that submission.

It is true that rules 1 to 8 of Order 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure are, by the express provision contained in Order 49, rule 3, clause (5) inapplicable to a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary or Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. A Judge of a Chartered High Court is not obliged to record a judgment strictly according to the provisions contained in rules 4 (2) and 5 of Order 20, Code of Civil Procedure. But the privilege of not recording a judgment is intended normally to apply where the action is undefended, where the parties are not at issue on any substantial matter, in a summary trial of an action where leave to defend is not granted, in making interlocutory orders or in disposing of formal proceedings and the like. Order 49, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure undoubtedly applies to the trial of suits; but the question is not one merely of power but of exercise of judicial discretion in the exercise of that power. The function of a judicial trial is to hear and decide a matter in contest between the parties in open Court in the presence of parties according to the procedure prescribed for investigation of the dispute, and the rules of evidence. The conclusion of the Court ought normally to be supported by reasons duly recorded. This requirement transcends all technical rules of procedure.

We may assume that the learned Trial Judge was satisfied that the claim of the plaintiff deserved to be decreed. But the judgment of the learned Trial Judge was not final: it was subject to appeal and unless there was a reasoned judgment recorded by the Trial Judge, an appeal against the judgment may turn out to be an empty formality. A Court of appeal generally attaches great value to the views formed by the Judge of First Instance who had seen the witnesses and noted their demeanour. How the Judge who tried the suit reacted to the evidence of a witness may not always be found from the printed record.

The plaintiff's case was founded upon extracts of Bank accounts: the extracts however do not evidence the agreement under which the money passed from the plaintiff to Ghosh. The plaintiff had to prove not only that money passed from him to Ghosh; he had to prove that money passed under the agreement pleaded by him. Oral testimony of the plaintiff had to be examined in the context of several weighty circumstances, e.g., complete absence of documentary evidence in the handwriting of Ghosh; absence of correspondence relating to the transactions between Ghosh and the plaintiff; absence of books of account in support of the transactions; improbability of a transaction of the nature pleaded between an Attorney and the plaintiff; absence of any previous business or professional relationship between Ghosh and the plaintiff; absence of vouchers supporting the alleged payment of interest and repayment of part of the principal and other important circumstances. In reaching a conclusion the Court had to consider the probabilities and the circumstances in which the plaintiff alleged that he had deposited the two sums of money with Ghosh. It was essentially a case in which there should have been a full record of the reasons which persuaded the learned Trial Judge to reach the conclusion he did. A mere order directing payment of the money, not supported by reasons, does not do duty for a judgment according to law.

We are, therefore, constrained to come to the conclusion that there has been no real trial of the defendants' case. It is a very unfortunate state of affairs that eighteen years after the date on which the suit was instituted, we have to remand the suit for trial according to law. But we see no other satisfactory alternative.

The decree passed by the High Court is set aside.' The suit stands remanded to the Court of First Instance for trial according to law. It will be open to the learned Judge who tries the suit to proceed on the evidence already on the record. If the parties desire to lead any additional evidence, he will give them opportunity in that behalf. If the learned Judge is of the opinion that the witnesses should be examined over again before him, he may adopt that course.

As costs till now incurred are thrown away on account of circumstances for which the parties may not be held responsible, we direct that there will be no order as to costs till this date.

We may state that the observations made by us in the course of this judgment are not intended to express any opinion by this Court on the merits of the dispute.

Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal

v.

National Building Material Supply, Gurgaon

.. Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 153 and Order 6, rule 17—Amendment of pleading—Granting of—Suit instituted by plaintiff in the name in which the business was carried on—Amendment of plaint to describe plaintiff as the Proprietor—Whether can be granted—Limitation.

Rules of Procedure are intended to be handmaid to the administration of justice. A party cannot be refused just relief merely because of some mistake, negligence, inadvertance or even infraction of the rules of Procedure. The Court always gives leave to amend the pleading of a party, unless it is satisfied that the party applying was acting mala fide or that by his blunder, he had caused injury to his opponent which may not be compensated for by an order of costs. However, negligent or careless may have been the first omission and, however late the proposed amendment, the amendment may be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side. All amendments should be permitted as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties, unless by permitting the amendment injustice may result to the other side. There is no rule that unless in an application for an amendment of the plaint, it is expressly averred that the error, omission or misdescription is due to bona fide mistake, the Court has no power to grant leave to amend the plaint. The power to grant amendment of the pleadings is intended to serve the ends of justice and is not governed by any such narrow or technical limitations.

On facts held, that the order passed by the trial Court in granting the amendment was right.

It was further held, since the name in which the action was instituted was merely a misdescription of the original plaintiff, no question of limitation arises; the plaint must be deemed on amendment to have been instituted in the name of the real plaintiff, on the date on which it was originally instituted.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 9th November, 1964 of the Allahabad High Court in First Appeal No. 257 of 1953.

S. C. Manchanda, Senior Advocate (S. K. Mehta and K. L. Mehta, Advocates, with him), for Appellant.

Bishan Narain, Senior Advocate (Harbans Singh, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—On 11th March, 1950, Manohar Lal s/o. Jai Jai Ram commenced an action in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nainital, for a decree for Rs. 10,139/12 being the value of timber supplied to the defendant—the National Building Material Supply, Gurgaon. The action was instituted in the name of “Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal” which was the name in which the business was carried on. The plaintiff Manohar Lal subscribed his signature at the foot of the plaint as “Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal, by the pen of Manohar Lal”, and the plaint was also similarly verified. The defendant by its written statement contended that the plaintiff was an unregistered firm and on that account incompetent to sue.

On 18th July, 1952, the plaintiff applied for leave to amend the plaint. Manohar Lal stated that “the business name of the plaintiff is Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal and therein Manohar Lal the owner and proprietor is clearly shown and named. It is a joint Hindu family business and the defendant and all knew it that Manohar Lal whose name is there along with the father’s name is the proprietor of it. The name is not an assumed or fictitious one.” The plaintiff on those averments applied for leave to describe himself in the cause title as “Manohar Lal proprietor of Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal” and in paragraph 1 to state that he carried on the business in timber in the name of Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal. Apparently no reply was filed to this application by the defendant. The Subordinate Judge granted leave to amend the plaint. He observed that there was no doubt that the real plaintiff was Manohar Lal himself, that it was Manohar Lal who intended to file and did in fact file the action, and that the “amendment was intended to bring what in effect had been done in conformity with what in fact should have been done.”

The defendant then filed a supplementary written statement raising two additional contentions—(1) that Manohar Lal was not the sole owner of the business and that his other brothers were also the owners of the business, and (2) that in any event the amendment became effective from 18th July, 1952, and on that account the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

The trial Judge decreed the claim for Rs. 6,568/6/3. Against that decree an appeal was preferred to the High Court of Allahabad. The High Court being of the view that the action was instituted in the name of a “non-existing person” and Manohar Lal having failed to aver in the application for amendment that the action was instituted in the name of “Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal” on account of some bona fide mistake or omission, the Subordinate Judge was incompetent to grant leave to amend of the plaint. The High Court after making an extensive quotation from the judgment of this Court in Purushottam Umedbhai & Company v. Messrs. Mamlal & Sons,¹ observed that the action could not be instituted by the plaintiff in the business name; it should have been instituted in the name of the karta of the Hindu undivided family in his representative capacity or else all the members of the joint family must join as plaintiffs. The Court then observed:

“The suit instituted by the joint Hindu family business in the name of an assumed business title “was a suit by a person, who did not exist and was, therefore, a nullity. Hence there could be no amendment of the description of such a plaintiff who did not exist in the eye of law. The Court below was in obvious error in thinking otherwise and allowing the name of Manohar Lal to be added as proprietor of the original plaintiff Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal, which was neither a legal entity nor an existing person who could have validly instituted the suit.”

The High Court was also of the opinion that the substitution of the name of Manohar Lal as a plaintiff during the pendency of the action took effect from 18th July, 1952, and the action must be deemed to be instituted on that date: the amendment could not take effect retrospectively and on the date of the amendment the action was barred by the law of limitation. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court with Special Leave.

1. (1961) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 38: (1961) 1 An.W.R. 982.

The order passed by the High Court cannot be sustained. Rules of procedure are intended to be handmaid to the administration of justice. A party cannot be refused just relief merely because of some mistake, negligence inadvertence or even infraction of the rules of procedure. The Court always gives leave to amend the pleading of a party, unless it is satisfied that the party applying was acting mala fide, or that by his blunder, he had caused injury to his opponent which may not be compensated for by an order of cost. However, negligent or careless may have been the first omission, and, however, late the proposed amendment, the amendment may be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side. In *Amulakchand Mewaram and others v. Babulal Kanadal Taliwala*¹, Beaumont, C J., in delivering the judgment of the Bombay High Court set out the principles applicable to cases like the present and observed :

“.....the question whether there should be an amendment or not really turns upon whether the name in which the suit is brought in the name of a non-existent person or whether it is merely a misdescription of existing persons. If the former is the case, the suit is a nullity and no amendment can cure it. If the latter is the case, prima facie, there ought to be an amendment because the general rule, subject no doubt to certain exceptions, is that the Court should always allow an amendment where any loss to the opposing party can be compensated for by costs.”

In *Amulakchand Mewaram's case*¹, Hindu undivided family sued in its business name. It was not appreciated at an early stage of the suit that in fact the firm name was not of a partnership, but was the name of a joint Hindu family. An objection was raised by the defendant that the suit as filed was not maintainable. An application to amend the plaint, by substituting the names of the three members of the joint family for the name of the family firm as plaintiffs, was rejected by the Court of First Instance. In appeal the High Court observed that a suit brought in the name of a firm in a case not within Order 30, Civil Procedure Code being in fact a case of misdescription of existing persons, leave to amend ought to have been given.

This Court considered a somewhat similar case in *Purushottam Umedbhai's case*². A firm carrying on business outside India filed a suit in the firm name in the High Court of Calcutta for a decree for compensation for breach of contract. The plaintiff then applied for amendment of the plaint by describing the names of all the partners and striking out the name of the firm as a mere misdescription. The application for amendment was rejected on the view that the original plaint was no plaint in law and it was not a case of misnomer or misdescription, but a case of a non-existent firm or a non-existent person suing. In appeal, the High Court held that the description of the plaintiff by a firm name in a case where the Code of Civil Procedure did not permit a suit to be brought in the firm name should properly be considered a case of description of the individual partners of the business and as such a misdescription which in law can be corrected and should not be considered to amount to a description of a non-existent person. Against the order of the High Court an appeal was preferred to this Court. This Court observed (at p. 994):

“Since, however, a firm is not a legal entity the privilege of suing in the name of a firm is permissible only to those persons who, as partners, are doing business in India. Such privilege is not extended to persons who are doing business as partners outside India. In their case they still have to sue in their individual names. If, however, under some misapprehension, persons doing business as partners outside India do file a plaint in the name of “their firm they are misdescribing themselves, as the suit instituted is by them, they being known collectively as a firm. It seems, therefore, that a plaint filed in a Court in India in the name of of a firm doing business outside India is not by itself a nullity. It is a plaint by all the partners of the firm with a defective description of themselves for the purpose of the Code of Civil Procedure. In these circumstances, a civil Court could permit, under the provisions of section 153 of the Code (or possibly under Order 6, rule 17, about which we say nothing), an amendment of the plaint to enable a proper description of the plaintiffs to appear in it in order to assist the Court in determining the real question or issue between the parties."

These cases do no more than illustrate the well-settled rule that all amendments should be permitted as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties, unless by permitting the amendment injustice may result to the other side.

In the present case, the plaintiff was carrying on business as commission agent in the name of "Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal". The plaintiff was competent to sue in his own name as Manager of the Hindu undivided family to which the business belonged; he says he sued on behalf of the family in the business name. The observations made by the High Court that the application for amendment of the plaint could not be granted, because there was no averment therein that the misdescription was on account of a bona fide mistake, and on that account the suit must fail, cannot be accepted. In our view, there is no rule that unless in an application for amendment of the plaint it is expressly averred that the error, omission or misdescription is due to a bona fide mistake, the Court has no power to grant leave to amend the plaint. The power to grant amendment of the pleadings is intended to serve the ends of justice and is not governed by any such narrow or technical limitation.

Since the name in which the action was instituted was merely a misdescription of the original plaintiff, no question of limitation arises; the plaint must be deemed on amendment to have been instituted in the name of the real plaintiff, on the date on which it was originally instituted.

In our view, the order passed by the trial Court in granting the amendment was clearly right, and the High Court was in error in dismissing the suit on a technicality wholly unrelated to the merits of the dispute. Since all this delay has taken place and costs have been thrown away, because the defendant raised and persisted in a plea which had no merit even after the amendment was allowed by the trial Court, he must pay the costs in this Court and the High Court. The appeal is allowed and the decree passed by the High Court is set aside. It appears that the High Court has not dealt with the appeal on the merits. The proceedings will stand remanded to the High Court for disposal according to law on the merits of the dispute between the parties.

Bequest—Fund to be utilised in equal moieties for two purposes—Failure of one purpose if will result in a moiety of the amount devised falling into the residue.

The fund was devised for the construction of a Ramamandiram at Rajavaram village and for "celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions" of Seetharatnam. Since no part of the fund was needed for the benefit of Seetharatnam, the legacy failed pro-tanto and fell into the residue. Under the will Mangamma, wife of the testator was made the owner the residue, but by her death during the lifetime of Appanna the residuary bequest lapsed and vested as on intestacy in the plaintiff and the 24th defendant. The devise of a moiety of the fund to be applied for the construction of a Ramamandiram however stands good and the trust must be carried out. Mangamma is dead, but on that account the charitable trust is not extinguished. The Trial Court must give appropriate directions for utilisation of that moiety for constructing a temple according to the direction of Appanna in the will.

Section 105 of the Indian Succession Act enacts that a legacy shall lapse and form part of the residue of the testator's property if the legatee does not survive the testator except where it appears by the will that the testator intended that the legacy shall on the legatee not surviving him go to some other person. It is difficult to agree that the intention of the testator that a legacy shall not lapse may be given effect to only if the testator expressly directs that if the legatee dies during his lifetime the legacy shall go to some other person, and that intention to exclude lapse cannot be inferred. Section 105 (1) does not say, nor does it imply, that the testator must have expressly envisaged the possibility of lapse in consequence of the legatee dying during his lifetime and must have made a provision for that contingency.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 9th March, 1964 of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Letters Patent Appeal No. 2 of 1963.

M. G. Chagla, Senior Advocate, (T. Satyanarayana, Advocate with him), for Appellants.

P. Ram Reddy, Senior Advocate, (K. Jayaram, Advocate with him), for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—One Appanna died on 12th March, 1953, leaving him surviving no wife or lineal descendant. Subba Rao claiming to be the father's sister's son of Appanna instituted Suit No. 64 of 1953 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Eluru, for partition and separate possession of his half share in the properties described in Schedules A, B, C, D and E. The plaintiff claimed that Appanna died intestate, and that he and his brother Venugopala Rao were the nearest heirs entitled to the entire estate of Appanna. To this suit were impleaded Pothana Apparao (husband of the sister of Mangamma, wife of Appanna), his children, certain relations of Mangamma and the tenants on the lands in suit. Venugopala Rao was impleaded as the 24th defendant. The suit was defended by Pothana Apparao and others contending, inter alia, that Appanna had made and executed a will on 14th July, 1948, devising his property in favour of various legatees and the plaintiff's suit for a share in the property was on that account not maintainable. The trial Court held that Appanna of his free will and while in a sound state of mind had executed the will on 14th July, 1948, whereby he disposed of his properties described in Schedules A, B, C, D and E, but the Court held that the disposition of the property in Schedules C and E lapsed because Mangamma who was a legatee of the properties died before the testator, and that the direction in the will that whatever remained out of the Schedule E property after the lifetime of Mangamma shall pass to Venkataswamy and Seshagirirao defendants Nos. 3 and 2 respectively or their descendants was void and incapable of taking effect. The learned Judge accordingly passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff and the 24th defendant for possession of properties described in Schedules C and E.

In appeal to the High Court of Andhra Pradesh, Chandrasekhar Sastry, J., allowed the appeal filed by Pothana Apparao and his two sons Venkataswamy and Seshagirirao, and dismissed the claim of the plaintiff in respect of Schedules C and E properties. An appeal under the Letters Patent filed by the plaintiffs against the judgment of Chandrasekhar Sastry, J., was dismissed.

It has been concurrently found by all the Courts that when he was in a sound and disposing state of mind Appanna executed on 14th July, 1948, the will set up by the defendants. In an appeal with Special Leave this Court will not ordinarily allow a question about due execution to be canvassed, and our attention is not invited to any exceptional circumstances which may justify a departure from the rule.

The only question which survives for consideration relates to the true effect of the dispositions made by the will in respect of Schedule C and Schedule E properties. The relevant provisions of the will may first be set out :

"I am now about forty years of age. I do not have male or female issue.
* * * My wife is alive. * * * and with the fear that I may not survive I have made the following provisions in respect of my immovable and movable properties to be given effect to.

* * * * *

I have given power to my wife Mangamma to sell the immovable property mentioned in the C Schedule hereunder and utilise the amount for celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions of Tholeti Narasimha Rao's daughter Seetharatnam mentioned in the B Schedule and for constructing a Ramamandiram in Rajavaram village in my name.

* * * * *

The immovable property mentioned in the E Schedule hereunder shall be enjoyed by my wife Mangamma with all powers of disposition by way of gift, sale, etc. Whatever remains out of the said E Schedule mentioned immovable property after her lifetime, (the said property) shall pass either to the said Venkataswamy and Seshagiri or their descendants. * * * In the event of my wife taking a boy in adoption the property mentioned in the E Schedule hereunder shall pass to the said adoptee with all powers of disposition by way of gift, sale etc., after her lifetime. * * *

If, for any reason, the properties and rights do not pass to the individuals mentioned in the aforesaid paras, such properties and rights shall be enjoyed by my wife Mangamma with absolute rights."

Appanna had directed his wife Mangamma to sell the properties described in Schedule C and to utilise the proceeds for two purposes, "celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions" of Seetharatnam, and "for constructing a Ramamandiram in Rajavaram village" in his name. But the marriage of Seetharatnam was celebrated during the lifetime of Appanna, and expenses in that behalf were defrayed by Appanna, and no expenses remained to be incurred after the death of Appanna. Mangamma had no beneficial interest in Schedule C property. She was merely appointed to sell the property and to utilise the proceeds for the purposes specified in the will. The trial Judge clearly erred in holding that the estate lapsed because Mangamma died during the lifetime of Appanna. In the view of Chandrasekhar Sastry, J., since there was a joint request for two purposes, and one of the purposes for which the Schedule C properties were devised was accomplished by Appanna the bequest in its entirety must enure for the remaining purpose, i.e., constructing a Ramamandiram, and the plaintiff's claim for possession of the C Schedule properties must fail. The learned Judges of the High Court agreed with that view.

But there was no "joint bequest" of the properties. In the absence of allocation of the amounts to be utilised for "celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions" of Seetharatnam and for constructing a Ramamandiram, it must be presumed that the fund was to be utilised in equal moieties for the two purposes. Failure of one of the purposes will result in a moiety of the amount devised falling into the residue.

In *Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chund Dutt and others*¹ a devise under the will of a Hindu testator who had given a four-anna share of his estate to his daughter and her son for their maintenance with power of making alienation thereof by sale or gift fell to be construed. The Judicial Committee held that on a true construction of the will each took an absolute interest in a two-anna share in the estate. In dealing with the contention that there was a joint estate granted to the daughter and her son the Judicial Committee observed :

“ Mr. Branson * * * maintained, upon the authority of *Vydinada v. Nagammal*¹ that, by the terms of the will of the Rani and the appellant became, in the sense of English law, joint tenants of the 4-annas share of Silda, and not tenants in common ; and that her alienation of her share before it was severed, and without the consent of the other joint tenant, was ineffectual. The circumstances of that case appear to be on all fours with the circumstances which occur here, and, if well decided, it would be a precedent exactly in point. There are two substantial reasons why it ought not to be followed as an authority. In the first place, it appears to their Lordships that the learned Judges of the High Court of Madras were not justified in importing into the construction of a Hindu will an extremely technical rule of English conveyancing. The principle of joint tenancy appears to be unknown to Hindu law, except in the case of coparcenary between the members of an undivided family.”

That principle applies here. The fund was devised for the construction of a Ramamandiram at Rajavaram village and for “celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions” of Seetharatnam. Since no part of the fund was needed for the benefit of Seetharatnam, the legacy failed pro tanto and fell into the residue. Under the will Mangamma was made the owner of the residue, but by her death during the lifetime of Appanna the residuary bequest lapsed and vested as on intestacy in the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant. The devise of a moiety of the fund to be applied for the construction of a Ramamandiram however stands good and the trust must be carried out. Mangamma is dead, but on that account the charitable trust is not extinguished. The trial Court must give appropriate directions for utilisation of that moiety for constructing a temple according to the direction of Appanna in the will.

The testator gave to his wife Mangamma an absolute interest in the E Schedule properties, for she was invested with all powers of disposition “by way of gift, sale, etc.” The will then proceeded to direct that whatever remained out of the E Schedule properties after her death shall pass to Venkataswamy and Seshagirirao. If Mangamma had survived Appanna, probably the devise in favour of Venkataswamy and Seshagirirao may have failed, but that question does not arise for consideration.

Section 105 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, which applies to the wills of Hindus provides :

“(1) If the legatee does not survive the testator, the legacy cannot take effect, but shall lapse and form part of the residue of the testator’s property, unless it appears by the will that the testator intended that it should go to some other person.

(2) * * * * *

Mr. Chagla for the plaintiffs contends that the estate in the E Schedule properties devised in favour of Mangamma lapsed, for, there was nothing in the will which expressly provided that in the event of Mangamma dying during the testator’s lifetime, the devise in favour of Venkataswamy and Seshagirirao shall be accelerated. Counsel relies upon the judgment of Wickens, V. C., in *Browne v. Hope*² and contends that a legacy does not lapse, if the testator does two things—he, in clear words, excludes lapse ; and he clearly indicates the person who is to take the legacy in case the legatee should die in his lifetime. In *Browne’s case*² the testator gave, by his will, the residue of his estate to trustees to pay and transfer the same to seven named legatees in equal shares as tenants in common, and their respective executors, administrators and assigns and he declared that such shares shall be vested interests in each legatee immediately upon the execution thereof, and that the shares of the married woman shall be for their separate use. It was held that the share of one of the legatees—a married woman—who died after the date of the will, but before the testator, did not belong to her husband, who was her legal personal representative, and it lapsed.

Counsel says that the rule of interpretation as enunciated by Vice-Chancellor Wickens is incorporated in section 105 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925. He submits that a legacy will not lapse only if the testator by express direction excludes lapse, and indicates clearly the person who shall take the legacy if the legatee dies during his lifetime.

We are concerned to construe the provisions of section 105 of the Indian Succession Act. That section enacts that a legacy shall lapse and form part of the residue of the testator's property if the legatee does not survive the testator except where it appears by the will that the testator intended that the legacy shall on the legatee not surviving him go to some other person. We are unable to agree that the intention of the testator that a legacy shall not lapse may be given effect to only if the testator expressly directs that if the legatee dies during his lifetime the legacy shall go to some other person, and that intention to exclude lapse cannot be inferred. Section 105 (1) does not say, nor does it imply, that the testator must have expressly envisaged the possibility of lapse in consequence of the legatee dying during his lifetime and must have made a provision for that contingency.

In *In re. Lowman Devenish v. Pester*¹ a testator, who under a settlement was absolutely entitled to a moiety of the proceeds of a certain real estate under a trust for sale, by his will devised that real estate by its proper description, together with certain real estate of his own, to trustees, to the use of H, for life; with remainder to trustees to preserve the contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of H successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of his niece E successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of his niece M successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of his niece F successively in tail male, with remainder over. H survived the testator and died a bachelor. M also survived the testator and died unmarried. E was still alive but unmarried and seventy years of age. F had two sons, the eldest of whom died before the testator. It was held that when there are in a will successive limitations of personal estate in favour of several persons absolutely, the first of those persons who survives the testator takes absolutely, although he would have taken nothing if any previous legatee had survived and had taken the effect of the failure of an earlier gift is to accelerate, not to destroy, the later gift.

This rule was applied in *In re. Dunstan, Dunstan v. Dunstan*². A testatrix by her will gave freeholds absolutely to A, subject to the bequest that whatever out of the freeholds should remain after A's death shall be given to a named charity. It was held that if A had survived the testatrix the gift to the charity would have been repugnant and void, and A would have taken the freeholds absolutely. But since A died in the lifetime of the testatrix, the doctrine of repugnancy did not apply, and the gift to charity was accelerated and took effect.

Mangamma died during the lifetime of the testator: thereby the estate in Schedule E properties granted to Venkataswamy and his brother Se-hagirirao was accelerated. The plaintiffs are therefore not entitled to any share in Schedule E properties.

The decree of the High Court is modified. It is declared that there is intestacy in respect of a half share in the fund arising by sale of Schedule C properties, and the plaintiff and the 24th defendant are entitled to take that half share in the fund. It is directed that the Trial Court till issue appropriate directions for application of the other half of the fund arising by sale of Schedule C properties for constructing Ramamandiram at Rajavaram village as directed by the testator in his will. Subject to this modification the appeal will be dismissed. The appellant will pay 3/4th of the costs of the contesting respondents in this Court.

Order accordingly.

U. P. Industrial Disputes Act (XXVIII of 1947), sections 6 and 6-A and Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 152 and Industrial Disputes (Central) Rules (1957), R-28—Effect of section 6 and 6-A—Award by Labour Court—Correction—When can be made—Time limit for making such correction—Correctional Jurisdiction under section 6 (6) identical to section 152, Civil Procedure Code and Rule 28, Industrial Disputes Rules.

The provisions of section 6 and 6-A make it clear that whereas the former provides for the award becoming final, the latter provides for its enforceability and the time from which it has to be implemented the two characteristics of the award i.e. its finality on publication and its enforceability under section 6-A are distinct, having different points of time and should not be mixed up, for though, an award has become final on its publication under section 6 it becomes enforceable in accordance with and subject to the eventualities provided in section 6-A. There are thus three different stages in the case of an award (1) when it is signed by the adjudicating authority (2) when it is published by the State Government in the prescribed manner and (3) when it becomes enforceable. Even though an award may become final omits being published, it becomes enforceable subject to expiry of the different periods and events prescribed in section 6-A.

The scheme of sections 6 and 6-A is to retain a certain amount of control over award, including an arbitration award. An award does not become final as it ordinarily would be when the adjudicating authority signs it but becomes final when it is published in the manner prescribed by the State Government. The word 'subject to the provisions of section 6-A' in sub-section (5) of section 6 means that though an award has become final on its being published it does not immediately or automatically begin to operate as that finality is subject to the expiry of periods and the powers of the State Government under section 6-A.

The correctional jurisdiction is limited only to cases where clerical or arithmetical mistakes or errors arising from an accidental slip or omission have occurred. Sub-section (6) of section 6 does not lay down any in any express terms and time limit within which correctional jurisdiction is to be exercised. It contemplates a correction both before and after the publications of the award. Laying down by implication the time limit during which the correctional jurisdiction under section 6 (6) can be exercised upto the time of the award becoming final under section 6 (5) or becoming enforceable under section 6-A creates difficulties, besides, it would appear, being contrary to the provisions of these two sections and is therefore not commendable. The correctional jurisdiction conferred on the adjudicating authority under section 6 (6) is in terms identical with one conferred under section 152, Civil Procedure Code and rule 28 of the Industrial Disputes (Central) Rules, 1957 and is in consonance with the first and foremost principle that no party should suffer any detriment on account of mistake or an error committed by an adjudicating authority. The circumstance that the proceedings before a Labour Court and a tribunal are deemed to be concluded under section 6-D where their award becomes enforceable or that thereupon they become functus officio would also be no ground for inferring any limitation of time in section 6 (6). Held, there are no compelling reasons to read into section 6 (6) any such limitation by implication.

It may be that the correction of an award might to a certain extent have an unsettling effect to what was already become settled, but the correction is not made due to any fault of the parties but of the adjudicating authority whose accidental slip or omissions cannot be allowed to prejudice the interest of the parties.

Held, On facts, There is no question that there was an error in the award due to an accidental omission on the part of the Labour Court, which error it undoubtedly had the jurisdiction to correct under section 6 (6). The error was that there was no direction in the award as to the date from which the fitment of the two workmen in the said grades and are revised scales should take effect, arising from an accidental omission to answer that part of the reference.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 21st September, 1966 of the Allahabad High Court, Lucknow Bench in Special Appeal No. 76 of 1966.

Dr. L. M. Singhvi, Senior Advocate (B. Datta and D. N. Misra, Advocates, and J. B. Dadachanji and O. C. Mathur, Advocates of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji & Co., with him), for Appellant.

O. P. Rana, Advocate, for Respondents No. 1.

J. P. Goyal, Sobhag Mal Jain and S. P. Singh, Advocates, for Respondent No. 4.

Shelat, J.—Two questions arise for determination in this appeal, by Special Leave, against the judgment of the Appellate Bench of the High Court of Allahabad, namely, (1) whether a correction in its award by the Labour Court, Lucknow, was one of an error arising from an accidental omission within the meaning of section 6 (6) of the U. P. Industrial Disputes Act, XXVIII of 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the Act), and (2) whether, even if it was so, it could so correct after its award was published and had become enforceable.

The Central Wage Board for sugar industry, appointed by the Union Government for determining a wage-structure, revision of categories of workmen, their fitment into such categories and for fixing the principles governing the grant of bonus, had made certain recommendations. Amongst its recommendations, the Wage Board had recommended that its decision should be brought into effect as from 1st November, 1960. By its notification, dated 27th April, 1961, the U. P. Government accepted those recommendations including the one that they should be brought into force with effect from 1st November, 1960. On a dispute having arisen between the appellant-company and its workmen on the company failing to implement the said recommendations, the State Government referred it to the Labour Court for adjudication under section 4 (k) of the Act. The dispute involved two questions (1) whether the company should fit the workmen named in the reference in the revised categories and in the new wage scales and (2) if so, with effect from what date. By its award dated 6th November, 1963 the Labour Court held that two of the said workmen should be fitted in Grade II (B) and Grade IV respectively and directed the company to do so within one month after the award became enforceable. It, however, omitted to fix the date from which such fitment should have the effect. On 7th December, 1963, the said award was published in the State Gazette. The company thereafter fitted the two workmen in the said two grades from a date, one month hence after the award became enforceable and not from 1st November, 1960. The workmen's union thereupon applied to the Labour Court to amend its award on the ground that it had omitted to answer the second question arising under the reference and the Labour Court accordingly amended its award directing that the two workmen should be placed in the said grades with effect from 1st November, 1960. The order amending the said award was gazetted on 20th June, 1964. The company filed a petition in the High Court for certiorari and for quashing the said order of amendment. Nigam, J., who heard the petition in the first instance dismissed it holding that (1) the Labour Court made an error arising from an accidental omission to answer the said second question and therefore had the power to correct it under section 6 (6) of the Act, and (2) even if there was no such error arising from accidental omission, the amendment merely provided what was already contained in the notification, dated 27th April, 1961, that once the Labour Court had directed the company to fit the workmen in the said grades, such fitment had, under the force of that notification, to take effect from 1st November, 1960, and that that result was arrived at not by reason of the correction of the award but by force of the original award read with the said notification. On a Letters Patent Appeal having been filed against the said judgment, the Appellate Bench of the High Court agreed with Nigam, J., that the correction amounted to one of an error arising from the accidental omission to answer the said second question within the scope of section 6 (6) of the Act. The Appellate Bench, however, proceeded to examine the various provisions and the scheme of the Act and held : (1) that the jurisdiction of the Labour Court under the Act was of a limited character, (2) that it gets seisen of an industrial dispute only when its jurisdiction is invoked by a reference under section 4 (k) or by a voluntary reference to arbitration under section 5-B, (3) that under section 4-D proceedings before it are deemed to commence from the date of such reference and are deemed to be completed on the date when its award becomes enforceable, (4) that its jurisdiction which emanates from the reference gets exhausted on the completion of the proceedings before it and the Labour Court itself becomes functus officio on the date when its award becomes final and enforceable, (5) that it cannot thereafter reconstitute itself or take seisen of a dispute, which it has already adjudicated and proceedings relating to it have become concluded, without a fresh reference and (6) that, therefore, its correctional jurisdiction under section 6 (6), unlike that of a civil Court under section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not unlimited. The Appellate Bench on this reasoning held that the two extreme points during which the Labour Court could correct its award were the date of its signing it and the date when the award becomes final and enforceable. Consequently, the Labour Court held no jurisdiction to correct the award after it became final and enforceable, i.e., after 7th January, 1964, on expiry of 30 days from 7th December, 1963, when it was published and the correction therefore was in excess of its jurisdiction and invalid. The Appellate Bench however declined to issue the writ on the ground that the correction did no more than doing justice to the workmen by ordering implementation of the said notification on 27th April, 1961, and observing that equity was on the side of the two workmen dismissed the appeal as also the said petition.

Dr. Singhvi, who, on behalf of the company, disputed the correctness of the judgment contended that (a) no clerical or arithmetical error through any accidental slip or omission had arisen, that section 6 (6), therefore, did not apply to the facts of this case and if at all, the application ought to have been under section 11-B, which however, was never invoked ; (b) that power under section 6 (6) could be exercised only until the date on which the said award became enforceable and not thereafter that the correctional jurisdiction under section 6 (6) is not without any limit as to time within which it could be invoked or exercised and expired or exhausted itself when the award became final ; (c) that the principles of industrial law postulate the finality of an award made under it and that subject to exceptions as in section 6-A once the award had become final it did not contemplate any disturbance of it by amendment or otherwise and (d) that the High Court was in error in refusing remedy on a supposed consideration of equity once it found lack of jurisdiction in the Labour Court as it in fact did and therefore ought to have issued the remedial writ and quashed the impugned order of correction.

As already stated, the Wage Board had recommended revised wage scales, revised categories and fitment of workmen in their respective categories on the revised wage scales as from 1st November, 1960. The State Government had accepted those recommendations fully including the date of their implementation and the consequent fitment of workmen in appropriate categories and revised wage scales. Its notification made it clear that such fitment on the revised wage scales should be as recommended by the Wage Board as from 1st November, 1960. In the belief, perhaps, that the said recommendations and their acceptance by the Government were not binding on it, the company did not implement them and hence the union raised the dispute which was ultimately referred to the Labour Court. The terms of that reference leave no doubt that it comprised of two questions (1) of fitment and (2) the date from which it was to have effect. The award of the Labour Court that the company was liable to fit the two workmen in grades II and IV respectively and pay them at the revised scales in respect of these grades was binding and therefore the company was liable to carry out the fitment and pay the revised scales in accordance with such fitment. But the award did not decide or fix the date from which the said fitment when made, was to have effect. As rightly held by the High Court, the Labour Court thus omitted to answer the second question as it was bound to do and the reference remained partly unadjudicated. The Labour Court, no doubt, did direct that the award should be implemented within one month after it became enforceable under the Act, i.e., on or before 7th February, 1964. But that direction meant only that the company should fit the two workmen in the two grades it had ordered and still left the question, as to the date from which such fitment was to have effect, unanswered. Thus, the fact that the Labour Court failed to answer the second question admits of no doubt. There can also be no doubt that since the first question was answered by it in accordance with the Wage Board's recommendations and the Government's notification accepting them fully, if its attention had been drawn it would in all probability have answered the second question also in consonance with these recommendations and the said notification. There is, therefore, no question that there was an error in the award due to an accidental omission on the part of the Labour Court, which error it undoubtedly had the jurisdiction to correct under section 6 (6). The error was that there was no direction in the award as to the date from which the fitment of the two workmen in the said grades and the revised scales should take effect, arising from an accidental omission to answer that part of the reference.

The next question is whether there is under the Act any time limit within which the correction of the award can be made. The impugned correction, no doubt, was made by the Labour Court after its award had become final and enforceable. The principal premise in the High Court's reasoning as also in that of Counsel for the company was that the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to correct the award ceased when the award became final and enforceable. It may be observed that the very outset that no time limit within which such correction can be made had been laid down in any express terms in section 6 (6). The question, therefore, is whether any such time limit can be inferred either from section 6 or from the other provisions of the Act. Section 4 (k) enables the State Government to refer an industrial dispute which either exists or is apprehended to the Labour Court if the matter of the industrial dispute is one of those contained in the First Schedule to the Act or to a Tribunal if it is one contained in the first or the Second Schedule. Even if the dispute relates to a matter in the second Schedule, if it is not likely to affect more than 100 workmen, the Government can, if it so thinks fit, refer such a dispute to the Labour Court. Under section 5-B where any industrial dispute exists or is apprehended and the employer and the workmen agree, they may refer the dispute to arbitration of such person or persons including the presiding officer of a Labour Court or a Tribunal as may be specified in the arbitration agreement. Section 6 (1) enjoins upon the Labour Court and the Tribunal to which an industrial dispute is referred for adjudication to hold its proceedings expeditiously and submit its award to the State Government as soon as it is practicable on the conclusion thereof. Sub-section 3 provides that subject to the provisions of sub-section 4 every arbitration award and the award of a Labour Court or a Tribunal shall, within 30 days from the date of its receipt by the State Government, be published in such manner as the State Government thinks fit. Sub-section 4 to which sub-section 3 is made subject, authorises the State Government before publication of an award of a Labour Court or a Tribunal to remit it for its reconsideration and provides that after such reconsideration it shall submit its award to the Government and the State Government shall thereupon publish it in the manner provided in sub-section 3. Sub-section 5 provides that subject to the provisions of section 6-A an award published under sub-section 3 shall be final and shall not be called in question in any Court in any manner whatsoever. Section 6-A, to the provisions of which section 6 (5) is made subject, provides by its sub-section 1 that an award, including an arbitration award, shall become enforceable on the expiry of 30 days from the date of its publication. The first proviso thereof empowers the State Government, if it is of the opinion that it is inexpedient on public grounds affecting national or State economy or social justice to give effect to the whole or any part of the award, to declare by notification in the official Gazette that it shall not become enforceable on the expiry of the said period of 30 days. The second proviso provides that an arbitration award shall not become enforceable if the State Government is satisfied that it was given or obtained through collusion, fraud or misrepresentation. Thus, even though an award has been published under section 6 (3) and has become final and would ordinarily become enforceable on expiry of 30 days from such publication, the State Government can make a declaration under the first proviso and under sub-section 2 can within 90 days from its publication make an order either rejecting or modifying it, in which event it has to lay the award and its said order before the State Legislature. Sub-section 3 provides that if an award is rejected or modified by an order under sub-section 2 and is laid before the Legislature, it shall become enforceable within 15 days from the date it is so laid. But where no such order under sub-section 2 has been made, it shall become enforceable on the expiry of 90 days referred to in sub-section 2. Sub-section 4 provides that subject to sub-sections 1 and 3, an award shall come into operation with effect from such date as may be specified therein but where no such date is specified it shall come into operation on the date when the award becomes enforceable under sub-section 1 or sub-section 3, as the case may be. The provisions of section 6 and section 6-A thus make it clear that whereas the former provides for the award becoming final, the latter provides for its enforceability and the time from which it has to be implemented. The two characteristics of the award, i.e., its finality on publication and its enforceability under section 6-A, are distinct, having different points of time and should not, therefore, be mixed up, for, though an award has become final on its publication under section 6 it becomes enforceable in accordance with and subject to the eventualities provided in section 6-A. There are thus three different stages in the case of an award ; (1) when it is signed by the adjudicating authority, (2) when it is published by the State Government in the prescribed manner and (3) when it becomes enforceable. Even though an award may have become final on its being published, it becomes enforceable subject to the expiry of the different periods and the events prescribed in section 6-A.

The scheme of sections 6 and 6-A is to retain a certain amount of control over award, including an arbitration award, with the State Government. An award, therefore, does not become final as it ordinarily would be when the adjudicating authority signs it but becomes final when it is published in the manner prescribed by the State Government. Before such publication the Government is given the power to remit it to the adjudicating authority for reconsideration and the State Government has to publish it on its being resubmitted to it. In spite of its becoming final on such publication it becomes enforceable only on the expiry of 30 days after it has become final as laid down by sub-section (1) of section 6-A. But it does not so become enforceable if the Government were to make a declaration under the first provision and an order under sub-section (2) or the award specifies a date which is later than 30 days after its publication. Therefore, the word "subject to the provisions of section 6-A" in sub-section (5) of section 6 must mean that though an award has become final on its being published it does not immediately or automatically begin to be operative as that finality is subject to the expiry of periods and the powers of the State Government under section 6-A.

Having seen the effect of the provisions of sections 6 and 6-A, we have next to consider the scope of the correctional jurisdiction conferred on the adjudicating authority under sub-section 6 of section 6. As already observed, the sub-section does not lay down in any express terms any time limit within which such jurisdiction is to be exercised. It contemplates a correction both before and after the publication of the award, i.e., after it has become final. If it is corrected before its publication the correction would be carried out without anything further having to be done. But if it is corrected after its publication and after it has become final, a copy of the order of correction has to be sent to the State Government and the provisions as to publication of an award under section 6 (3) are mutatis mutandis applicable. The correctional jurisdiction is limited only to cases where clerical or arithmetical mistakes or errors arising from an accidental slip or omission have occurred. Though section 6 (6) does not expressly provide for any time limit, the High Court appears to have been much impressed by section 6-D which lays down the two points as to the commencement and the completion of proceedings before a labour Court and a tribunal. From these two limits it came to the conclusion that though no time limit is expressly provided in section 6 (6) it must be inferred that the correctional jurisdiction under section 6 (6) can only be exercised upto the time that the award becomes final and enforceable. It will be observed that though section 6 (6) empowers all the three adjudicating authorities, namely, a labour Court, a tribunal and an arbitrator, to correct the award, section 6-D lays down the two points of commencement and completion of proceedings only in the case of a labour Court and a tribunal. Section 6-D, therefore, does not furnish an indication or a ground for inferring a time limit in section 6 (6) in the case of an award by an arbitrator. Would that mean that though, according to the High Court, there is a period within which a labour Court and a tribunal can exercise the correctional jurisdiction, there would be no such limit in the case of an award by an arbitrator? In our view no such result could have been contemplated. It would thus, appear that the two extremities of time provided in section 6-D cannot be used as a ground for inferring a time-limit for the correctional jurisdiction under section 6 (6).

Acceptance of the High Court's reasoning becomes still more difficult when we examine the premises of that reasoning. The High Court does not appear to be sure whether the limit as to time is to be the date of finality of the award or its enforceability, for, it states that the correctional jurisdiction can be exercised until the award has become final and enforceable. As already stated, the concepts of finality and enforceability of an award are distinct and have been dealt with by the Legislature separately in sections 6 and 6-A. If it is to be reasoned that the correctional jurisdiction can be exercised till the date when the award is published and becomes final, such a reasoning would be contrary to the provisions of section 6 (6) themselves which envisage correction of an award even after it is published and has become final. Sub-section 6 expressly provides that when so corrected, the order correcting it has to be published in the manner prescribed under and within the time provided in section 6 (3). It is, therefore, manifest that the date when an award becomes final cannot be the date within which the power under section 6 (6) has to be exercised. If, it is to be held, on the other hand, that the power to correct is to be exercised until the award has become enforceable, the difficulty would be that there is nothing either in section 6 or section 6-A or section 6-D which warrants such a limitation by implication. Is it that an award is really final when it becomes enforceable? Such a conclusion would, firstly, be contrary to the clear language of section 6 and, secondly, would lead to a curious result though it has become final on publication, it is not really so, as that finality is subject to the provisions of section 6-A. In that case, an award can be challenged in a Court during the interval between its publication and the date when it becomes enforceable. That would be so, despite the clear language of section 6 (5) that an award becoming final on publication cannot thence be challenged in any Court whatsoever. Laying down by implication the time limit during which the correctional jurisdiction under section 6 (6) can be exercised upto the time of the award becoming final under section 6 (5) or becoming enforceable under section 6-A creates difficulties, besides, it would appear, being contrary to the provisions of these two sections and is therefore not commendable. The correctional jurisdiction conferred on the adjudicating authority under section 6 (6) is in terms identical with the one conferred under section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure and rule 28 of the Industrial Disputes (Central) Rules, 1957 and is in consonance with the first and foremost principle that no party should suffer any detriment on account of a mistake or an error committed by an adjudicating authority. The circumstance that the proceedings before a labour Court and a tribunal are deemed to be concluded under section 6-D when their award becomes enforceable or that thereupon they become functus officio would also be no ground for inferring any limitation of time in section 6 (6), for, that would also be the case in the case of a civil Court or an adjudicating authority under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, even without a provision like section 6-D and yet the legislature has not chosen in the case of either of them to lay down any limitation of time for exercising its correctional jurisdiction. In our view, there are no compelling reasons to read into section 6 (6) any such limitation by implication.

We are also not impressed with the difficulty which the High Court supposed would result in case section 6 (6) is interpreted as not having by implication any time limit within which the correctional power can be exercised by any of the three adjudicating authorities. The High Court felt that if there is no such time limit an award, even after it has become enforceable and in some cases even implemented, would be rendered unsettled. But as already stated, the power is a limited one which can be exercised only in cases where a mistake clerical or arithmetical or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission has occurred. The award thus would have to be corrected only within this circumscribed field. It may be that the correction of an award might to a certain extent have an unsettling effect to what has already become settled, but the correction is made not due to any fault of the parties but of the adjudicating authority whose accidental slip or omission cannot be allowed to prejudice the interests of the parties. We do not visualise any substantial hardship resulting from the exercise of this power which the High Court thought might arise if an award is allowed to be amended even after it has become enforceable or even if it has been enforced. A similar difficulty can also be imagined when a civil Court exercises a similar power under section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But no one has so far suggested that because of that difficulty a limitation must be inferred in that section. A similar difficulty would also arise under rule 28 of the Industrial Dispute (Central) Rules, 1957. But so far no one has read a similar limitation in the correctional power provided by that rule.

In our view the error which the Labour Court corrected clearly fell within section 6 (6) and could be corrected even after the award had become final as a result of its having been published and had become enforceable under section 6-A. In this view it is not necessary to consider section 11-B or its effect especially as it is nobody's case that it was at any stage invoked or resorted to. In the view that we have taken it was section 6 (6) and not section 11-B which could on the facts of this case be resorted to. The appeal, therefore, is dismissed though for reasons different from those given by the High Court. The appellant-company will pay the costs of this appeal to the respondents.

Mari Joshua

Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), section 180—Doctrine of election—Applicability of—Principle of compensation not recognised.

The rule which has been embodied in section 180 of the Indian Succession Act does not recognise the Principle of Compensation. Under its provisions if the legatee has been given any benefit under the will and his own property has also been disposed of by that very will he must relinquish all the claims under the will if he chooses to retain his property.

Held, on facts after reading this will carefully, that the testator intended to include properties gifted to Joshua by the Settlement of 1935 in the bequest which he made to Mani of the entire residence. Joshua was thus put to election and could not claim those properties if he wished to take the benefit under the will. It was further held, on fact, that a correct reading of the will (Exhibit 3) yields the only result that the testator Uthupu treated the entire Properties which had formed the subject matter of gift or otherwise as his and which could be disposed of by him as he liked.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 3rd February, 1965 of the Kerala High Court in Appeal Suit No. 86 of 1960.

S.F. Gupta, Senior Advocate (A.S. Nambiar, Advocate, with him) for Appellants.

Sarjoo Prasad, Senior Advocate (P. Kesava Pillai, M.R.K. Pillai and Miss Lily Thomas, Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is an appeal by Special Leave from a judgment of the Kerala High Court by which the suit instituted by the respondent for recovery of properties described in Schedule A of the plaint and for mesne profits etc. was decreed in reversal of the decree of the trial Court, dismissing the suit.

Uthupu Mani who died in the year 1943 had three sons. The eldest son Uduppu died sometimes between 1929 and 1935. The second son Joshua is the respondent herein, the appellants being the third son Mani. Mani and Mariamma their mother and the widow of Uthupu. Uthupu left some daughters also and appellant No. 3 Mani Achamma is one of the daughters. The controversy in the suit out of which the appeal has arisen was confined to a residential house in an area of 10 cents in Kottayam town. This property along with several other properties originally belonged to Uthupu who made certain settlements followed by wills. The first settlement was made in the year 1102 ME corresponding to 1927 AD when Uduppu was alive and Mani Mani was not born. On 9th October 1935 by means of another registered document (Exhibit A) called Udambody Uthupu settled properties thus : Those comprised in a Schedule were given to Mariamma, in B. Schedule to Joshua and in C Schedule to Mani. The Schedules contained the following properties—

“To Mariamma (A Schedule)

Building constructed as Hall and the Cart-shed on 2 cents.

To Joshua (B Schedule)

Storied building and 30 cents garden land.

To Mani Mani (C Schedule)

Four rooms facing West and 36 cents of garden land."

It appears and it has been so found that mutations were effected of the properties so settled in favour of the donees. Later on Uthupu executed a will which he put in an envelope and deposited it in the office of the District Registrar, Kottayam in January, 1943. He executed a second will in April, 1943 and kept it in custody of the District Registrar. He executed a third will (Exhibit 3) on 31st May, 1943 which was his last will and testament. In this will he made a mention of the two settlements and the two previous wills and declared that the last will would be final and operative. His other declarations and statements in the will (Exhibit 3) will be presently considered as the entire controversy in the present litigation centres on a correct assessment and appraisal of their true scope and effect. It may be mentioned that by this will he left five items of properties to Joshua. These items included the properties in C Schedule which had been given to Mani by the settlement of 1935 and the cartshed on two cents of land contained in Schedule A which had been given to Mariamma by that settlement. There was no specific mention in the will (Exhibit 3) to the B Schedule properties which had been settled on Joshua in 1935.

In 1955, Joshua filed a suit laying claim to the B Schedule properties settled on him in the year 1935. His case was founded principally on the allegation that B Schedule properties which had been settled on him in 1935 vested in him by virtue of the settlement and he was the owner thereof and that the five items of properties which were left by the will (Exhibit 3) were quite independent of and separate from the aforesaid B Schedule properties. In other words he asserted that he had a right under the will to get the five items bequeathed to him therein in addition to the B Schedule properties which had been settled on him in the year 1935 and which could not form the subject-matter of any bequest by Uthupu by reason of the said settlement. The position taken up on behalf of Mariamma, Mani etc.—the defendants—was that the plaintiff had accepted the benefit under the will by taking the five items of properties bequeathed to him thereby which included the properties originally allotted under the settlement of 1935 to Mariamma and Mani. He had thus exercised his right of election to take the properties under the will and was precluded from asserting any right to properties given to him under the settlement of 1935.

A number of issues were framed on the pleadings of the parties. The main question for consideration, however, was whether the settlement of 1935 had been given effect to and whether the plaintiff's suit merited dismissal on account of the applicability of the doctrine of election embodied in section 180 of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925). The trial Court held that the settlement of 1935 had been given effect to and mutations had been duly made in the revenue register in accordance with the settlement deed. It was found that the plaintiff had obtained title to and possession of the suit properties comprised in B Schedule in the settlement of 1935. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the will (Exhibit 3) clearly showed that the testator purported to cancel the arrangement by the deed of settlement of 1935 and had made bequests under the will to the plaintiff of some of the properties which had been settled on Mariamma and Mani in the year 1935. This attracted the rule contained in section 180 of the Succession Act and since the plaintiff had elected to accept the benefit under the will he was not entitled to claim any right on the basis of the deed of settlement of 1935.

The High Court acceded to the argument pressed on behalf of Joshua who was the appellant before it that on a proper reading of the will it could not be held that the testator professed to dispose of the suit properties which had been gifted to the plaintiff by means of the settlement deed of 1935. The High Court was influenced by the fact that there was no specific mention of these properties in the will and according to it mere general words of disposition could not be taken to contain an intention to deal with the properties belonging to a third party, namely, the plaintiff. The following part of the judgment may be reproduced :

"Having due regard to these passages in the various text-books based upon judicial decisions and which have been placed before me by Mr. T. S. Krishnamoorthy Iyer and Mr. M. U. Isaac in my view, the decision rendered by the learned Subordinate Judge that section 180 of the Indian Succession Act applied and that the appellant has elected to take the benefit under the will and therefore he cannot claim any further benefits on the basis of Exhibit A, cannot certainly be sustained. So far as I could see, there is no specific disposition of the property already given to the plaintiff under Exhibit A, by the father in Exhibit 3. No doubt the father has dealt with an item which was given under Exhibit A to the first defendant and a part of the item given to the 2nd defendant under Exhibit A in Exhibit 3. If at all the question of the doctrine of election and the applicability of section 180 of the Indian Succession Act comes into play, in my view, the election will really have to be made, not, by the plaintiff, but by really defendants one and two."

As the applicability of the doctrine of the rule of election will depend on a correct and true reading of the will (Exhibit 3) we proceed to notice the main recitals and other prominent features to be found in it. The testator in the very beginning referred to the two settlements made by him in the years 1927 and 1935 and the two wills executed by him in the year 1943 which were deposited with the District Registrar, Kottayam. He said that by the first will which he had executed he had invalidated the two deeds of settlement. He then made the second will as he thought that some changes were necessary. The third will (Exhibit 3), was made because he felt pity for Joshua whom he had apparently left no or very little property by his previous wills. This is what the testator said :

"But, since there originated in me an idea, on seeing the desperate look and repentant attitude of my son Joshua, that it is highly necessary to nullify certain historic statements made in the previous will and also to alter the conditions, such as share of my assets will not be given to Joshua and to his children in case he begets any, laid down by me owing to the ill-will I had towards Joshua, the eldest among the male children I have at present and towards the members of his wife's house - because of certain reasons which I don't now purport to describe herein, this will is executed again afresh; and this alone will come into force after my life-time."

He further said that he had seven children alive at the time when the will was made, namely, two sons and five daughters out of whom two were married. He directed that after his death his wife Mariamma would take the entire income from his properties for meeting family expenses and payment of revenue dues, etc. Then he made dispositions about payments in cash on the occasion of the marriages of his other daughters, with the exception of Achamma, who was described to be weak in health, and in his opinion, should not contract matrimony. An amount of Rs. 3,000 was to be deposited in her name which she was entitled to withdraw if she was married. During the period she remained unmarried she was entitled to take interest on that deposit for personal expenses. He gave other directions about arrangements for her residence etc., in case she remained unmarried. Then he proceeded to make the provision about bequests in these words :

"Though I had provided in my previous will that my eldest son Joshua shall have only some right in the nature of a life interest over my assets in respect of some petty items of profits; Therefore I have forgiven him and I hereby allow him to enjoy for ever the immovable properties described hereunder; and my younger son Mani Mani shall alone be the sole heir of the remaining entire assets belonging to me. But, my two sons shall become entitled to the properties allotted to them only after my two daughters are married and the deposit is made in Achamma's name and all the litigations in which I am a party are ended; and till that time my wife Mariamma shall take and conserve all the profits as described above in the status of an undivided family."

The only other declaration or statement in the will which deserves notice is the following :—

“This will is executed by resolving as these and totally changing all the deeds registered by me prior to this and the will kept in custody; and this will alone shall, unless I act otherwise, be and ought to be in force in future.”

Now it is quite clear that the testator was somehow under the impression that he was competent to cancel and revoke not only the previous wills but also the two settlements including the one made in the year 1935. It appears that although by the registered deed of 1935 he had gifted certain properties to his wife and two sons he thought that he could undo what he had done by making a will by which he left virtually no property to Joshua since he was annoyed with him. That is apparently the reason why he clearly stated in the will (Exhibit 3) in the very beginning that he had executed a will “on 9th Makarom this year in accordance with law, invalidating the above two deeds.”

He relented in favour of Joshua and that is the reason why he made the will (Exhibit 3) but his state of mind continued to be the same, namely, he considered that he was fully competent and entitled to cancel all previous settlements and wills and start, as if it were, on a clean slate. The detailed bequests which he made (Exhibit 3) indicate that he meant to dispose of the entire estate including the properties which had been the subject-matter of the settlement made in the year 1935. There are two strong indications in the will (Exhibit 3) of his having dealt with the entire property which he thought he could dispose of or in respect of which he could make bequests and leave legacies on the footing that no title had passed to any of the donees under the settlement of 1935. The first is the recital both in the beginning and towards the concluding part of Exhibit 3 that he had cancelled the previous settlements and wills and that the only document which would govern the disposition of properties would be Exhibit 3. Even if it be assumed, as has been suggested, by learned Counsel for Joshua—respondent—that the declaration about invalidating the two deeds of settlement was confined to the first will executed in January, 1943, the statement made towards the conclusion of the will (Exhibit 3) leaves no doubt that the testator sought to revoke not only the previous wills but also the registered deeds which clearly meant the deeds of settlement executed in 1927 and 1935 respectively. The second significant fact is that the testator purported to give to Joshua five items of property which included certain properties which had been given by the settlement of 1935 to Mariamma and Mani. If the testator did not want to make any disposition of those properties which formed the subject-matter of gift in 1935 there was no reason why he should have given to Joshua properties which had been gifted to Mariamma and Mani. All this could have happened only if the testator was treating the settlement of 1935 as non-existent having been revoked by him. We are satisfied that a correct reading of the will (Exhibit 3) yields the only result that the testator Uthupu treated the entire properties which had formed the subject-matter of gift or otherwise as his and which could be disposed of by him as he liked. The High Court was in error in disagreeing with the trial Court on this matter.

The argument of learned Counsel for the respondent is that the testator predominantly intended to make better provision for Joshua with whom he had been annoyed for various reasons and whom he had left comparatively less or no property by the wills executed prior to Exhibit 3. It is suggested that the testator could not have intended to have taken away what had already been gifted to Joshua in the year 1935 of which mutation had taken place and possession had passed. It is further pointed out that the testator did not specifically say that the properties which had been gifted to Joshua in 1935 were now being left by the will (Exhibit 3) to Mani. A great deal of reliance has been placed on the statement in the text books on which the High Court relied and certain decisions for the view that no case for election can arise where the testator does not dispose of the properties in question specifically and has merely used general words of devise. In such circumstances, it has been stated, the testator should be taken to have disposed of only that property which was his own and which he was entitled to deal with and bequeath in law. It is urged that, in the present case, the testator had already made a valid and legal settlement in 1935 of the suit property. He could not have thus dealt with or bequeathed that property and in the absence of express and specific mention in Exhibit 3 that he was doing so the rule of election would not be attracted.

The circumstances in which election takes place are set out in section 180 of the Indian Succession Act. According to its provisions "where a person by his will professes to dispose of something which he has no right to dispose of, the person to whom the thing belongs shall elect either to confirm such disposition or to dissent from it, and, in the latter case, he shall give up any benefits which may have been provided for him by the will". The English law, however, applies the principle of compensation also to election. It means the electing legatee has to compensate the disappointed legatee out of the property given to him. As pointed out in the Indian Succession Act by N.C. Sen Gupta, page 295, the rule which has been embodied in section 180 does not recognise the principle of compensation. Under its provisions if the legatee has been given any benefit under the will and his own property has also been disposed of by that very will he must relinquish all his claims under the will if he chooses to retain his property. It is not disputed, in the present case, that if the testator has, by Exhibit 3, disposed of the property which had been gifted to Joshua the rule embodied in section 180 would become applicable and Joshua cannot take the property which had been gifted to him if he has chosen to retain the property bequeathed to him by the will. The question is whether the testator having omitted to state in Exhibit 3 that he was giving away the properties which had been gifted to Joshua in the year 1935 to Mani to whom only a residuary bequest of the entire remaining assets had been made the principle of election will become inapplicable.

Our attention has been invited on behalf of Joshua to the following observation of the Master of Rolls in *Miller v. Thurgood*¹:

"If a testator, having an undivided interest in any particular property, disposes of it specifically, and gives to the co-owner of the property a benefit under his will the question of election arises. But if he disposes of it, not specifically, but only under general words, no question of election arises."

But as pointed out in para. 1097, page 592, Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 14, in order to raise a case of election under a will it must be clearly shown that the testator intended to dispose of the particular property over which he had no disposing power. This intention must appear on the face of the will either by express words or by necessary conclusion from the circumstances disclosed by the will. The presumption, however, is that a testator intends to dispose of his own property and general words will not usually be construed so as to include other property. In Whitley v. Whitley the wife of the testator was entitled to a share of the produce of the R. estate, which had been directed to be sold. By his will the testator gave all "his share, estate and interest" in the R. estate to his daughter and benefit out of his own estate to his widow. It was held that the will raised a case for election as against the widow. The Master of the Rolls (Sir John Romilly) said that the testator intended to dispose of the property by will which was not his but belonged to his wife and she having taken and enjoyed the benefit provided for her under his will must be considered as having elected. The property, must, therefore go as if it had been the testator's property. This case illustrates how the rule of election has been applied where, even though, general words had been used but by necessary conclusion from the circumstances disclosed by the will it was inferred that the testator intended to dispose of the property which belonged to his wife and not to him. According to the footnote in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 14 (supra), in the case of a will one may even gather an intention by the testator to include property belonging to another in a gift of residue for it is necessary to construe a will as a whole. Reference has been made to *Re Allen's Estate, Prescott v. Allen and Beaumont*², where a gift of the "residue of my property" was construed as the residue of the testator's ostensible property. A fairly strict approach in such cases has been indicated by Chitty, J. in *Re Booker Booker v. Booker*¹, in these words:

“A great safeguard in applying that doctrine is this—that you are not merely to strain words to make them include that which does not belong to the testator ; but you must be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that it was his intention to include that which was not his own, and that you cannot impute to him after having read his will any other intention.”

It is thus necessary to look at the will and read at carefully which has been done by us and we have no manner of doubt that Uthupu the testator, intended to include properties gifted to Joshua by the settlement of 1935 in the bequest which he made to Mani of the entire residue. Joshua was thus put to election and could not claim those properties if he wished to take the benefit under the will.

In the result the appeal is allowed and the judgment of the High Court is set aside and that of the trial Court restored with costs in this Court.

The fraudulent evasions of duties and of prohibitions are punishable under section 135.

(Regarding the law in force before 1962). The effect of the section 23-A of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, was that the contravention of the notification under section 8 (1) attracted to it each and every provision of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 in force for the time being including section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 which was inserted by the Amending Act XXI of 1955. This section created the fiction that the restriction had been imposed under section 19 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, so that all the provisions of that Act would be attracted to a breach of the notification. But the statutory fiction did not cut down the wide ambit of the notification or limit its application to imports and exports by sea and land only. An import of gold by air without the permission of the Reserve Bank was a breach of the notification, and the breach attracted to it the provisions of section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878.

When the Sea Customs Act, 1878 was passed, goods could be imported, or exported by sea and land only. Transport by air was unknown. There is force in the contention that the import or export by air is a species of import or export by land. The aircraft carrying goods lands or takes off from land. The prohibition or restriction on the import or export of goods by land is a prohibition or restriction on the import or export by aircraft, landing or taking off from land. A fraudulent evasion of the restriction imposed by the notification under section 8 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 was punishable under section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 and Criminal Conspiracy to evade the restriction was punishable under section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code.

Criminal conspiracy as defined in section 120-A of the Indian Penal Code is an agreement by two or more persons to do or cause to be done an illegal Act or an act which is not illegal by illegal means. The agreement is the gist of the offence. In order to constitute a single general conspiracy there must be a common design and a common intention of all to work in furtherance of the common design. Each conspirator plays his separate part in one integrated and united effort to achieve the common purpose. Each one is aware that he has a part to play in general conspiracy though he may not know all its secrets or the means by which are common purpose is to be accomplished. The each scheme may be promoted by a few, some may drop out and some may join at a later stage, but the conspiracy continues until it is broken up. The conspiracy may develop in successive stages. There may be a general plan to accomplish the common design by such means as may from time to time be found expedient. New techniques may be invented and new means may be devised for advancement of the common plan. A general conspiracy must be distinguished from a number of separate conspiracies having a similar general purpose. Where different groups of persons co-operate towards their separate ends without any privity with each other, each combination constitutes a separate conspiracy. The common intention of the conspirators, then is to work for the furtherance of the common design of his group only. (on facts held, there was a single general conspiracy to smuggle gold into India from foreign countries).

On facts held, the privilege was not properly claimed under section 124 of the Evidence Act. It is difficult to say that the other cable addresses and cables were communications to a Public Officer in official confidence. The other cables and cable addresses were not relevant to the defence and their non-disclosure has not occasioned any failure of justice.

The application for the issue of a commission was misconceived and proper grounds for the issue of the commission under section 503 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has not been made out. The defence did not produce any letter from Pedro or any other material indicating that he was willing to be examined on commission. Even this address was not given. The Court could not issue a roving commission to a Court or authority either in Switzerland or in United Kingdom or in Pakistan. The application was not made in good faith and was liable to be rejected on this sole ground alone.

The combined effect of sections 133 and 114 illustration (b) of the Evidence Act is that though a conviction based upon accomplice evidence is legal the Court will not accept such evidence unless it is corroborated in material particulars. The corroboration must connect the accused with the crime. It may be direct or circumstantial. It is not necessary that the corroboration should confirm all the circumstances of the crime. It is sufficient if the corroboration is in material particulars. The corroboration must be from an independent source. One accomplice cannot corroborate another.

A particeps criminis in respect of the actual crime charged is an accomplice. The witness concerned may not confers to his participation in the crime, but it is for the Court to decide on a consideration of the entire evidence whether he is an accomplice.

If several accomplices simultaneously and without previous concert give a consistent account of the crime implicating one accused the Court may accept the several statements as corroborating each other. But it must be established that the several statements of accomplices were given independently and without any previous concert.

The Court has inherent power to recall a witness if it is satisfied that he is prepared to give evidence which is materially different from what he had given at the trial. On facts held that there was no material upon which the Court could be so satisfied and that the Magistrate rightly disallowed the prayer for recalling the witness.

Appeals by Special Leave from the judgment and Order, dated the 18th April, 1966 of the Bombay High Court in Criminal Appeals Nos. 1646, 1631, 1652, 1629, 1628 and 1626 of 1963 respectively.

H. G. Khendelawala, A. B. Pandya, H. R. Khanna and R. N. Sachthey, Advocates, for Respondents (In all the Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bachawat, J.—The six appellants are A-8, Mohamed Hussain Omer Kochra alias Mr. Buick alias Naznen, A-12, Maganlal Narauji Patel, A-16, N. B. Mukherji, A-15, N. S. Rao, A-14, Parasuram T. Kanel, A-6, Lakshmandas Chaganlal Bhatia alias Sham. In this judgment "A" means accused. Forty persons including the appellants were jointly prosecuted for criminal conspiracy to import and deal in gold punishable under section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 and for substantive offences punishable under section 167 (81).

A-1 to 5, A-18 to 35 and A-37 are absconding or being foreigners are not amenable to the processes of the Court. A-1 Jamal Shuhaibar, A-2 George Shuhaibar and A-3 Jawadat Shuhaibar of Beirut and A-4 Yusuf Mohamed Lori alias Abdulla of Bahrain sent gold from the Middle East. A-5 Juan Castaner Casanovas and A-18 Bernardo Szs of Geneva are foreign collaborators. A-19 Hamad Sultan and A-37 Chumilal alias Professor Kamal alias Dwarkadas of Bombay were concerned in the smuggling of gold. A-20 to A-35 Mrs. Gisele Minot, B. J. Lupi, J. P. Hoffman, Jacques Minot, Geoffire Allan, M. Torrens, Mrs. Mora Margaret, Armand Yavercowaski, Gran Powell, G. J. Flamant, Mrs. A. Ramel, Mrs. S. B. Taylor, J. C. Catino, E. D. Gill, A. J. Mascardo and A. A. Grant are foreigners and are said to have carried gold from foreign countries to India by air.

The trial proceeded against A-6 to 17, A-36, A-38, A-39 and A-40. A-6 Lakshmandas is a financier. A-14 Parasuram is his brother-in-law. A-7, Rabiya Bai Usman alias Grandma is the mother of A-9 Rukaiyabai Mohamed Hussain Kochra, A-10 Abidabai Usman and A-38 Hassan Usman. A-8 Kochra is the husband of A-9. A-11 Murad Asharnoff remitted funds to foreign countries. A-12 Maganlal Naranji Patel and A-13 Mafatlal Mohanlal Parekh are bullion merchants of Bombay. A-15 N. S. Rao, A-16 N. B. Mukherji, A-17 Timothy Miranda, A-39 D. K. Deshmukh and A-40 Jacob Miranda alias Tambaku were mechanics in the employ of the Air India International. A-36 Francis Bello was a co-conspirator. The Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, Third Court, Esplanade, Bombay, acquitted A-9, 10, 13, 39 and 40 of all the charges. He convicted A-6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 36 and 38 of criminal conspiracy and substantive offences under section 167 (81) and passed sentences of imprisonment and fine.

All the convicted persons filed appeals in the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal A-11 absconded. The High Court upheld the convictions of A-36 and A-7 but directed that A-36 be released on probation and that A-7 do pay a fine of Rs. 4,000 and undergo simple imprisonment for a day only. The High Court dismissed the appeals of A-6, 8, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16 and 17. The present appeals have been filed by A-6, 8, 12, 14, 16 and 15 after obtaining Special Leave.

The first count charged that all the 40 accused persons along with Mohamed Yusuf Merchant, Pedro Fernandez and other persons at Bombay and other places from 1st November, 1956 to 2nd February, 1959 were parties to a continuing criminal conspiracy to acquire possession of, carry remove deposit harbour keep conceal and deal in gold and knowingly to be concerned in fraudulent evasion of duty chargeable on gold and of the prohibition and restriction applicable thereto and committed an offence punishable under section 120-B, Indian Penal Code read with section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878. The other counts charged the accused persons individually with offences punishable under section 167 (81).

In broad outline the prosecution case is as follows : Before 1st November, 1956 some of the accused persons along with others were concerned in the illegal importation of gold. In or about November, 1956 Pedro Fernandez and Yusuf Merchant hatched the present conspiracy to which A-11 Murad Ahaharanoff was a party. The scheme was that necessary finances would be arranged, remittances to foreign countries would be made through Murad, gold would be sent by air from foreign countries to Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta and other air ports and the smuggled gold would be sold in India. A-6 Lakshmandas, A-8 Kochra and A-7 Rabiya Bai were approached for the necessary finances. Between 3rd February and 8th July, 1957 eleven carriers brought gold by air from Switzerland. Lakshmandas financed the first four transactions and his telegraphic address "Subhat" was used for receipt and despatch of cables. On 3rd February, 1957 the first carrier Gisele Minot came to Bombay. On 25th February, 1957, the second carrier B. J. Lupi and on 9th March, 1957 the third carrier J. P. Hoffman came to Delhi. The fourth carrier Jacques Minot went to Colombo. Kochra and Rabiya Bai financed the subsequent transactions and allowed the use of his telegraphic address "Nazneen". Cables used to be sent in codes known as the "Private Dictionary", "the new Geneva Code" and "the Beirut Code", and "the Behrein Code". Lakshmandas ceased to be a financier but continued to participate in the disposal of gold. On 8th April, 1957 the fifth carrier Mora Margaret went to Colombo. On 19th April, 1957 the sixth carrier Geoffire Allan and on 3rd May, 1957 the seventh carrier came to Bombay. At about this time A-12 is said to have joined the conspiracy. On 21st May, 1957 the eighth carrier Grant Powell came to Delhi. On 9th June, 1957 the ninth carrier Mora Margaret and on 24th June, 1957 the tenth carrier Armand Yavercowaski came to Bombay. On 8th July, 1957 the 11th carrier Grant Powell came to Calcutta. A-37 Chunilal who was despatched to contact the carrier disappeared with the gold. Thereafter the smuggling of gold stopped for sometime.

In August, 1957 Yusuf and A-38 Hassan representing Kochra and Rabiyaibai went to Beirut and induced A-; to A-3, Jamal Shuhaibar and his two brothers to join the conspiracy. The scheme was that the Shuhaibar brothers would send gold from the Middle East, Kochra and Rabiyaibai would remit the necessary fund and that A-19, Hamad Sultan would have an interest in the venture. Pedro also came to Beirut. Accounts between him and Yusuf were settled. It was decided that Pedro would continue to send gold from Switzerland, that Kochra and Rabiyaibai would supply the necessary finances and that Pedro would receive a half share of Yusuf's profits in the smuggling of gold from the Middle East. Between 7th November, 1957 and 13th February, 1958, eleven carriers of gold sent by Pedro came to Bombay. On 24th February, 1958, the twelveth carrier A.J. Mascardo was arrested in Delhi. Simultaneously gold was sent from the Middle East. On 3rd November, 1957, Grant Powell carrying gold sent by the Shuhaibar brothers came to Calcutta, but he was arrested. In November, 1957, A-4, Yusuf Mohamed Lori of Bahrein acting for Shuhaibar brothers came to India and it was decided that gold would be hidden in the body of Air India International planes by a mechanic at Beirut or Bahrein and would be removed in Bombay by another mechanic and that Kochra and Rabiyaibai would supply funds on the guarantee of Murad. From time to time the services of the mechanics, A-15 N. S. Rao, A-39 D. K. Deshmukh, A-40, Jacob Miranda, A-17 Timothy Miranda and other mechanics were requisitioned. Between 12th December, 1957 and 15th January, 1958, 4 or 5 consignments of gold concealed inside the belly of aircrafts were sent by Lori to India. From February, 1958, 7 or 8 consignments of gold concealed in the rear left bathroom of the aircrafts were sent to Lori to Bombay. Due to disturbances in the Middle East the smuggling of gold stopped for some time. Since October, 1958 eleven consignments of gold were sent to Bombay. On 1st February, 1959 the "Rani of Jhansi" carrying the 11th consignment of gold was searched by the Customs Officers at the Santacruz airport, Bombay and the gold was seized.

On 2nd February, 1959 the residence of Yusuf Merchant was searched and many incriminating articles were seized. From time to time Yusuf was interrogated, and his statements were recorded. On 24th October, 1959 the investigation was completed. The trial started in July, 1960. The prosecution examined P.W. 2, Yusuf Merchant and other accomplices, and witnesses and exhibited numerous documents. Yusuf Merchant, the main witness on behalf of the prosecution implicated all the appellants in the crime. The Courts below accepted his testimony, found that it was corroborated in material particulars, and convicted the appellants.

All the appeals were heard together. We shall note only those arguments which were raised in this Court by Counsel. Having regard to those arguments the following general questions affecting all the appellants arise for decision :—

(1) was the import of gold in contravention of section 8 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, punishable under section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 ;

(2) did the prosecution establish the general conspiracy laid in charge No. 1 ;

(3) did the learned Magistrate wrongly allow a claim of privilege in respect of the disclosure of certain addresses and cables and if so, with what effect ;

(4) did he wrongly refuse to issue commission for the examination of Pedro Fernandez ; and

(5) did he wrongly refuse to recall P.W. 50, Ali for cross-examination ?

As to the first question, the law since the passing of the Customs Act, 1962 admits of no doubt. The import and export of goods by sea, land and air may be prohibited absolutely or subject to conditions under section 11. Customs duties are leviable under section 12, on all goods so imported or exported. The fraudulent evasions of duties and of prohibitions are punishable under section 135.

In the present case we are concerned with the law in force before 1962. The Sea Customs Act, 1878, contained a number of prohibitions on imports by land or sea (section 18) and authorized the imposition of further prohibitions and restrictions on import or export by sea or by land (section 19). The Act also provided the machinery for the enforcement of prohibitions and restrictions by means of search, seizure, confiscation and penalties. Several other statutes contained further prohibitions and restrictions on the import or export of goods. Section 8 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, is one such enactment. A notification, dated 25th August, 1948, as amended up to date issued under section 8 (1) of this Act directed that "except with the general or special permission of the Reserve Bank, no person shall bring or send into India (a) any gold coin, gold bullion, gold sheets or gold ingot whether refined or not....." Section 23-A of the Act provided that the restrictions imposed by section 8 (1) "shall be deemed to have been imposed under section 19 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, and all the provisions of that Act shall have effect accordingly....." The effect of section 23-A was that the contravention of the notification under section 8 (1) attracted to it each and every provision of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, in force for the time being including section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, which was inserted by the Amending Act XXI of 1955.

It is to be noticed that section 19 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, authorised the imposition of prohibitions and restrictions on the import or export of goods by sea and land only. But the notification, dated the 25th August, 1948, issued under section 8 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, restricted the bringing into India of gold from any place outside India by land, sea and air. Section 23-A of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 created the fiction that the restriction had been imposed under section 19 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, so that all the provisions of that Act would be attracted to a breach of the notification. But the statutory fiction did not cut down the wide ambit of the notification or limit its application to imports and exports by sea and land only. An import of gold by air without the permission of the Reserve Bank was a breach of the notification, and the breach attracted to it the provisions of section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878.

The matter may be looked at from another point of view. When the Sea Customs Act, 1878, was passed, goods could be imported or exported by sea and land only. Transport by air was unknown. After the Second World War traffic by air began. There is force in the contention that the import or export by air is a species of import or export by land. The aircraft carrying goods lands or takes off from land. The prohibition or restriction on the import or export of goods by land is a prohibition or restriction on the import or export by aircraft, landing or taking off from land. A fraudulent evasion of the restriction imposed by the notification under section 8 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 was punishable under section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, and criminal conspiracy to evade the restriction was punishable under section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code.

In this connection a question arose whether customs duty was leviable on imports and exports by air and whether a fraudulent evasion of the duty was punishable under section 167 (81). The Sea Customs Act, 1878, and the rules and notifications made thereunder set up a complete machinery for the levy of sea customs duties. Section 20 provided for a levy of customs duties on goods imported or exported by sea. Payment of the duty was enforced by compelling all foreign trade to pass through certain ports. Drastic powers were given for detection, prevention and punishment of evasions of duty. The Land Customs Act, 1924, set up the machinery for the levy of land customs duties, and section 9 of the Act applied for the purpose of this levy several provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, with suitable modifications and adaptations. Rules 53 to 64 contained in para. IX of the Indian Aircraft Rules, 1920, framed under sections 3 and 6 of the Indian Aircraft Act, 1911, provided for the levy of air customs duties. The duty was leviable under rules 58 and 59 on goods imported or exported by air "as if such goods were chargeable to duties under the Sea Customs Act, 1878". Rule 63 provided that all persons importing or exporting goods into and from India "shall, so far as may be observed, comply with and be bound by the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878," with certain adaptations. The Indian Aircraft Act, 1934, repealed the Indian Aircraft Act, 1911 but the Indian Aircraft Rules, 1920 continued in force in view of section 24 of the General Clauses Act, 1897. The Indian Aircraft Rules, 1937, framed under sections 5 and 8 of the Indian Aircraft Act, 1934, preserved and continued Para. IX of the Indian Aircraft Rules 1920. Until the passing of the Customs Act, 1962, Part IX of the Indian Aircraft Rules, 1920 continued to be the basic law for the levy of air customs duties. On behalf of the appellants it was argued that (1) Rules could not authorise the levy of a tax, (2) Rules could not create a new offence punishable under section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, (3) a contravention of the Rules was punishable under section 10 of the Indian Aircraft Act, 1934, and not under section 167 (81). On behalf of the respondent our attention was drawn to section 16 of the Indian Aircraft Act, 1934 which provided :—

"The Central Government may, by notification in the official gazette, declare that any or all of the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, shall, with such modifications and adaptations as may be specified in the notifications apply to the import and export of goods by air."

Counsel for the respondent argued that (1) the notification dated 23rd March, 1937, continuing Part IX of the Aircraft Rules, 1920 was a sufficient declaration under section 16 ; (2) section 16 was a piece of conditional legislation, and by force of section 16 and on the declaration being made the duty became leviable on goods imported and exported by air, and a fraudulent evasion of duty became punishable under section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878. We do not think it necessary to express any opinion on these questions having regard to our conclusion that a fraudulent evasion of the restriction imposed by section 8 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, was punishable under section 167 (81).

As to the second question the contention was that the evidence disclosed a number of separate conspiracies and that the charge of general conspiracy was not proved. Criminal conspiracy as defined in section 120-A of the Indian Penal Code, is an agreement by two or more persons to do or cause to be done an illegal act or an act which is not illegal by illegal means. The agreement is the gist of the offence. In order to constitute a single general conspiracy there must be a common design and a common intention of all to work in furtherance of the common design. Each conspirator plays his separate part in one integrated and united effort to achieve the common purpose. Each one is aware that he has a part to play in a general conspiracy though he may not know all its secrets or the means by which the common purpose is to be accomplished. The evil scheme may be promoted by a few, some may drop out and some may join at a later stage, but the conspiracy continues until it is broken up. The conspiracy may develop in successive stages. There may be a general plan to accomplish the common design by such means as may from time to time be found expedient. New techniques may be invented and new means may be devised for advancement of the common plan. A general conspiracy must be distinguished from a number of separate conspiracies having a similar general purpose. Where different groups of persons co-operate towards their separate ends without any privity with each other, each combination constitutes a separate conspiracy. The common intention of the conspirators then is to work for the furtherance of the common design of his group only. The cases illustrate the distinction between a single general conspiracy and a number of unrelated conspiracies. In *S.K. Khetwani v. State of Maharashtra*¹, *S. Swaminatham v. State of Madras*², the Court found a single general conspiracy while in *R. v. Griffiths*³, the Court found a number of unrelated and separate conspiracies.

In the present case, there was a single general conspiracy to smuggle gold into India from foreign countries. The scheme was operated by a gang of international crooks. The net was spread over Bombay, Geneva, Beirut and Bahrein. Yusuf Merchant and Pedro Fernandez supplied the brain power, Murad Asharanoff remitted the funds. Lakshmandas Kochra and Rabiyaibai supplied the finances, Pedro Fernandez and the Shuhaibar brothers sent the gold from Geneva and the Middle East, carriers brought the gold hidden in jeckets, mechanics concealed and removed gold from aircrafts and others helped in contacting the carriers and disposing of the gold. Yusuf, Pedro and Murad and Lakshmandas were permanent members of the conspiracy. They were joined later by Kochra, the Shuhaibar brothers and Lori and other associates. The original scheme was to bring the gold from Geneva. The nefarious design was extended to smuggling of gold from the Middle East. There can be no doubt that the continuous smuggling of gold sent by Pedro from Geneva during February, 1956 to February, 1958 formed part of a single conspiracy. The settlement of accounts between Yusuf and Pedro at Beirut did not end the original conspiracy. There can also be no doubt that the smuggling of gold from Beirut by the Shuhaibar brothers and from Bahrein by their agent Lori were different phases of the same conspiracy. The main argument was that the despatch of gold from Geneva was the result of one conspiracy and that the despatch of gold from the Middle East was the result of another separate and unrelated conspiracy. The Courts below held, and in our opinion rightly, that there was a single general conspiracy embracing all the activities. Pedro had a share in the profits of the smuggling from Geneva. He got also a share of Yusuf's profits from the smuggling of the Middle East gold. Apparently Shuhaibar brothers and Lori had no share in the profits from the smuggling of the Geneva gold but they attached themselves to the general conspiracy originally devised by Yusuf and Pedro with knowledge of its scheme and purpose and took advantage of its existing organization for obtaining finances from Kochra and Rabiyaibai and for remittances of funds by Yusuf. Each conspirator profited from the general scheme and each one of them played his own part in the general conspiracy. The second contention is rejected.

As to the third question, we find that on or about 22nd February, 1962 the prosecution took out a summons to the Deputy Accountant-General Telegraphs Check Office, Calcutta, for the production of all records pertaining to 15 cable addresses including "Subhat" and "Nazneen" together with the summons under section 171-A previously issued by the customs officers to the Telegraphs Check Office, for the production of the cables and the receipts given by the customs officers to the Telegraphs Check Office for the cables so produced. Pursuant to the summons issued on 22nd February, 1962 Mr. Madhavan, Superintendent of the Telegraphs Check Office, Calcutta, produced in Court the cables, summons and receipts. All the cables relating to the aforesaid 15 cable addresses, and two more addresses with which the appellants were concerned were exhibited at the trial. The summons under section 171-A was a consolidated summons issued by the customs officer to the Telegraphs Check Office for the production of the cables relating to the investigations in the present case and several other cases. The receipt was a consolidated receipt for the cables produced under the summons. Affidavits were filed by Mr. P.C. Kalla, Senior Deputy Accountant, Post and Telegraphs and Mr. S.K. Srivastava, an Additional Collector of Customs, Calcutta, claiming privilege under section 124 of the Evidence Act in respect of the disclosure of the other cable addresses mentioned in the summons and receipts and the cables sent to those addresses. The learned Magistrate upheld this claim of privilege. In our opinion, the privilege was not properly claimed under section 124. It is difficult to say that the other cable addresses and cables were communications to a public officer in official confidence. However, we find that the other addresses and cables were required in connection with investigations unconnected with the present case and did not relate to any person or persons concerned in the offences for which the appellants were being tried. The other cables, and cable addresses were not relevant to the defence, and their non-disclosure has not occasioned any failure of justice.

As to the fourth question it appears that Pedro Fernandez was a material witness. In 1959 he wrote a letter to Yusuf stating that he was willing to come to India and to be examined as a witness. The prosecution tried to contact him but his whereabouts could not be traced. On 18th April, 1962 the defence applied for the issue of a commission "to the appropriate authority or Court either in Switzerland or in United Kingdom or in Pakistan for examination of Pedro Fernandez and Gimness as witnesses for the defence". Except stating that the defence undertook to pay all expenses and supply all relevant information, the application did not give any other particulars. The learned Magistrate rejected the application. He held and in our opinion rightly that the application was misconceived and proper grounds for the issue of the commission under section 503 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had not been made out. The defence did not produce any letter from Pedro or any other material indicating that he was willing to be examined on commission. Even his address was not given. The Court could not issue a roving commission to a Court or authority either in Switzerland or in United Kingdom or in Pakistan. The application was not made in good faith and was liable to be rejected on this ground alone.

As to the last question, we find that examination-in-chief of P.W. 50 Ali commenced on 7th October, 1960 and was concluded on 10th October, 1960. His cross-examination commenced on 21st August, 1961 and was concluded on 4th September, 1961. On 6th March, 1962 and again on 21st June, 1962 the defence applied for recalling Ali for cross-examination. The learned Magistrate rejected the two applications. According to the defence Ali was repentant and wanted to say that he had given false evidence. In our opinion, no ground was made out for recalling Ali. There was no affidavit from Ali nor was there any other material showing that his testimony was incorrect in any material particular. The Court has inherent power to recall a witness if it is satisfied that he is prepared to give evidence which is materially different from what he had given at the trial. In this case there was no material upon which the Court could be so satisfied. The learned Magistrate rightly disallowed the prayer for recalling Ali.

Mr. Jethmalani argued that the rough notes of statements given by Yusuf to the customs officers had been destroyed and that the defence was thereby prejudiced. This point was not taken either in the trial Court or in the High Court. In our opinion, Counsel ought not to be allowed to raise this new point for the first time in this Court.

On the merits, we find that the two Courts have recorded concurrent findings of fact. Normally this Court does not re-appraise the evidence unless the findings are perverse or are vitiated by any error of law or there is a grave miscarriage of justice. The Courts below accepted the testimony of the accomplice Yusuf Merchant. Section 133 of the Evidence Act says :—

"An accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person; and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice."

Illustration (b) to section 114 says that the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. The combined effect of sections 133 and 114 Illustration (b) is that though a conviction based upon accomplice evidence is legal the Court will not accept such evidence unless it is corroborated in material particulars. The corroboration must connect the accused with the crime. It may be direct or circumstantial. It is not necessary that the corroboration should confirm all the circumstances of the crime. It is sufficient if the corroboration is in material particulars. The corroboration must be from an independent source. One accomplice cannot corroborate another, see *Bhiva Doulv Patil v. State of Maharashtra*¹, *R. v. Baskerville*². In this light we shall examine the case of each appellant separately.

Case of Accused No. 8 Mohamed Hussain Umar Kochra.

(Gr.A. No. 139 of 1966)

Yusuf Merchant deposed that Kochra and his mother-in-law, A-7 Rabiya Bai acted as financiers after the fourth transaction, that Kochra's cable address "Nazneen" at 19, Erskine Road and his telephone was used in connection with the gold-smuggling activities. The arrangement was that cables addressed to "Nazneen" would be received at No. 19, Erskine Road and would then be forwarded to the Warden Road residence of Rukiyabai or the Napean Sea Road, residence of Kochra and that on receiving phone messages Yusuf would collect the cables. Yusuf's testimony has been corroborated in material particulars.

Kochra's mother resided at 10, Erskine Road, 4th floor, Esmail Building, Bombay-3. Exhibit Z-70 dated 19th February, 1957 is the application for the registration of "Nazneen". This document purports to have been signed by Ismail Kader, a domestic servant of Kochra's mother. It was proved that the signature "Ismail Kader" and the address 19, Erskine Road, 4th floor, Esmail Building, Bombay-3 on Exhibit Z-70 were in the handwriting of Rajabali Karmalli, another servant of Kochra's mother. Rajabali Karmalli lived in Kochra's garage in Napean Sea Road. Kochra's mother was invalid and Kochra held a power-of-attorney from her for management of the family property. Rajabali Karmalli was under Kochra's control and was his trusted servant. Kochra had his office in the ground floor of the building at 19, Erskine Road and his denial that he had no office there is false. Both Rajabali Karmalli and Ismail Kader have now disappeared and cannot be traced. Several cables sent to "Nazneen" in connection with the gold smuggling have been exhibited. The other cables could not be traced. Kochra registered "Nazneen" because he desired to join the conspiracy and received the cables sent to this address. The registration of "Nazneen" was not procured by Yusuf in collusion with Rajabali Karmalli or Ismail Kader. Though Yusuf surreptitiously used other addresses for the receipt of his cables. "Nazneen" was used with the full knowledge and approval of Kochra.

On or about 13th August, 1957 Yusuf and Hassan went to Beirut for inducing the Shuhaibar brothers to join the conspiracy. About 15th August Kochra's wife Rukaiyabai and Hassan's wife reached Beirut. A cable (Z-745) dated 6th August, 1957 was sent from Beirut informing "Nazneen" that Rukaiyabai had arrived safely. On a consideration of the materials on the record including the written statements of Kochra and Rukaiyabai the Courts below have found that this cable was received by Kochra. The cable Z-745 was produced by P.W. 207 on 4th April, 1962 after the examination of Yusuf Merchant had been concluded. An application for recalling Yusuf filed on the same date was rejected. A point was made that Kochra was prejudiced by the rejection of this application. Counsel suggested that Yusuf sent the cable Z-745 from Beirut and that this fact could be established if Yusuf was recalled for cross-examination. We shall assume that Yusuf despatched the cable. But the fact remains that the cable was received at "Nazneen". It was an intimation of the safe arrival of Rukaiyabai at Beirut and was obviously meant for her husband. The Courts below rightly held that the cable was received by Kochra, and that there was no substance in the defence case that he was not aware of the existence of "Nazneen." The rejection of the application for recalling Yusuf did not prejudice Kochra.

The carrier Grant Powell arrived in Calcutta on 3rd November, 1957 and was arrested. P.W. 127 Chandiwalla and Jagbinderhudas were sent to Calcutta to contact the carrier. Yusuf's brother P.W. 50 Ali also went to Calcutta. On 6th November, Ali sent a telephone message to Kochra informing him of a message from Chandiwalla that there was a raid in his room by the custom officials and that the carrier had not come. Kochra received the message on his telephone No. 72328 at his residence. Exhibit Z-459 dated 7th November, 1957 is a copy of the bill for this telephone call. Thereafter Kochra contacted Chandiwalla on the telephone and assured him that nothing would happen and asked him to return to Bombay immediately. On 7th November, 1958 Ali sent a phone message to Kochra at his telephone No. 72328 informing him that Chandiwalla was returning to Bombay. Exhibit Z-459 dated 7th November, 1957 is the copy of the bill for this telephone call. Taking into account Kochra's statement, Exhibit Z-703 para. 6 and his written statement para. 72 the Courts below rightly held that Kochra received the two telephone messages from Ali relating to matters connected with the gold smuggling. Even after the receipt of these messages Kochra allowed the use of "Nazneen" for receipt of cables from Pedro and acceptance of cables by Yusuf. P.W. 31 Mastakar, proved that Kochra did not send any complaint to the telegraphic office that "Nazneen" was registered or was used without his authority.

Mr. Mehta suggested that (a) "Nazneen" was used before Kochra joined the conspiracy and that (b) Kochra did not join the conspiracy on or about 8th April, 1957 when the fifth carrier came and in this connection read to us several documents. The Courts below rejected this contention and we find no reason for re-appraising the evidence. It may be pointed out that by the cable Exhibit Z-69 dated 14th March, 1957 and the letter Exhibit Z-71 dated 17th March, 1957 Yusuf informed Pedro of the registration of "Nazneen" and by the cable Exhibit Z-77 dated 17th March, 1957 Yusuf asked him to send the cables to the new address. The materials on the record show that Kochra had then joined the conspiracy and the address "Nazneen" was used for despatch and receipt of cables after 17th March, 1957. Mr. Mehta commented on the fact that Yusuf implicated Kochra for the first time in his statement given on 30th April, 1957 and that Yusuf had not referred to Kochra in his earlier statements. Yusuf at first wanted to shield his friend Kochra. The customs officers discovered the existence of "Nazneen" on or about 20th April, 1959. On being then questioned with regard to "Nazneen", Yusuf was compelled to disclose his connection with Kochra and the circumstances under which "Nazneen" came to be registered.

The materials on the record clearly establishes the connection of Kochra with the conspiracy and materially corroborates the testimony of Yusuf Merchant. The Courts below rightly convicted Kochra.

Case of Accused No. 12. Maganlal Naranji Patel.

(Cr. A. No. 140 of 1966).

The prosecution case is that since 3rd May, 1957 Maganlal was buying the smuggled gold from Yusuf Merchant and that when consignments of gold bearing the mark "chaisso" and having the fineness of about 99.99 came from Beirut, Yusuf Merchant and Maganlal had the gold melted in the silver refinery of P.W. 127 Chandiwala at Bandra by his employees Bahadulla and Shankar in December, 1957 and Ram Naresh and Mohamed Rafique in February, 1958 with a view to remove the mark "chaisso" and to reduce the fineness of the gold. The mark "chaisso" and the 99.99 fineness indicated that the gold was of foreign origin. The object of melting the gold and reducing the fineness was to destroy the tell-tale evidence of its origin. For the purpose of implicating Maganlal the prosecution relied on the testimony of P.W. 2 Yusuf Merchant, P.W. 127 Mohamed Chandiwala and P.W. 68 Mohamed Rafique. It is common case that Yusuf and Chandiwala are accomplices. The question in issue is whether P.W. 69 Mohamed Rafique was also an accomplice. The two Courts held that Rafique was not an accomplice but we are unable to agree with this finding. The melting was done late in the night after normal working hours. The melting of gold in the silver refinery was unusual. On no other occasion gold was melted in the refinery. Rafique was asked to keep the matter secret. For two hours' secret work, he got about Rs. 10 though his daily wage was Rs. 3 only. Once, the gold was brought in a jacket usually worn for carrying smuggled gold. In his statement Exhibit 25-K Yusuf admitted that of the two workmen Rafique had more intimate knowledge of the reason for the secret handling of the gold. The secrecy of the job, the unusual hours, the special remuneration, the carriage of gold in jackets the user of silver refinery for the melting of gold, the inside knowledge of Rafique of the purpose of the melting, lead to the irresistible conclusion that Rafique was knowingly a party to melting of smuggled gold with intent to destroy the evidence of its foreign origin and to evade the restrictions on its import. He was clearly a participes criminis in respect of the offences with which Maganlal was charged and was liable to be tried jointly with him for those offences. As pointed out by Lord Simonds in *Davis v. Director of Public Prosecution*¹ a participes crimines in respect of the actual crime charged is an accomplice. The witness concerned may not confess to his participation in the crime, but it is for the Court to decide on a consideration of the entire evidence whether he is an accomplice. Rafique was an accomplice, and his evidence cannot be used to corroborate the evidence of Yusuf and Chandiwalla, the other accomplices. There is no corroboration of the evidence, of the accomplices from an independent source. On the materials on the record it is not safe to convict Maganlal of the offences with which he is charged.

We may also point out that the positive case of Yusuf and Chandiwalla was that Rafique melted the gold in February, 1958. The books of Chandiwalla shows that in February, 1958 Rafique did not work in the refinery. In his place one Kedar worked there. Chandiwalla suggested that Kedar was another name of Rafique. This is an impossible story. Rafique himself did not say that his other name was Kedar. Thumb impressions of the workers used to be taken on the muster roll of the refinery but that document was not produced and the identity of Rafique with Kedar was not established. The High Court rightly held that Kedar and Rafique were different persons. The High Court made a new case for the prosecution and held that Rafique might have melted the gold towards the latter part of December, 1958. Mr. Khandelwala frankly stated that he could not support this finding. In this Court Mr. Khandelwala maintained that the gold was melted by Rafique in February, 1958 and that Rafique was also known as Kedar. For the reasons given above, we are unable to accept this case. In our opinion, Criminal Appeal No. 140 of 1966 should be allowed and accused No. 12 Maganlal Naranji Patel must be acquitted of all the charges.

Case of Accused No. 16 N.B. Mukherjee.

Mukherjee was the engineer-in-charge of Group A base maintenance. According to the prosecution Mukherjee was responsible for removing gold from aircrafts bringing gold from the Middle East, P.W. 2 Yusuf Merchant, P.W. 49 Maxie Miranda, P.W. 129 C.B. D'Souza, P.W. 143 Bhide and P.W. 148 Zahur, implicated Mukherjee. All these witnesses are accomplices. The High Court found that their evidence has been corroborated in material particulars from independent sources. We are unable to accept this finding. Mr. Khandelwala argued that the following circumstances corroborated the evidence of the accomplices :—

(1) the reference to Mukherjee in Exhibit Z-209, a letter dated 8th July, 1958, from Lori to Yusuf, and Exhibit Z-226, a letter dated 16th August, 1958, from Bello to Yusuf ;

(2) Mukherjee's leave application Z-558, dated 13th December, 1958, and Z-313, dated 18th January, 1959, a cable from Yusuf to Jamal ;

(3) simultaneous statements of a number of accomplices ; and

(4) Exhibit Z-697 the retracted confession of Bello. Mr. Khandelwala did not rely on any other circumstances.

In Exhibit Z-209 Lori referred to Bello's friend. Exhibit Z-226 is a letter of Bello to Yusuf referring to "our friend." These two letters do not refer to Mukherjee by name. There is no corroboration from any independent source, that Mukherjee was one of the co-conspirators referred to in these letters. The two letters cannot be regarded as a corroboration of Yusuf's evidence.

On 13th December, 1958, Mukherjee applied for leave from 19th January to 2nd February, 1959. The leave application Exhibit Z-558 was allowed on 14th December, 1958. This document is innocuous and does not implicate Mukherjee in the crime. Maxie Miranda now says that Mukherjee asked Maxie not to remove the gold during his absence on leave, that Maxie desired to remove the gold surreptitiously without Mukherjee's knowledge and arranged for the change in the place of concealment of gold in aircrafts and that accordingly Z-213, a cable, dated 18th January, 1959 was sent by Yusuf to Jamal informing the latter that a new place of concealment had been airmailed. Exhibit Z-313 on the face of it does not implicate Mukherjee. The prosecution had to rely entirely on the evidence of Maxie Miranda and other accomplices for the purpose of implicating Mukherjee. Exhibit Z-558 and Exhibit Z-313 do not connect Mukherjee with the crime.

Section 114 of the Evidence Act says thus as to Illustration (b) : "A crime is committed by several persons, A, B and C, three of the criminals, are captured on the spot and kept apart from each other. Each gives an account of the crime implicating D, and the accounts corroborate each other in such a manner as to render previous concert highly improbable." If several accomplices simultaneously and without previous concert give a consistent account of the crime implicating the accused the Court may accept the several statements as corroborating each other, see *Haroon Haji Abdulla v. State of Maharashtra*¹. But it must be established that the several statements of accomplices were given independently and without any previous concert, see *Bhuboni Sahu v. The King*². In the present case the 'Rani of Jhansi' was searched on 2nd February, 1959. Yusuf gave his first statement on 3rd February, 1959. He did not then implicate Mukherjee. Maxie Miranda gave his statement on 4th February, 1959 implicating Mukherjee. No other accomplice made a statement on that date. There was ample opportunity thereafter for the accomplices meeting together and conspiring to implicate Mukherjee. On 8th February, 1959 C. B. D'Souza, Bhide and Yusuf made separate statements implicating Mukherjee. On 27th June, 1959 Zahur made a similar statement. These statements cannot be regarded as having been made independently and without any previous concert and do not amount to sufficient corroboration of the accomplice evidence.

On 11th February, 1959 Bello made a confession implicating Mukherjee. At the trial he retracted the confession. Under section 30 the Court can take into consideration this retracted confession against Mukherjee. But this confession can be used only in support of other evidence and cannot be made the foundation of a conviction, see *Bhuboni Sahu's case*², page 156. It cannot be used to support the evidence of the other accomplices.

In our view Criminal Appeal No. 141 of 1966 should be allowed and Mukherjee should be acquitted of all the charges.

Case of Accused No. 15 N. S. Rao (Cr.A. No. 142 of 1966).

In this case there is sufficient independent corroboration of Yusuf's testimony implicating Rao. Counsel for the appellant did not dispute the finding of the High Court that Rao is guilty of the offences with which he had been charged. The High Court rightly convicted N. S. Rao.

Case of Accused No. 14 Parasuram T. Kanel (Cr.A. No. 143 of 1966).

Counsel did not dispute the finding of the High Court that there is sufficient independent corroboration of accomplice evidence implicating Kanel. We have perused the records and we find that the High Court rightly convicted Kanel of the charges against him.

Case of Accused No. 6 Lakshmandas Chhaganlal Bhatia (Cr.A. No. 144 of 1966).

The Courts below accepted the testimony of Yusuf Merchant implicating Lakshmandas in the conspiracy and other specific charges against him. Lakshmandas acted as the financier in the first four transactions and subsequently participated in the disposal of gold. Yusuf's testimony has been corroborated in material particulars. It is sufficient to mention two circumstances which connects Lakshmandas with the criminal conspiracy and other charges against him.

1. (1968) 70 Bom.L.R. 240, 245 : (1968) 2 S.C.J. 534 : (1968) M.L.J. (Cr.) 591.

2. (1949) L.R. 76 I.A. 147, 156-7 : (1949) 2 M.L.J. 194.

Exhibit Z-20 shows that on 26th November, 1956 Lakshmandas had the telegraphic address "Subhat" registered. The application for registration of "Subhat" was signed by Lakshmandas. The address for the delivery of the cables was Lakshmandas Chhaganlal Bhatia, 8, Little Gibbs Road, Alimanor Building, 1st Floor, Bombay-6. Numerous cables with regard to the smuggling of gold were received by Lakshmandas at the telegraphic address "Subhat". The evidence shows that the address "Subhat" was registered for the purpose of the smuggling activities only. It does not appear that any cable relating to any legitimate business was received by Lakshmandas at this telegraphic address.

The third carrier, J. P. Hoffman arrived in Delhi. The contact of Lakshmandas with this carrier is clearly established. Exhibit is a cable dated 6th March, 1957 from Yusuf to Pedro stating that he was awaiting the party at Hotel Marina in Delhi and that the code name was captain. The passenger manifest of the Indian Airlines Corporation (Exhibit Z-566) shows that A-14 P. T. Kanel the brother-in-law of Lakshmandas travelled from Bombay to Delhi by flight No. 125 of 1966 on 7th March, 1957. The reservation Chart Z-566-A shows that the reservation for Kanel was made from telephone No. 70545 of Lakshmandas. The register of Hotel Marina, New Delhi, Exhibit Z-65 shows that Kanel arrived at the Hotel on 8th March, 1957 at 7-30 A.M. and occupied room No. 22. At the Hotel Kanel declared that Thambu Chetty Street, Madras, was his permanent address, though in fact he had no such address at Madras. The telephone register of Marina Hotel Exhibit Z-65-C shows that on 8th March, Kanel attempted to contact telephone No. 70545 but the call was cancelled. The passenger list of Indian Airlines Corporation Exhibit Z-567-A shows that a seat was booked for Bhatia by plane from Bombay to Delhi and the manifest shows that he travelled by the plane on 9th March, 1957. The manifest of K. L. M. Airways Exhibit Z-489 shows that Hoffman travelled by plane from Geneva and arrived at Palam Airport, New Delhi, on 9th March. The register of Hotel Marina Exhibit Z-66 shows that Hoffman arrived at the Marina Hotel on 8th March, at 1-40 A.M. and occupied room No. 39. The bill of Hotel Marina Exhibit Z-65-B shows that Kanel was charged Rs. 3-8-0 extra for a guest and that he left the Hotel on 10th March. The passenger manifest Exhibit Z-537 shows that on 10th March, 1957 Kanel and Lakshmandas travelled by the same plane from Delhi to Bombay and their ticket Nos. were 194885 and 194886. There is nothing to show that Kanel and Lakshmandas came to Delhi for any legitimate business. The documentary evidence completely corroborates Yusuf's testimony that Kanel came to Delhi, and later he was joined by Lakshmandas and that the object of their visit was to contact the carrier Hoffman and to receive from him the smuggled gold. The Courts below rightly convicted Lakshmandas of the charges against him.

Counsel for the appellants pleaded for a mitigation of the sentences. The Courts below passed on them sentences of rigorous imprisonment on the charge of conspiracy and on the individual charges for which they were convicted and directed that the sentences on all the charges except the charge of criminal conspiracy would run concurrently. Counsel argued that a separate punishment on the conspiracy charge was not justified and referred us the following passage in Ghanville Williams' Criminal Law, 2nd Ed., (General Part), Article 220, page 685 :—

"Conspiracy is a useful feature on which to seize for punishing inchoate crime ; it is not, in general, an aggravating factor when crime has been committed. Where there is a prosecution for a consummated crime and for conspiracy to commit it, no separate punishment would be justifiable on the conspiracy count. However, the fact that criminals are organized professionally for crime may be taken into consideration in determining the punishment for the crime."

We find that the offence under section 167 (81) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 was punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to fine or to both. A party to a criminal conspiracy to commit this offence was punishable under section 120-B (1) of the Indian Penal Code in the same manner as if he had abetted the offence. A criminal conspiracy is a separate offence, punishable separately from the main offence. The sentences passed by the Courts below cannot be said to be illegal. However, in the present case, Yusuf and Pedro, the ring leaders of the conspiracy, have escaped punishment. There has been a prolonged trial commencing in July, 1960 and ending in conviction on 30th September, 1963. Considering all the circumstances, we think, that the sentences on all the charges should run concurrently.

In the result, Criminal Appeal No. 140 of 1966 is allowed and Maganlal Naranji Patel is acquitted of all the charges. Criminal Appeal No. 141 of 1966 is also allowed and N. B. Mukherjee is acquitted of all the charges.

Criminal Appeal Nos. 139 of 1966, 142 of 1966, 143 of 1966 and 144 of 1966 are allowed in part and we direct that all the sentences passed on the appellants will run concurrently. In other respects, the appeals are dismissed.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J.C. SHAH AND G.K. MITTER, JJ.

v.

The State of Madras and Another etc.

... Respondents.

Madras General Sales Tax Act (I of 1959)—Constitution of India (1950), Articles 14 and 301—Imposition of tax on sale of 'cane jaggery' while exempting that on 'palm jaggery'—If discriminatory and violative of equality clause of the Constitution—Freedom of trade and commerce if impeded by the levy—Legislative power if has been colourably exercised in imposing the levy.

Since section 8 read with the Third Schedule of the Madras General Sales Tax Act (I of 1959) as amended by Madras Act II of 1968 exempts only "sugar" from liability to tax, sales of jaggery, cane and palm, now fall within the charging section. But the Government of Madras have in exercise of power under section 17 of Act I of 1959 exempted transaction of sale of "palm jaggery" from tax. It is true that between 1st April, 1958 and 31st October, 1967 transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" were exempt from liability to pay sales tax under the Acts of 1939 and 1959, but it cannot be inferred therefrom that the Legislature treated "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" as the same commodity.

The evidence on the record clearly shows that "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" are commercially different commodities. "Cane jaggery" is produced from the juice of sugarcane; "palm jaggery" is produced from the juice of the palm tree. Production of "palm jaggery" in the State is small compared to "cane jaggery". The method of production of "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" are different; they reach the consumers through different channels of distribution; the prices at which they are sold differ and they are consumed by different sections of the community. It must therefore be held that "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" are not commodities of the same class, and in any event in imposing liability to tax on transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and exempting "palm jaggery", no unlawful discrimination denying the guarantee of equal protection was practised.

Freedom of trade, commerce and intercourse guaranteed by Article 301 of the Constitution is protected against taxing statutes as well as other statutes, but by imposition of tax on transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" no restriction on the freedom of trade or commerce or in the course of trade with or within the State is imposed. The tax imposed on transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" does not affect the freedom of trade within the meaning of Article 301.

* C As. Nos. 281, 284, 363, 383 to 393 and 513 to 567 of 1969

There is no substance in the contention that the Act which imposes tax on "cane jaggery" and the notification which exempts "palm jaggery" from liability to tax imposes a colourable exercise of authority. If the Legislature has the power to impose the tax, its authority is not open to challenge on a plea of colourable exercise of power.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—At the conclusion of the hearing of these appeals on 23rd April, 1969 we announced that "the appeals are dismissed with costs; reasons in support of the order will be delivered thereafter." We proceed to record the reasons in support of the order.

The appellants carry on business as dealers in "cane jaggery" in the State of Tamil Nadu. As a result of certain legislative and executive measures, transaction of sale in "cane jaggery" were made liable as from 1st January, 1968 to tax under the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, and transactions of sale in "palm jaggery" remained exempt from sales tax. The appellants filed petitions in the High Court of Madras challenging the validity of the levy of tax on "cane jaggery", on three grounds:

(1) that the levy of tax on turnover from sale of "cane jaggery" was discriminatory and violated the equality clause of the Constitution;

(2) that the levy of tax imposes a restriction on trade and commerce contrary to the provisions of Part XIII of the Constitution; and

(3) there is excessive delegation of legislative authority to the executive and on that account the levy of tax pursuant to an order made in exercise of the powers under section 59 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act I of 1959 on "cane jaggery" is invalid.

The High Court rejected all the contentions.

Counsel for the appellants have in these appeals urged the first two grounds and have in addition submitted that in levying tax on turnover from sale of "cane jaggery" legislative power has been colourably exercised. The argument that there was excessive delegation to the executive of the legislative power was abandoned before the Court, because the State of Madras has enacted Act II of 1968 authorising levy of tax on sale of jaggery by amending Schedule III to Madras Act I of 1959.

Turnover from sale of jaggery—cane or palm—was subject to tax under section 3 (1) of the Madras Act IX of 1939 at three pies per rupee. By G.O. No. 651 dated 28th February, 1955 and G.O. No. 2780 dated 7th September, 1955 all sales of "palm jaggery" effected through Co-operative Societies and the Palm Gur Federation were exempted from tax. By another G.O. No. 1605 dated 19th August, 1956, all transactions of sale in "palm jaggery" were exempted from sales tax with effect from 1st April, 1956. Transactions of sale in "cane jaggery" therefore continued to remain liable to tax whereas sales of "palm jaggery" enjoyed the benefit of exemption from tax.

After the judgment of this Court in *The Bengal Immunity Company Ltd. v. The State of Bihar and others*¹, the Parliament amended Article 286 and entry 54 in List II of the Seventh Schedule and added a new Entry 92-A in List I in the Seventh Schedule by the Constitution (Sixth Amendment) Act. In exercise of the power under Entry 92-A List I the Parliament enacted the Central Sales Tax Act 74 of 1956. By Chapter IV of that Act the power reserved under the amended Article 286 Clause (3) was exercised by the Parliament and certain classes of goods were declared to be of "Special importance in inter-State trade or commerce". By section 15 certain modifications were declared in State Acts relating to the levy of taxes on sales and purchases of declared goods. However, in the list of goods of "special importance in inter-State trade or commerce" gur or jaggery was when the Act was enacted, not included.

The Parliament then enacted the Additional Duties of Excise (Goods of Special Importance) Act, 1957 (Act 58 of 1957). Section 3 of that Act authorised the levy and collection of additional duties in respect of several classes of goods including "sugar". By section 4 it was provided that during each financial year, there shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India to the States in accordance with the provisions of the second schedule, such sums, representing a part of the net proceed of the additional duties levied and collected during that financial year, as are specified in that Schedule. It was enacted by the proviso to clause (2) of the Schedule that if during that financial year there is levied and collected in any State specified in the Table a tax on the sale or purchase of sugar by or under any law of that State, no sums shall be payable to that State under sub-clause (ii) or sub-clause (iii) of clause (b) in respect of that financial year, unless the Central Government by special order otherwise directs. The expression 'sugar' was defined in section 2 (c) as having the same meaning as it has in the First Schedule to the Central Excise and Salt Act, 1944. The Governor of Madras issued Ordinance I of 1957 directing that transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" be liable to a single point tax at 5 per cent. with effect from 1st April, 1957. By virtue of the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956, as amended by Act 31 of 1958 "sugar as defined in Item No. 8 of the First Schedule to the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944 was declared a commodity essential to the life of the community and tax could thereafter be levied on "sugar" at the rate of 2 per cent only. But in view of the definition contained in the Central Excise and Salt Act, 1944, there was some doubt whether the expression "sugar" included gur. The State of Madras being apparently of the opinion that "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" were subject to the provisions of the Additional Excise Act 58 of 1957, issued on 15th April, 1958, G. O. No. 1457 exempting all sales of "cane jaggery" from tax with effect from 1st April, 1958. Transactions of sale of "palm jaggery" were therefore exempt partially from sales tax from 28th February, 1955 and wholly from 1st April, 1956, and transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" were exempt from tax from 1st April, 1958.

The State Legislature enacted the Madras General Sales Tax Act I of 1959 with effect from 1st April, 1959. By section 3 every dealer whose total turnover was not less than Rs. 10,000 became liable to pay tax for each year at the rate of 2 per cent of his taxable turnover. By section 8 it was provided that subject to such restrictions and conditions as may be prescribed, a dealer who deals in goods specified in the Third Schedule shall not be liable to pay any tax under the Act in respect of such goods. Item 5 in the Third Schedule was "sugar including jaggery and gur." Section 17 of that Act authorised the State Government by notification to exempt or to make reduction in rate in respect of any tax payable under the Act on the sale or purchase of any specified goods or class of goods at all points or specified points in respect of sales by successive dealers or by any specified class of dealers in respect of the whole or any part of their turnover. By section 59 (1) of the Act the State Government was authorised by notification, to alter, add or cancel any of the Schedules.

On 1st April, 1959 transactions of sale of "sugar including jaggery and gur" were exempt from liability to pay tax under the Madras General Sales Tax Act I of 1959. The exemption applied to all transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery". On 10th September, 1965 the Government of India advised the State Government that "jaggery" was not included in the expression "sugar" in the Additional Duties of Excise Act 58 of 1957. The State of Madras in exercise of the power under sub-section (1) of section 59 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, issued G. O. No. 2261 dated 30th December, 1967, that :

"In the said (Third) Schedule in item, 5 for the word 'including' the words but not including, shall be substituted."

The State simultaneously issued another notification that—

"In exercise of powers conferred by section 17 (1) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, the Governor of Madras granted exemption in respect of tax payable under the Act on all sales of palm jaggery."

In consequence of the two notifications turnover from transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" which was till then exempt from tax became liable to tax under section 3 of the Madras Act I of 1959 whereas sale of "palm jaggery" remained exempt from liability to pay sales tax.

In support of the plea that the State had practised unlawful discrimination between sales of "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" it was urged that "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" which were identical commodities and were treated similarly under the successive Sales Tax Acts of the State for many years past were without any rational nexus with the object sought to be served by the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, differently treated and on that account the notification issued under section 59 sub-section (1) which modifies the Third Schedule is ultra vires.

It may be recalled that the notification under section 59 (1) which was issued in exercise of executive authority has received legislative sanction by Madras Act 2 of 1968. Amendment in the Third Schedule now flows from the exercise of legislative authority and not executive authority.

Since section 8 read with the Third Schedule as amended by Madras Act 2 of 1968 exempts only "sugar" from liability to tax sales of jaggery, cane and palm, now fall within the charging section. But the Government of Madras have in exercise of powers under section 17 of Act I of 1959 exempted transactions of sale of "palm jaggery" from tax. It is true that between 1st April, 1958 and 31st October, 1967 transactions of sale of "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" were exempt from liability to pay sales tax under the Madras General Sales Tax Acts of 1959 and 1959, but it cannot be inferred therefrom that the Legislature treated "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" as the "same commodity". For nearly three years before 1st April, 1958 sales of "palm jaggery" were exempt from tax but sales of "cane jaggery" were not.

The evidence on the record clearly shows that "cane jaggery" and "palm jaggery" are commercially different commodities. "Cane jaggery" is produced from the juice of sugarcane; "palm jaggery" is produced from the juice of the palm tree. Mr. Raghupathy, Deputy Secretary to the Government of Madras (Commercial Taxes) has stated in his affidavit that "palm jaggery" industry comes under the purview of Khadi and Village Industries Board and is one of the cottage industries which gives employment mainly to poor tappers. The tappers, according to Mr. Raghupathy, collect "neera" from palm and other trees and prepare jaggery by the traditional method of boiling "neera" in their huts and produce jaggery without the aid of any machinery. Production of "palm jaggery" in the State compared to "cane jaggery" is small. The price of "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" differ widely and apparently "palm jaggery" and "cane jaggery" are consumed by different sections of the community. It is clear that the method of production of “palm jaggery” and “cane jaggery” are different; they reach the consumers through different channels of distribution; the prices at which they are sold differ and they are consumed by different sections of the community.

In a recent judgment *N. Venugopala Ravi Varma Rajah v. Union of India and another*¹, this Court observed :

“.....tax laws are aimed at dealing with complex problems of infinite variety necessitating adjustment of several disparate elements. The Courts accordingly admit, subject to adherence to the fundamental principles of the doctrine of equality a larger play to legislative discretion in the matter of classification. The power to classify may be exercised so as to adjust the system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways; the Legislature may select persons, properties, transactions and objects and apply different methods and even rates for tax, if the Legislature does so reasonably. If the classification is rational, the Legislature is free to choose objects of taxation impose different rates, exempt classes of property from taxation, subject different classes of property to tax in different ways and adopt different modes of assessment. A taxing statute may contravene Article 14 of the Constitution if it seeks to impose on the same class of property, persons, transactions or occupations similarly situate, incidence of taxation, which leads to obvious inequality.”

It was also said by the Court that :

“It is for the Legislature to determine the objects on which tax shall be levied, and the rates thereof. The Courts will not strike down an Act as denying the equal protection merely because other objects could have to been, but are not, taxed by the Legislature.”

We are accordingly of the view that “cane jaggery” and “palm jaggery” are not commodities of the same class, and in any event in imposing liability to tax on transactions of sale of “cane jaggery” and exempting “palm jaggery,” no unlawful discrimination denying the guarantee of equal protection was practised.

No serious argument was advanced in support of the plea that the freedom of trade and commerce guaranteed by Part XIII of the Constitution is infringed by the imposition of tax on “cane jaggery”. Freedom of trade, commerce and intercourse guaranteed by Article 301 of the Constitution is protected against taxing statutes as well as other statutes, but by imposition of tax on transactions of sale of “cane jaggery” no restriction on the freedom of trade or commerce or in the course of trade with or within the State is imposed. The tax imposed on transaction of sale of “cane jaggery” does not affect the freedom of trade within the meaning of Article 301. As observed by this Court in The State of Madras v. N. K. Nataraja Mudali,² “a tax may in certain cases directly and immediately restrict or hamper the free flow of trade, but every imposition of tax does not do so.”

There is no substance in the contention that the Act which imposes tax on “cane jaggery” and the notification which exempts “palm jaggery” from liability to tax imposes a colourable exercise of authority. If the Legislature has the power to impose the tax, its authority is not open to challenge on a plea of colourable exercise of power: *K. C. Gajapati Narayan Deo & Others v. The State of Orissa*³.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J. C. SHAH, Acting C. J., V. RAMASWAMI AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

M/s. Kurapati Venkatasatyanarayana and Brothers .. Appellants*

v.

The State of Andhra Pradesh .. Respondent.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 286 (1) (a), Explanation—Madras General Sales Tax Act (IX of 1939), Section 22 (a), (i) Explanation—Scope—When attracted.Sales Tax—Single order of assessment for a particular year—Part of assessment illegal—Assessment if invalid in toto.

If the goods were as a direct result of a sale delivered outside the State for the purpose of consumption in the State of first delivery the assessee would be entitled to the exemption from sales tax by virtue of the Explanation to Article 286 (1) (a) of the Constitution and it would not be necessary for the assessee to prove further that the goods so delivered were actually consumed in the State of first destination.

In the present case though there is a single order of assessment for the assessment year 1949-50, the assessment could be split up and dissected and the items of sale separated and taxed for different periods. It is quite easy in this case to ascertain the turnover of the appellant for the pre-Constitution and post-Constitution periods for these figures are furnished in the plaint by the appellant himself. It is open to the Supreme Court in these circumstances to sever illegal part of the assessment and give a declaration with regard to that part alone instead of declaring the entire assessment void.

Appeal from the Judgment and Decree dated the 11th March, 1965 of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in A. S. Nos. 169 and 93 of 1957.

Rajeshwara Rao and B. Parthasarathi, Advocates, for Appellant.

D. Munikammiah, Senior Advocate (A. V. V. Nair, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by Ramaswami, J.—This appeal is brought by certificate from the judgment of the High Court of Andhra Pradesh dated 11th March, 1965 in A.S. Nos. 93 and 169 of 1957.

The appellant was a firm of dealers in pulses at Vijayawada. It was sending pulses like green gram and black gram to other States viz: Bombay, Bengal, Madras and Kerala by rail in the course of their business. The consignments were addressed to 'self' and the railway receipts were endorsed in favour of Banks for delivery against payments. The purchasers obtained the railway receipts after payments and took delivery of the goods. The total turnover of the business of the appellant for the year 1949-50 was Rs. 17,05,144-2-2. Of the said turnover a sum of Rs. 3,61,442-7-3 represented the turnover of sales effected outside the then Madras State. For the assessment year 1949-50 the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer collected sales-tax on the total turnover without exempting the value of the sales effected outside the State. The appellant was permitted to pay sales tax under rule 12 of the Madras General Sales Tax (Turnover and Assessment) Rules. The appellant submitted monthly returns and paid sales tax without claiming any such exemption till the end of January, 1950. But in the returns for the months of February and March, 1950 the appellant claimed exemption on sales effected outside the State. The appellant submitted a consolidated return Exhibit A-18 to the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer on 30th March 1950 claiming exemption in respect of a sum of Rs. 10,37,334-7-9 being the value of the sales effected outside the State for the period commencing from 1st April, 1949 and ending 31st January, 1950. The Deputy Commercial Tax Officer fixed the taxable turnover of the appellant at Rs. 17,05,144-2-2 and issued a notice Exhibit A-23, dated 24th October, 1950 to show cause why the appellant should not be assessed accordingly. The appellant was thereafter held liable to pay tax amounting to Rs. 26,642-14-0 on a net turnover of Rs. 17,05,144-2-2. The appellant preferred an appeal to the Commercial Tax Officer and a revision petition to the Board of Revenue, Madras but was unsuccessful. The appellant, therefore brought a suit for the recovery of Rs. 21,270-13-0 being the amount of tax illegally collected from him together with interest, contending that the sales effected outside the State could not be taxed under Article 286 (1) (a) of the Constitution of India. The State of Madras contested the suit on the ground that the sales were taxable as they fell within the purview of explanation 2 to section 2 (h) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1939 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). The Subordinate Judge held that for the period from 1st April, 1949 to 25th January 1950 the appellant was not entitled to impeach the assessment on the turnover relating to sales outside the State. As regards the period from 26th March, 1950 to 31st March 1950, the Subordinate Judge took the view that the part of the turnover relating to outside sales was not liable to sales-tax but as there was a single order of assessment for the entire period the entire assessment was illegal. Against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge both the appellant and the respondent filed appeals A.S. No. 93 of 1957 and A.S. No. 169 of 1957 to the High Court of Andhra Pradesh. By its order dated 18th April, 1960 in Appeal No. 169 of 1957 the High Court called for a finding from the trial Court as to whether the appellant was able to prove the facts entitling him to invoke the explanation to Article 286 (1) (a). By its order dated 21st July, 1962 the trial Court submitted a finding to the effect that in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in *India Copper Corporation Ltd. v. The State of Bihar*¹, the burden of proof was not on the appellant and that the finding will have to be given in its favour. But by its order dated 5th March, 1963 the High Court directed the Subordinate Judge to record a finding after considering the evidence adduced by the appellant as to whether the goods in question were delivered for consumption within the delivery States. In its order dated 22nd March, 1963, the trial Court, after considering the evidence given by the appellant's witnesses came to the conclusion that the deliveries were not made for by a common judgment dated 11th March, 1965 in A.S. Nos. 93 and 169 of 1957 held that the appellant could not claim the benefit under Article 286 (1) (a) of the Constitution in the absence of evidence as to how the wholesalers disposed of the goods after obtaining delivery and therefore the entire turnover for the year 1949-50 would be assessable to tax. In the result A.S. No. 169 of 1957 filed by the respondent was allowed and A.S. No. 93 of 1957 filed by the appellant was dismissed.

The Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1939 was enacted in exercise of the legislative authority conferred upon the Provincial Legislatures by Entry 48 of List II read with section 100 (3) of the Government of India Act, 1935. The explanation to section 2 (h) of this Act is as follows :

“Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Indian Sale of Goods Act 1930 the sale or purchase of any goods shall be deemed, for the purpose of this Act to have taken place in this Province, wherever the contract of sale or purchase might have been made.

(a) If the goods were actually in this Province at the time when the contract of sale or purchase in respect thereof was made or,

(b) in case the contract was for the sale or purchase of future goods by description, then, if the goods are actually produced in this Province at any time after the contract of sale or purchase in respect thereof was made.”

Under Entry 48 of List II of the Government of India Act, 1935 the Provincial Legislatures could tax sales by selecting some fact or circumstance which provided a territorial nexus with the taxing power of the State even if the property in the goods sold passed outside the Province or the delivery under the contract of sale took place outside the Province. Legislation taxing sales depending solely upon the existence of a nexus, such as production or manufacture of the goods, or presence of the goods in the Province at the date of the contract of sale, between the sale and the legislating Province could competently be enacted under the Government of India Act, 1935. [See *Tata Iron and Steel Co. Ltd. v. The State of Bihar*¹ and Poppatlal Shah v. The State of Madras]².

By Article 286 of the Constitution certain fetters were placed upon the legislative powers of the States as follows:

“(1) No law of a State shall impose, or authorise the imposition of, a tax on the sale or purchase of goods where such sale or purchase takes place—

(a) outside the State ; or

(b) in the course of the import of the goods, into, or export of the goods out of, the territory of India.

Explanation.—For the purposes of sub clause (a), a sale or purchase shall be deemed to have taken place in the State in which the goods have actually been delivered as a direct result of such sale or purchase for the purpose of consumption in that State, notwithstanding the fact that under the general law relating to sale of goods the property in the goods has by reason of such sale or purchase passed in another State.

(2) Except in so far as parliament may by law otherwise provide, no law of a State shall impose, or authorise the imposition of, a tax on the sale or purchase of any goods where such sale or purchase takes place in the course of inter State trade or commerce :

Provided that the President may by order direct that any tax on the sale or purchase of goods which was being lawfully levied by the Government of any State immediately before the commencement of this Constitution shall, notwithstanding that the imposition of such tax is contrary to the provisions of this clause, continue to be levied until the thirty first day of March, 1951.

(3) No law made by the Legislature of a State imposing, or authorising the imposition of, a tax on the sale or purchase of any such goods as have been declared by Parliament by law to be essential for the life of the community shall have effect unless it has been reserved for the consideration of the President and has received his assent.”

Therefore, by incorporating section 22 of the Madras Act read with Article 286, notwithstanding the amplitude of the power otherwise granted by the charging section not with the definition of ‘sale’, a cumulative fetter of triple dimension was imposed upon the taxing power of the State. The Legislature of the Madras State could not since 26th January, 1950, levy a tax on sale of goods taking place outside the State or in the course of import of the goods, into, or export of the goods out of, the territory of India, or on sale of any goods where such sale took place in the course of inter State trade or commerce. By the Explanation to Article 286 (1) (a) which is incorporated by section 22 of the Madras Act a sale is deemed to take place in the State in which the goods are actually delivered as a direct result of such sale for the purpose of consumption in that State even though under the law relating to sale of goods the property in the goods has by reason of such sale passed in another State. In the *State of Bombay and another v. The United Motors (India) Ltd.*³, it was held that since the enactment of Article 286 (1)(a) a sale described in the Explanation which may for convenience be called an “Explanation sale” is taxable by that State alone in which the goods sold are actually delivered as a direct result of sale for the purpose of consumption in that State.

With a view to impose restrictions on the taxing power of the States under the pre-Constitution statutes, amendments were made in those statutes by the Adaptation of Laws Order. As regards the Madras Act the President issued on 2nd July, 1952 the Fourth Amendment inserting a new section, section 22 in that Act. It runs as follows :

“Nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to impose or authorise the imposition of a tax on the sale or purchase of any goods where such sale or purchase takes place—

(a) (i) outside the State of Madras, or

(ii) in the course of import of the goods into the territory of India or of the export of the goods out of such territory, or

(b) except in so far as Parliament may by law otherwise provide, after the 31st March, 1951, in the course of inter-State trade or commerce, and the provisions of this Act shall be read and construed accordingly.

Explanation.—For the purposes of clause (a) (i) a sale or purchase shall be deemed to have taken place in the State in which the goods have actually been delivered as a direct result of such sale or purchase for the purpose of consumption in that State, notwithstanding the fact that under the general law relating to sale of goods the property in the goods has by reason of such sale or purchase passed in another State.”

By this amendment the same restrictions were engrafted on the pre-Constitution statute as were imposed by Article 286 of the Constitution upon post-Constitution statutes.

As regards the sales for the period from April, 1949 to 25th January, 1950, it was admitted before the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer that the goods were actually in the Madras State at the time the contract of sale was concluded. It was for this reason that the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer negatived the claim which the appellant made in respect of those sales. It appears that in the trial Court the appellant challenged the constitutional validity of explanation to section 2 (h) of the Act. But in view of the decision of this Court in the *Tata Iron & Steel Co's case*¹, and *Poppallal Shah's case*², counsel on behalf of the appellant did not seriously dispute the validity of the assessment in regard to sales from 1st April, 1949 to 25th January, 1950.

With regard to the period from 26th January, 1950 to 31st March, 1950 the contention of the appellant is that the High Court was in error in holding that the burden of proof was on the appellant to show that there was not only delivery of goods for consumption within the delivery States but there was actual consumption of the goods in those States. In our opinion the argument is well-founded and must be accepted as correct. In *India Copper Corporation's case*³, it was pointed out by this Court that if the goods were as a direct result of a sale delivered outside the State of Bihar for the purpose of consumption in the State of first delivery, the assessee would be entitled to the exemption from sales-tax by virtue of the Explanation to Article 286 (1) (a) of the Constitution and it would not be necessary for the assessee to prove further that the goods so delivered were actually consumed in the State of first destination.

In the present case the Subordinate Judge has, upon a consideration of the evidence adduced by the parties stated in his report dated 27th January, 1962 that the intention of the appellant was that the sale and delivery should be for the purpose of consumption in the delivery States. It is true that in his subsequent report dated 22nd March, 1963 the Subordinate Judge gave a different finding. But it is obvious that the subsequent report of the Subordinate Judge is vitiated because the principle laid down by this court in *India Copper Corporation's case*¹, has not been taken into account. Having regard to the evidence adduced by the appellant in this case we are satisfied that the part of the turnover which related to sales from 26th January, 1950 to 31st March, 1950 was not liable to sales-tax and the levy of sales-tax from appellant to this extent is illegal.

The next question arising in this appeal is whether the assessment order of the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer for the year 1949-50 is illegal in its entirety notwithstanding the fact that the State Government had a right to levy sales-tax on outside sales which were effected prior to 26th January, 1950. It was argued for the appellant that the assessment must be treated as one and indivisible and if a part of the assessment is illegal the entire assessment must be deemed to be infected and treated as invalid. In support of this argument reference was made to the decision of this Court in *Ram Narain Sons Ltd. v. Assistant Commissioner of Sales Tax*² in which this Court observed as follows :

"The necessity for doing so is, however, obviated by reason of the fact that the assessment is one composite whole relating to the pre-Constitution as well as the post-Constitution periods and is invalid in toto. There is authority for the proposition that when an assessment consists of a single undivided sum in respect of the totality of the property treated as assessable, the wrongful inclusion in it of certain items of property which by virtue of a provision of law were expressly exempted from taxation renders the assessment invalid in toto."

The Court cited with approval a passage from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Bennett & White (Calgary) Ltd. and Municipal District of Sugar City No. 5.³

"When an assessment is not for an entire sum, but for separate sums, dissected and earmarked each of them to a separate assessable item, a Court can sever the items, and cut out one or more along with the sum attributed to it, while affirming the residue. But where the assessment consists of a single undivided sum in respect of the totality of property treated as assessable, and when one component (not dismissible as 'de minimis') is on any view not assessable and wrongly included, it would seem clear that such a procedure is barred, and the assessment is bad wholly. That matter is covered by authority. In *Montreal Light, Heat & Power Consolidated v. City of Westmount*⁴ the Court (see especially per Anglin, C.J.) in these conditions held that an assessment which was bad in part was infected throughout, and treated it as invalid. Here their Lordships are of opinion, by parity of reasoning, that the assessment was invalid in toto."

Applying the principle to the special facts and circumstances of the case the Court set aside the orders of assessment and directed that the case should be remanded to the Assessment Officer for re-assessment of the appellants in accordance with law. The same principle was applied but with a different result in the later case the *State of Jammu and Kashmir v. Caltex (India) Ltd.*⁵ in which the question arose as regards the validity of an assessment of sales-tax of retail sales of motor spirit. The Petrol Taxation Officer assessed the respondent to pay sales-tax for the period January, 1955 to May, 1959 under section 3 of the Jammu & Kashmir Motor Spirit (Taxation of Sales) Act, 2005. The respondent applied under section 103 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir and a single Judge of the High Court held that the respondent was liable to pay sales-tax only in respect of the sales which took place during the period January to September, 1955 and issued a writ restraining the appellants from levying tax for the period October, 1955 to May, 1959. On appeal a Division Bench of the High Court quashed the assessment for the entire period. On appeal to this Court it was held that though there was one order of assessment for the period 1st January, 1955 to May 1959 the assessment could be split up and dissected and the items of sale could be separated and taxed for different periods. It was pointed out that the sales-tax was imposed in the ultimate analysis on receipts from individual sales or purchases of goods effected during the entire period, and, therefore, a writ of mandamus could be issued directing the appellant not to realise sales-tax with regard to transactions of sale during the period from 7th September, 1955 to May 1959.

A similar question arose for determination in an American case [*Frank Ratterman v. Western Union Telegraph Co.*¹]. The question in that case was "whether a single tax, assessed under the Revised Statutes of Ohio, section 2778 upon the receipts of a telegraph company which receipts were derived partly from interstate commerce and partly from commerce within the State but which were returned and assessed in gross and without separation or apportionment, is wholly invalid, or invalid only in the proportion and to the extent that the said receipts were derived from interstate commerce." It was held unanimously by the Supreme Court of the United States that the assessment was not wholly invalid but it was invalid only in proportion to the extent that such receipts were derived from interstate commerce. It was observed that where the subjects of taxation can be separated so that which arises from interstate commerce can be distinguished from that which arises from commerce wholly within the State, the Court will act upon this distinction, and will restrain the tax on interstate commerce, while permitting the State to collect that upon commerce wholly within its own territory. The principle of this case has been consistently followed in American cases : (see *Bowman v. Continental Company*²). This case has been cited with approval by this Court in *The State of Bombay v. The United Motors (India) Ltd.*³, wherein it was observed that the same principle should be applied in dealing with taxing statutes in this country also.

In the present case we are of opinion that though there is a single order of assessment for the period from 1st April, 1949 to 31st March, 1950 the assessment could be split up and dissected and the items of sale separated and taxed for different periods. It is quite easy in this case to ascertain the turnover of the appellant for the pre-Constitution and post-Constitution periods for these figures are furnished in the plaint by the appellant himself. It is open to the Court in these circumstances to sever the illegal part of the assessment and give a declaration with regard to that part alone instead of declaring the entire assessment void. For these reasons we hold that the appellant should be granted a declaration that the order of assessment made by the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer for the year 1949-50 is invalid to the extent that the levy of sales-tax is made on sales relating to goods which were delivered for the purpose of consumption outside the State for the period from 26th January, 1950 to 31st March, 1950. The result is that the appellant is entitled for refund of the amount illegally collected from him for the period from 26th January, 1950 to 31st March, 1950. The trial Court has already found that the appellant is entitled to claim exemption with regard to turnover for this period to the extent of Rs. 3,34,107-15-6 and the tax payable on this sum is Rs. 5,220-7-0. The appellant is therefore, entitled to a decree for the refund of Rs. 5,220-7-0. The appellant is also entitled to interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of suit till realisation of this amount.

For these reasons we allow this appeal and set aside the judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court dated 11th March, 1965 in A.S. Nos. 93 and 169 of 1957 and allow this appeal to the extent indicated above.

There will be no order with regard to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 41, rule 33—Scope—Pujari—Removal from the temple and its properties—Deity not a public trust—Court, if could frame a scheme for management of the temple and its properties.

The pujari has committed several acts of mismanagement and misappropriation of the temple and its properties. He has set up a personal title to the temple properties and has converted the properties to his own use. He is therefore not fit to remain in possession as pujari or as manager of the temple and therefore he is liable to be ejected from the temple and its properties.

The property of the temple was not property or a public trust of a religious or charitable nature. Yet, civil Court could in the exercise of the powers under Order 41, rule 33 of the Civil Procedure Code direct that the Court of first instance to frame a scheme of management of the temple collections and the income and disbursement of expenses, etc.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 22nd September, 1964 of the Allahabad High Court in First Appeal No. 39 of 1952.

J. P. Goyal and Sobhag Mal Jain, Advocates, for Appellants.

K. B. Mehta, Advocate, for Respondent No. 2.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, Acting C.J.—Suit No. 41 of 1947 was filed in the Court of the Civil Judge, Mathura by the deity Thakur Janki Balabhji Maharaj, acting through its manager—L. Tulsiram, authorised agent of the Bharatpur State, for a decree for possession of the temple of the deity at Brindaban in U.P. ; and of the temple properties and for an order calling upon the defendant, Ramchand, to account for the realisations of the estate of the deity.

The case of the plainriffs was that the Ruler of the State of Bharatpur built the temple at Brindaban and installed the idol of Thakur Janki Ballabhji Maharaj and dedicated the temple to the deity ; that the Shebait of the deity who was a paid employee of the State was appointed by the Ruler of the State of Bharatpur ; that one Chhotelal was appointed a priest to perform the worship in the temple under a written agreement dated 8th April, 1936 ; that after the death of Chhotelal on 13th May, 1912 Ramchand was appointed the priest of the temple on condition that he shall execute the usual agreement in favour of the State ; that Ramchand entered upon the duties as pujari but failed to execute the agreement, and in course of time raised various constructions of his own on the premises in dispute and converted them into private residential buildings, and illegally used the temple as a lodging house for pilgrims “ to the utter detriment, loss and desecration of the deity ” and thereby acquired “ illegal benefit to himself out of the temple properties ” ; and that Ramchand was not performing the seva puja of the deity.

The suit was resisted by Ramchand. He denied that the temple was built at the expense of the Ruler of the State of Bharatpur or that he—Ramchand—was appointed to be a priest of the temple by the Ruler of Bharatpur. He contended that one Ram Narain Kedar Nath had taken a piece of land at Brindaban on rent from the temple of Govindji and after constructing a temple thereon and installing the Thakurji had given it as an offering to Sitaram, ancestor of Ramchand, and had appointed Sitaram as the Manager of the temple ; that the temple had since then remained in the management of the descendants of Sitaram, and that he (Ramchand) was in possession of the temple and its properties as "Manager and proprietor."

The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the Ruler of Bharatpur was never the owner of the temple or of the articles mentioned in Schedules A and B of the plaint, that the Ruler was also not the founder of the temple nor its shebait; and that the Ruler had never appointed any pujari of this temple and was not authorised to appoint or dismiss such a pujari.

In appeal against the decree passed by the Court of First instance it was urged before the High Court of Allahabad that the trial Court erred in dismissing the suit merely on the finding that the Ruler of the State of Bharatpur "had no concern with the construction of the temple or with the installation of the idol in the temple", and that in the suit filed by the deity, having regard to the acts of mismanagement and misappropriation committed by the defendant Ramchand, a decree should have been made in favour of the deity. Counsel for Ramchand contended that the suit being of the nature of a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure could not be instituted without obtaining the sanction in writing of the Advocate-General and that in any event the second plaintiff, the State of Bharatpur, could not file the suit, since it was not a shebait or the settlor of the temple.

It was common ground before the High Court that the property of the temple was not property of a public trust of a religious or charitable nature. From the averments, made in the plaint it is clear that the suit was filed by the deity against the person in management and it was not a suit filed by the relators. Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure had no application to the suit and the sanction of the Advocate-General was not a condition of the initiation of the suit. The High Court therefore rightly rejected the contention that the suit was not maintainable without the sanction of the Advocate-General.

The High Court held that it was open, even to a worshipper, if he possesses sufficient qualifying interest, to start a suit to protect the property of the deity. Observing that the defendant Ramchand had raised residential buildings of his own in the temple premises and that he was lodging pilgrims in a part of those buildings and was asserting a proprietary title to them and was on that account guilty of conduct detrimental to the interest of the deity and had rendered himself liable to be ejected from the temple and its properties, and that he was unfit to act as pujari, the High Court reversed the decree passed by the trial Court and decreed the plaintiffs' suit for possession of the temple and its properties and restrained the defendant Ramchand by an injunction from interfering with the management of the temple and performance of worship of the deity. With Special Leave Ramchand has appealed to this Court.

Ramchand has committed several acts of mismanagement and misappropriation of the temple and its properties. He has set up a personal title to the temple properties and has converted the properties to his own use. Ramchand is therefore not fit to remain in possession as pujari or as manager of the temple. The suit is filed by the deity acting through the Manager. Granting that it is not proved that the Ruler of Bharatpur established the temple and installed the deity, there is abundant evidence that the State of Bharatpur had made from time to time large donations for the maintenance of the temple. The Ruler of Bharatpur had therefore clearly a substantial interest to maintain the suit on behalf of the deity to protect the property. There is no merit in the appeal and therefore it must fail.

It is, however, necessary to make an effective decree in this appeal. It may be noticed that even though the suit has been filed and prosecuted on behalf of the State of Bharatpur and later by the State of Rajasthan through its District Magistrate, the temple is situate within the State of Uttar Pradesh and it would be difficult for the District Magistrate or any other authority acting on behalf of the State of Rajasthan to look after the administration of the temple and to protect its properties from misappropriation. This is undoubtedly a private trust but the civil Courts have jurisdiction to frame a scheme for the management of the temple which is not a public trust. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in *Pramatha Nath, Mullick v. Pradyumna Kumar Mullick*¹, directed that a scheme be framed for the regulation of the worship of the idol even though there was no public trust. In *Asha Bibi and others v. Nabissa Sahib and others*² the Madras High Court held that a suit for removing the trustees of a private trust and for framing a scheme was maintainable. A similar view was also taken by the Calcutta High Court in *Shri Mahadeo Jew and another v. Balkrishna Vyas & another*³.

The civil Court has therefore jurisdiction to frame a scheme for management of the temple and its properties. The present is, in our judgment a case in which in exercise of the powers under Order 41, rule 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure we should direct that the Court of first instance to frame a scheme of management of the temple collections and the income and disbursement of expenses, application of the surplus if any and for that purpose to appoint a manager of the property of the deity and its properties, with authority to take possession of the temple and the properties from the defendant Ramchand and to administer the property and its income under the directions of the Court. We direct accordingly. The Court will also take an account of his dealings with the property of the deity from Ramchand and determine his liability and recover the amount found due from him on taking accounts. The Court will pass appropriate orders with regard to the constructions made by Ramchand and will prevent the property being used for the private benefit of Ramchand or any other person. The scheme to be framed will be consistent with the law relating to private religious endowments, if any, in force in the State of Uttar Pradesh.

Subject to this modification, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act (LXXVIII of 1956), section 4 and Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), section 488—Scope—section 4 (b) of the Maintenance Act, if repeals section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), section 488—"Child"—Meaning of—A major child "unable to maintain itself", if comes within the purview of the section.

There is no inconsistency between the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 and section 488, Criminal Procedure code. Both can stand together. The maintenance Act is an act to amend and codify the law relating to adoptions and maintenance among Hindus. The law was substantially similar before and nobody ever suggested that Hindu Law, as in force immediately before the commencement of this Act, in so far as it dealt with the maintenance of children, was in any way inconsistent with section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. The scope of the two laws is different. Section 488 provides a summary remedy and is applicable to all persons belonging to all religions and has no relationship with the personal law of the parties. Therefore, it has to be held that section 4 (b) of the Maintenance Act does not repeal or affect in any manner the provisions contained in section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

Held also that, If the concept of majority is imported into section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, a major child who is an imbecile or otherwise handicapped will fall outside the purview of this section. If this concept is not imported, no harm is done for the section itself provides a limitation by saying that the child must be unable to maintain itself. The older a person becomes the more difficult it would be to prove that he is unable to maintain himself. It is true that a son aged 77 may claim maintenance under the section from a father who is 97. It is very unlikely to happen but if it does happen and the father is able to maintain while the son is unable to maintain himself no harm would be done by passing an appropriate order under section 488. Therefore, the word "child" in section 488 does not mean a minor son or daughter and the real limitation is contained in the expression "unable to maintain itself."

Appeal from the Judgment and Order dated the 2nd May, 1968 of the Delhi High Court in Criminal Revision Nos. 339-D of 1965 and 185-D of 1968.

Sardar Bahadur Saharya, and Yougindra Khushalani, Advocates, for Appellant.

S. C. Mazumdar and Yogeshwar Dayal, Advocates, for Respondents.

Sikri, J.—This appeal by certificate of fitness granted by the High Court of Delhi arises out of an application under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, filed on 4th September, 1963, in the Court of Magistrate, 1st Class, Delhi, by four children of the respondent, Nanak Chand. The first applicant, Chandra Kishore, was born on 23rd January, 1942, the second, Ravindra Kishore, was born on 23rd September, 1943, the third Shashi Prabha, was born on 23rd February, 1947, and the fourth, Rakesh Kumar, was born on 21st September, 1948. The first two applicants were thus majors at the time of the application, the third though a minor at the time of the application was a major on the date of the order passed by the Magistrate, i.e., on 26th March, 1965. The learned Magistrate allowed the application and ordered the respondent, Nanak Chand, to pay Rs. 35 Per mensem to Chandra Kishore for four months only, Rs. 35 Per mensem to Ravindra Kishore for 3 years only in case he continued his medicine studies, Rs. 45 Per mensem to Shashi Prabha as her maintenance allowance and education expenses and Rs. 45 Per mensem to Rakesh Kumar as his maintenance allowance and education expenses, from 26th March, 1965.

Both the applicants and the respondent, Nanak Chand, filed revisions against the order of the Magistrate, to the Additional Sessions Judge, who dismissed the revision petition filed by the respondent, Nanak Chand, and accepted the revision petition of the applicants. The Additional Sessions Judge submitted the case to the High Court with the recommendation to enhance the maintenance allowance of the applicants in terms of the proposals made by him. The Additional Sessions Judge observed that the maintenance under section 488 did not include the costs of college education, and therefore he did not propose to allow Chandra Kishore and Ravindra Kishore the expenses of their College education. But taking into consideration the income of the respondent and the status of the family, the Additional Sessions Judge proposed to allow Chandra Kishore and Ravindra Kishore Rs. 100 Per mensem each as maintenance allowance until they finished their courses of M. com. and M. B. B. S. respectively. He further proposed to allow to Rakesh Kumar and Shashi Prabha each a monthly maintenance allowance of Rs. 50 until Shashi Prabha was able to earn or was married, whichever was earlier, and until Rakesh Kumar was able to maintain himself.

The High Court accepted the reference made by the learned Additional Sessions Judge and dismissed the criminal revision filed by the respondent. The High Court granted the certificate under Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution because there is conflict of opinion on the question of the interpretation to be given to the word child in section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

The learned Counsel for Nanak Chand has raised three points before us : first, that section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, stands impliedly repealed by section 4 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 (LXXXVIII of 1956) hereinafter referred to as the Maintenance Act—insofar as it is applicable, to Hindus; secondly, that the word child in section 488 means a minor ; and thirdly, that the maintenance fixed for Chandra Kishore and Ravindra Kishore was based on wrong principles and was excessive inasmuch as expenses for education have been taken into consideration.

Section 4 of the Maintenance Act reads :

“ 4. Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act,—

(b) Any other law in force immediately before the commencement of this Act shall cease to apply to Hindus in so far as it is inconsistent with any of the provision contained in this Act.”

The learned Counsel says that section 488 Criminal Procedure Code, in so far as it provides for the grant of maintenance to a Hindu, is inconsistent with Chapter III of the Maintenance Act, and in particular, section 20, which provides for maintenance to children. We are unable to see any inconsistency between the Maintenance Act and section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. Both can stand together. The Maintenance Act is an act to amend and codify the law relating to adoptions and maintenance among Hindus. The law was substantially similar before and no body ever suggested that Hindu Law, as in force immediately before the commencement of this Act, in so far as it dealt with the maintenance of children, was in any way inconsistent with section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. The scope of the two laws is different. Section 488 provides a summary remedy and is applicable to all persons belonging to all religions and has no relationship with the personal law of the parties. Recently the question came before the Allahabad High Court in *Ram Singh v. State*¹, before the Calcutta High Court in *Mahabir Agarwalla v. Gita Roy*², and before Patna High Court in *Nalini Ranjan v. Kiran Rani*³. The three High Courts have, in our view, correctly come to the conclusion that section 4 (b) of the Maintenance Act does not repeal or affect in any manner the provisions contained in section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

On the second point there is sharp conflict of opinion amongst the High Courts and indeed amongst the Judges of the same High Court. In view of this sharp conflict of opinion we must examine the terms of section 488 ourselves. Section 488 (1) reads as follows :

“ 488. (1) If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-Divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class may, upon proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child, at such monthly rate, not exceeding five hundred rupees in the whole, as such Magistrate thinks fit, and to pay the same to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs.”

We may also set out sub-section (8) of section 488, because some Courts have placed reliance on it :

“ 488 (8). Proceedings under this section may be taken against any person in any district where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife, or, as the case may be, the mother of the illegitimate child.”

The word ‘ Child ’ is not defined in the Code itself. This word has different meanings in different contexts. When it is used in correlation with father or parents, according to Shorter Oxford Dictionary it means :

“ As correlative to parent, I. The offspring, male or female, of human parents.”

Beaumont, C. J., in *Shaikh Ahmed Shaikh Mahomed v. Ra Fatma*⁴, observed :

“ The word ‘ child according to its use in the English language has different meanings, according to the context. If used without reference to parentage. it is generally synonymous with the word ‘ infant ’ and means a person who has not attained attained the age of majority... Where the word 'child' is used with reference to parentage, it means a descendant of the first degree, a son or a daughter and has no reference to age. In certain contexts it may include descendants of more remote degree, and be equivalent to 'issue.' But, at any rate, where the word 'child' is used in conjunction with parentage, it is not concerned with age. No one would suggest that a gift 'to all my children' or 'to all the children of A' should be confined to minor children. In section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the word is used with reference to the father. There is no qualification of age; the only qualification is that the child must be unable to maintain itself. In my opinion, there is no justification for saying that this section is confined to children who are under the age of majority."

We agree with these observations and it seems to us that there is no reason to depart from the dictionary meaning of the word.

As observed by Subba Rao, J., as he then was, speaking for the Court in *Jagir Kaur v. Jaswant Singh*¹, "Chapter XXXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure providing for maintenance of wives and children intends to serve a social purpose." If the concept of majority is imported into the section a major child who is an imbecile or otherwise handicapped will fall outside the purview of this section. If this concept is not imported, no harm is done for the section itself provides a limitation by saying that the child must be unable to maintain itself. The older a person becomes the more difficult it would be to prove that he is unable to maintain himself. It is true that a son aged 77 may claim maintenance under the section from a father who is 97. It is very unlikely to happen but if it does happen and the father is able to maintain while the son is unable to maintain himself no harm would be done by passing an appropriate order under section 488. We cannot view with equanimity the lot of helpless children who though major are unable to support themselves because of their imbecility or deformity or other handicaps. and it is not as if such cases have not arisen. As long ago as 1873, Pearson, J., in *the matter of the Petition of W.B. Todd*², had to deal with a major son who was deaf and dumb, and he had no hesitation in granting an order of maintenance. The same conclusion was arrived at by Chevis, J., in 1910 in *Bhagat Singh v. Emperor*³, and he allowed maintenance to a young man of about 20 who was very lame having a deformed foot. We have seen no case in which a man of 77 has claimed maintenance and we think, with respect that unnecessary emphasis has been laid on the fact that it might be possible for a man of 77 to claim maintenance.

It is not necessary to review all the case law. The latest judgment which was brought to our notice is that of the Madras High Court in *Anirthammal v. Marimuthu*⁴ in which Natesan, J., has written a very elaborate judgment. He has referred to all the Indian cases and a number of English cases and statutory provisions both in England and in India. We are unable to derive any assistance from the statutory provisions referred to by him or from the English Law on the point. He relied on the use of the word "itself" in section 488 as showing that what was meant was a minor child. We are unable to attach so much significance to this word. It may well be that it is simpler or more correct to use the word "itself" rather than use the words "himself or herself."

We may mention that Das Gupta, J., in *Smt. Purnashi Devi v. Nagendra Nath*⁵ and Mudholkar, J., in *State v. Ishwar Lal*⁶, came to the same conclusion as we have done.

In view of the reasons given above we must hold that the word "child" in section 488 does not mean a minor son or daughter and the real limitation is contained in the expression "unable to maintain itself."

Coming to the third point raised by the learned Counsel we are of the view that the learned Additional Sessions Judge and the High Court were right in taking into consideration the existing situation, the situation being that at the time the order was passed Chandra Kishore was a student of M. COM. and Ravindra Kishore was a student of M. B. B. S. course. We need not decide in this case whether expenses for education can be given under section 488 because no such expenses have been taken into consideration in fixing the maintenance in this case. It has not been shown to us that the amount fixed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge and confirmed by the High Court is in any way excessive or exorbitant.

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed.

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), sections 314 and 109—Charge of abetting R. To cause miscarriage of the deceased (women) accused convicted for abetting the deceased to cause miscarriage—Charge of abetment, if fails because the substantive offence is not established against the accused.

The appellant was charged and tried for the offence of abetting Mst. Radha to cause abortion of the child in the womb of the deceased but curiously enough he was convicted for abetting the deceased to cause miscarriage. Abetment as defined in section 107 of the Indian Penal Code can be by instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid. If the abetment was that of Mst. Radha, it could have been only by instigation of conspiracy but if it was an abetment of the deceased, it could either be by instigation or by conspiracy or by intentional aid. Throughout the trial the accused was asked to defend himself against the charge on which he was tried. At no stage he was notified that he would be tried for the offence of having abetted the deceased to cause miscarriage. It is now well settled that the absence of charge or an error or omission in it is not fatal to trial unless prejudice is caused. Therefore the essential question is whether there is any reasonable likelihood of the accused having been prejudiced in view of the charge framed against him. From the facts and circumstances of the case, one can reasonably come to the conclusion that the accused was likely to have been prejudiced by the charge on the basis of which he was tried. From the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, it is seen that the principal attempt made on behalf of the appellant was to show that he had nothing to do with the co-accused, Mst. Radha. He could not have been aware of the fact that he would be required to show that he did not in any manner abet the deceased to cause miscarriage. The charge of abetment fails when the substantive offence is not established against the principal but there may be exceptions.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 15th March, 1967 of the Rajasthan High Court in Criminal Appeal No. 219 of 1965.

K. B. Mehta, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hegde, J.—The appellant's conviction by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Jodhpur under section 314 read with section 109, Indian Penal Code, having been affirmed by the High Court of Rajasthan, he appeals to this Court after obtaining Special Leave. The charge on the basis of which he was tried was that some days prior to 1st May, 1963, he abetted and Mst. Radha at Jodhpur to cause the miscarriage of one Miss Atoshi Dass alias Amola who as a result of administration of tablets and introduction of "laminaria dento" by the said Mst. Radha, died on 1st May, 1963. The case for the prosecution is that in about the years 1962-63, the appellant was the President of Oramotthan Pratishthan at Jalore. Miss Atoshi Dass was a teacher working in Indra Bal Mandir, Tikhi, an institution under the management of appellant. She was young and unmarried. Illicit relationship developed between the aforementioned Atoshi Dass and the appellant as a result of which Miss Atoshi Dass became pregnant. With a view to cause abortion of the child in her womb, the appellant took Miss Dass to Jodhpur and there attempted to cause the miscarriage mentioned above through one Mst. Radha. The attempt was not successful. The insertion of "laminaria dento" in the private parts of Miss Dass caused septicaemia as a result of which she died in the hospital on 1st May, 1963.

The appellant's case is that he had no illicit relation with Miss Atoshi Dass nor did he abet the alleged abortion. He denies that Miss Atoshi Dass died as a result of any attempt at abortion.

As seen earlier the appellant was charged and tried for the offence of abetting Mst. Radha to cause the miscarriage in question but he was ultimately convicted of the offence of abetting Miss Dass in the commission of the said offence.

It may be stated at this stage that one Mst. Radha was tried along with the appellant in the trial Court but she was acquitted on the ground that there was no evidence to show that she had anything to do with the abortion complained of.

Despite the contentions of the appellant to the contrary, we think there is satisfactory evidence to show that the death of Miss Dass was due to septicaemia resulting from the introduction of "laminaria dento" into her private parts. On this point we have the unimpeachable evidence of Dr. A. J. Abraham, P. W. 4.

There is also satisfactory evidence to show that the appellant was in terms of illicit intimacy with Miss Dass. It is true that the principal witness on this point is Miss Chhayadass, P. W. 6, the sister of the deceased a witness who has given false evidence in several respects. But as regards the illicit relationship between the appellant and Miss Atoshi Dass, her evidence receives material corroboration, from the evidence of P. W. 7 M. B. Sen and P. W. 5, Misri Lal. Further it also accords with the probabilities of the case. It is not necessary to go into that question at length as we have come to the conclusion that the appellant is entitled to an acquittal for the reasons to be stated presently.

While we are of opinion that there was illicit intimacy between the appellant and the deceased we are unable to accept the assertion of Miss Chhayadass that the appellant was her only paramour. Exhibit-D-3, conclusively proves that the deceased had illicit relationship with one Sood at Delhi. In the committal Court Miss Chhayadass admitted that the address on Exh. D-3 is in the handwriting of the deceased. In that Court she was positive about it; but in the trial Court she went back on that admission. In many other respects also she had deviated from the evidence given by her in the committal Court. Hence we are unable to accept her statement in the trial Court that the address found on Exhibit D-3, an inland letter is not in the handwriting of the deceased. Exhibit D-3, appears to be a self-addressed letter sent by the deceased to one Sood. The fact that the deceased had more than one paramour is not a material circumstance though it may indicate that the appellant could not have had any compelling motive to abet the abortion complained of. The fact that the appellant was in terms of illicit intimacy with the deceased, an unmarried girl and that later became pregnant through him is without more, not sufficient to connect the appellant with the crime.

From the evidence of Misrilal and Sengupta, it is clear that the appellant and the deceased had gone together to Jodhpur on 24th April, 1963. But from the evidence of Sengupta, it is also clear that the deceased had some work to attend to at Jodhpur. It is also clear from the evidence of Miss Chhayadass that the deceased and the appellant were going together to Jodhpur and other places off and on. It may be noted that while returning from Jodhpur to his native place, the appellant left the deceased with Mr. and Mrs. Sengupta. Hence the circumstance that the appellant and the deceased went together to Jodhpur on 24th April, 1963, cannot be held to be an incriminating circumstance.

This leaves us with the evidence relating to the actual abetment. On this aspect of the case the only evidence brought to our notice is the evidence of Miss Chhayadass and the latter Exhibit P-4. Miss Chhayadass deposed in the trial Court that when the pregnancy of the deceased became noticeable, the appellant told the deceased in the presence of that witness that he would get the child aborted through Mst. Radha. As mentioned earlier Miss Chhayadass is a highly unreliable witness. She had admitted in the committal Court that she had been tutored by the police to give evidence. In fact she pointed out a police officer who was in the Court as the person who had tutored her. In the trial Court she denied that fact. There is no gainsaying the fact that she was completely under the thumb of the police. She deviated from most of the important admissions made by her during her cross-examination in the committal Court. Coming to the question of the abetment referred to earlier, this is what she stated during her cross-examination in the committing Court :

“ My sister did not tell Madan Raj about her illness (arising from her pregnancy) in my presence. On being enquired by me about my sister at Jalore I was informed that my sister had gone to Mst. Radha Nayan in the hospital for treatment. No talks about it were held before me prior to my talk at Jalore (talks between, Madanraj and my sister about treatment).”

According to the admissions made by her in the committal Court she came to know for the first time about her sister's intention to cause miscarriage only after her death. No reliance can be placed on the evidence of such a witness.

Now coming to Exhibit P-4, this is a letter said to have been written by the deceased sometime before her death intending to send the same to the appellant which in fact was not sent. It was found in her personal belongings after her death. There was some controversy before the Courts below whether the same is admissible under section 32 (1) of the Evidence Act and whether it could be brought within the rule laid down by the Judicial Committee in *Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor*¹. We have not thought it necessary to go into that question as in our opinion the contents of the said letter do not in any manner support the prosecution case that the appellant instigated the deceased to cause miscarriage. The letter in question reads thus ;

“ Santi Bhawan 28-4-63.

I went with your letter to the father. Since I could not get money from him, I dropped you a letter. I went to Mst. Radha and asked her to give me medicine. further said that the money would be received. She gave me a tablet and told me that injection would be given on receipt of full payment. This tablet is causing unbearable pain and bleeding but the main trouble will not be removed without the injection. How can I explain but the pain is intolerable. I have left Sen's residence. He and particularly neighbouring doctor would have come to know every thing by my condition, which is too serious. (Meri is halat se unaki vishesker pas me Daktarji to sub kuch pata chal jati powon tak ulati ho jai). Firstly I intended to proceed to Jalore but on reaching the Station I could not dare to proceed. I feel that you are experiencing uneasiness and trouble for me. I am causing monetary as well as mental worries to you. I have been feeling this for a considerable longer period. Please do not be annoyed.

It has become very difficult for me to stay alone for the last several days.

Had you accepted me as your better half you would have not left me alone in my such serious condition. You cannot know what sort of trouble I am experiencing. Had you been with me I would not have felt it so much. Please do not be annoyed. Perhaps no one has given you so much trouble.

I will write all these facts to my mother. I will also write about our marriage. Today is Sunday. I cannot book a trunk call to you in the Court. Today I tried on the phone number of Hazarimal but it was engaged, and later on it was cancelled. My Pranam.

Yours Ritu.

Today I have taken injection and have come from Shanti Bhawan."

No portion of that letter indicates that the appellant was in any manner responsible for the steps taken by the deceased for causing miscarriage. No other evidence has been relied upon either by the trial Court or by the High Court in support of the finding that the appellant was guilty of the offence of abetting the deceased to cause miscarriage.

For the reasons mentioned above we are of the opinion that there is no legal basis for the conviction of the appellant.

The learned Counsel for the appellant challenged the conviction of the appellant on yet another ground. As mentioned earlier he was charged and tried for the offence of abetting Mst. Radha to cause abortion of the child in the womb of the deceased but curiously enough he was convicted for abetting the deceased to cause miscarriage. Abetment as defined in section 107 of the Indian Penal Code, can be by instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid. If the abetment was that of Mst. Radha, it could have been only by instigation or conspiracy but if it was an abetment of the deceased, it could either be by instigation or by conspiracy or by intentional aid. Throughout the trial the accused was asked to defend himself against the charge on which he was tried. At no stage he was notified that he would be tried for the offence of having abetted the deceased to cause miscarriage. It is now well settled that the absence of charge or an error or omission in it is not fatal to a trial unless prejudice is caused—See *Willie (William) Slaney v. The State of Madhya Pradesh*¹. Therefore the essential question is whether there is any reasonable likelihood of the accused having been prejudiced in view of the charge framed against him. From what has been stated above one can reasonably come to the conclusion that the accused was likely to have been prejudiced by the charge on the basis of which he was tried. From the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, it is seen that the principal attempt made on behalf of the appellant was to show that he had nothing to do with the co-accused, Mst. Radha. He could not have been aware of the fact that he would be required to show that he did not in any manner abet the deceased to cause miscarriage. The facts of this case come within the rule laid down by this Court in *Faguna Kant Nath v. The State of Assam*². The case of *Gallu Sah v. The state of Bihar*³ relied by the High Court is distinguishable. Therein Gallu Sah was a member of an unlawful assembly. He was said to have abetted Budi to set fire to a house. One of the members of the unlawful assembly had set fire to the house in question though it was not proved that Budi had set fire to the house. Under those circumstances this Court held that the offence with which Gallu Sah was charged was made out. As observed by Calcutta High Court in *Umadasi Dasi v. Emperor*⁴ that as a general rule, a charge of abetment fails when the substantive offence is not established against the principal but there may be exceptions. *Gallu's case*³ was one such exception.

For the reasons mentioned above we allow the appeal and acquit the appellant. He is on bail. His bail bonds stand cancelled.

... Respondent.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 35—Scope—Hath chitha—No proof as to who made the entry or whether it was made in the discharge of any official duty—Hath chitha, if admissible in evidence.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge had rejected the version of the prosecution regarding the shooting of Kaleshwar Yadav mainly on the basis of entries in an attested copy of the chaukidar's hath chitha according to which the death of Kaleshwar took place in Gopalpur mauza on 12th August, 1960, that is, three days prior to the occurrence.

Is the hath chitha admissible in evidence ?

Held that: The reason why an entry made by a public servant in a public or other official book, register, or record stating a fact in issue or a relevant fact has been made relevant is that when a public servant makes it himself in discharge of his official duty, the probability of its being truly and correctly recorded is high. No proof has been led in this case as to who made the entry and whether the entry was made in the discharge of any official duty. As the High Court rightly pointed out, the Additional Sessions Judge should have dealt with the question of the admissibility of the document. Therefore, the document was inadmissible in evidence.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 22nd February, 1966, of the Patna High Court in Criminal Appeal No. 530 of 1962 and Government Appeal No. 44 of 1962.

A. S. R. Chari and M. K. Ramamurthi, Senior Advocates (G. Ramamurthy and Vineet Kumar, Advocates with them, for Appellant.

B. P. Jha, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sikri, J.—Fourteen persons were tried by the learned Second Additional Sessions Judge, Bhagalpur, on various charges. Out of these 14 persons Sheo Prasad Sharma and Ram Prasad Sharma were charged under section 302, Indian Penal Code. Sheo Prasad Sharma was charged under section 302 for having intentionally caused the death of Qudrat Mian by shooting him down with his gun whereas Ram Prasad Sharma was charged under this section for having shot down with his gun Kaleshwar Yadav and thus having caused the murder of this person.

The Second Additional Sessions Judge, Bhagalpur convicted Sheo Prasad Sharma under sections 304, 324/34, 201, and 148 and sentenced him to seven years rigorous imprisonment. The appellant, Ram Prasad Sharma was convicted under sections 326/149, 324/34 201 and 148, Indian Penal Code and sentenced to four years rigorous imprisonment. Seven other accused were also convicted but it is not necessary to mention the sections under which they were convicted. Five of the accused persons, were acquitted by the learned Second Additional Sessions Judge.

Two appeals were filed before the High Court, one by the State and the other by the nine convicted persons, including Ram Prasad Sharma. Both the appeals were heard together. The High Court accepted the appeal of the State as far as Ram Prasad Sharma was concerned and convicted him under section 304 Indian Penal Code, in connection with the shooting and causing the death of Kaleshwar and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for seven years. The convictions of seven others were altered from under sections 326/149 to one under sections 304/149 but the sentence of four years rigorous imprisonment was maintained. In other respects the convictions were maintained. The High Court, however, quashed the convictions under section 201, Indian Penal Code.

The nine convicted persons filed petition for special leave to appeal. This Court by its order dated 4th October 1966 rejected the petition except as regard Ram Prasad Sharma and his appeal is now before us.

The prosecution case as accepted by the High Court was, in brief, as follows. On 15th August, 1960, at about 1.30 or 2 p. m. by the side of a Danr (water channel) known as Chaksafia Danr at village Bindi about five miles away from police station, Banki, a serious occurrence took place. The Chaksafia Danr runs between village Bindi which is to its east and Banki which is to its west and then goes further north to village Bhadrar and other villages. Lands of several villages, namely, Bhadrar, Nayadih, Uprama, Basurara, Jitnagar, Majhiara, Banki, etc., are irrigated from the water of this Danr and there are detailed entries regarding the respective rights of the different villages in the Ford Abpashi which was prepared at the time of the last survey. It appears that the villagers of different villages who enjoy the above rights go in a body every year during the rainy season for clearing this Danr in order that there may not be any obstruction in the flow of water therein. On the date of occurrence, i.e., 15th August, 1960, a number of persons of villages Bhadrar, Nayadih, Uprama, Basura, Jitnagar and Bhatkunki went along with spades to clear this Danr in the usual course and some of them had lathis also with them. The total number of persons were estimated to vary from about 150 to about 400. When they reached the brick kiln, which exists in Malmala Tikar they were confronted by a mob of 40 to 50 persons including all the convicted persons. Sheo-Prasad Sharma and Ram Prasad Sharma were armed with guns and Patal Thakur was armed with a pharsa and the remaining accused except Dhanushari Mehta were armed with bhalas.

It may be mentioned that in the First Information Report Dhanusdhari Mehta was alleged to have been armed with a pistol but this allegation was subsequently given up. Dhanusdhari Mehta was a retired Inspector of Police; his son Ram Prasad Sharma was practising lawyer at Bhagalpur at the time of the occurrence in question.

On seeing this crowd of villagers, Sheo Prasad Sharma directed them to return and threatened to shoot them if they failed to do so. There was some exchange of hot words and brick-bats were thrown by both sides. Sheo Prasad Sharma thereafter fired one shot towards the sky but the villagers did not disperse. Then Dhanusdhari ordered his two sons Ram Prasad Sharma and Sheo Prasad Sharma to open fire on the villagers. On this both Ram Prasad Sharma and Sheo Prasad Sharma opened fire with their guns on the villagers. One shot fired by Sheo Prasad Sharma hit one Qudrat Mian and he fell down and died on the spot. One other villager was alleged to have been shot by Ram Prasad Sharma and he died on the spot. A number of villagers sustained gun shot injuries and as a result of the firing by Sheo Prasad Sharma and Ram Prasad Sharma, who are estimated to have fired about 12 rounds, the villagers dispersed. Sobhan Mandal, one of the injured person went to the police station with three other injured persons, namely, Chotan Rai, P. W. 5, Jagdeo Choudhary, P. W. 8 and Kishori Prasad Singh, P.W. 12, who had also sustained gun-shot injuries.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge had rejected the prosecution story that Kaleshwar Yadav was shot and killed during the occurrence. He had come to the conclusion that Kaleshwar Yadav had died prior to the date of occurrence. The High Court has accepted the prosecution version and it is this finding which is being seriously challenged by the learned Counsel for Ram Prasad Sharma, appellant.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge had rejected the version of the prosecution regarding the shooting down of Kaleshwar Yadav mainly on the basis of entries, in an attested copy of the Chaukidar's hath chitha (Exhibited D.) according to which the death of Kaleshwar took place in Gopalpur mauza on 12th August, 1960, that is, three days prior to the occurrence. The learned Additional Sessions Judge had also relied on the First Information Report in which the name of Kaleshwar Yadav does not find mention.

Two points arise before us, first, whether the hath chitha is admissible in evidence, and secondly, whether on the evidence on record it is otherwise proved that Kaleshwar Yadav was shot down by the appellant Ram Prasad Sharma.

According to the entries in this document, Exhibit D, Kaleshwar Yadav died on 12th August, 1960, in Gopalpur mauza and in the remarks column of this register he is described as "Bahanoi (brother-in-law) of Asarfi Yadav." We looked at the attested copy produced in Court and we were unable to ascertain the date on which the attested copy had been obtained by the defence. The only dates this document bears are the date of attestation (15th October, 1960), by the District Statistical Officer, the date 22nd September, 1960, next to the signature of one Shukdeo Chowdhary, and the date of admission by the Additional Sessions Judge (25th June, 1962). As rightly pointed out by the High Court the learned Sessions Judge took this copy on record in an extraordinary manner. The prosecution evidence closed on 21st June, 1962 and on 25th June, 1962, this attested copy was admitted in evidence without any proof. On the same day an order was passed calling for the original. On the very next day the Public Prosecutor filed a petition objecting to the admission of this document and alleged that the document was bogus. The hearing of the argument thereafter proceeded on 4th July, 1962. The Public Prosecutor again filed a petition that this document be not taken in evidence. The learned Additional Sessions Judge disposed of this petition with the following order :

"Let the petition be placed with the record. The original has once against been called for. The matter will be discussed in the judgment."

It is pointed out by the High Court that there is no further reference to the document in the order sheet. After the arguments concluded on 7th July, 1962, the case was adjourned for judgment. The judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge shows that the original was subsequently received by him with letter dated 10th July, 1962, and he observed that he was satisfied about its genuineness. The High Court rightly pointed out that the Additional Sessions Judge should have dealt with the question of the admissibility of the document. The High Court, following *Sanatan Senapati v. Emperor*¹, and *Brij Mohan Singh v. Priya Brat Narain Sinha*², held that the document was inadmissible in evidence.

We agree with the conclusion arrived at by the High Court. Section 35 of the Evidence Act provides :

"An entry in any public or other official book, register or record, stating a fact in issue or relevant fact, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, or by any other person in performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country in which such book, register or record is kept, is itself a relevant fact."

In this case it has not been proved that the entry in question was made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties. As observed by this Court in *Brij Mohan Singh v. Priya Brat Narain Sinha*².

"the reason why an entry made by a public servant in a public or other official book, register, or record stating a fact in issue or a relevant fact has been made relevant is that when a public servant makes it himself in the discharge of his official duty, the probability of its being truly and correctly recorded is high."

No proof has been led in this case as to who made the entry and whether the entry was made in the discharge of any official duty. In the result we must hold that Exhibit D, the hath chitha, was rightly held by the High Court to be inadmissible.

The High Court then dealt with the other evidence on the record and came to the conclusion that Kaleshwar was actually shot down by the appellant, Ram Prasad Sharma. The learned Counsel for the appellant has tried to assail these findings but he has not been able to show in what way the High Court has gone wrong in coming to the conclusion. The High Court states that ten witnesses have named Kaleshwar being the second person who was shot. Further, Kaleshwar's son and widow, P.Ws. 24 and 34, Chamak Lal Yadav and Karma Devi, deposed that on the day of occurrence Kaleshwar had left his house with a Kudal and had gone to Chaksafia Danr along with others. They further deposed that on the next day they learnt from Nandai Lal, Singh P. W. 17, that Kaleshwar had been killed. The High Court further accepted the explanation of P. W. 1, who had made the First Information Report that he had named Choltan as being the person shot and killed by Ram Prasad because he had heard a hul'a that Choltan had been murdered. It seems to us that the High Court came to a correct conclusion and was right in accepting the explanation of P. W. 1.

The learned counsel further contends that it was doubtful that 12 rounds would have been fired. He points out the number of injuries received by the villagers. But these injuries support the prosecution story. From the injuries on the various persons examined by Dwarka Nath Prasad, P. W. 41, apart from the persons who had died and whose bodies had been held to have been cremated by unidentified persons, it appears that 20 persons had received gun shot injuries. One of them had as many as 14 lacerated wounds and another had 10 lacerated wounds. Apart from that there is no reason to doubt the oral evidence given in this case that a number of rounds were fired.

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act (XX of 1946), sections 3 to 7, 9 and 10 and schedule.

Standing Orders of the Company, Standing Orders 2, 14 and 32.

The provisions of sections 3 to 7, 9 and 10 of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act (XX of 1946) read with the Schedule thereto abundantly show that once the Standing Orders are certified and come into operation become binding on the employer (a company) and on the employees presently employed as also those employed thereafter in the establishment. This view is also in consonance with the object of the Act to have uniform Standing Orders for matters mentioned in the Schedule to the Act, applicable to all the employees.

Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co., Ltd. v. Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co., Ltd., Employees Union, (1966) 2 S.C.J. 480 ; (1966) 2 S.C.R. 498, relied on.

12th August, 1969.

The prior award between the appellant and the respondents on the question of application of standing order 32, to the contrary, was based on a misconception and misreading of a decision which was explained and clarified in the decision aforementioned and relied on, and it was clearly in error. The instant reference and the award passed by the Labour Court were made in circumstances different from what prevailed on the previous occasion, a factor making it doubtful the application of a principle such as res judicata. The consequence of holding that the appellant is barred by principle analogous to res judicata would be two sets of conditions of service, a consequence incompatible with the object of the Act. The order for retirement on superannuation was proper.

It is a well-settled principle of industrial adjudication that even if the impugned order is worded in the language of a simple termination of service industrial tribunals can look into the facts and circumstances of the case to ascertain if it was a colourable exercise of the power vested in the management to terminate the services of an employee. Under the provisions of Standing Order 2 (c) a probationer is an 'employee' and the period of probation 6 months which may be extended to 12 months. This would ordinarily mean that probationer's service cannot be terminated except for misconduct during that period. The provision as to termination in the letter of appointment during the period of probation has to be read subject to the management's power under the said Standing Order 2 (c) or under Standing Order 14. In the instant case grounds (a) to (f) of Standing Order 14 does not apply. The order of termination cannot be said to have been passed in conformity with the power to termination his service under the Standing Orders.

That apart the tribunal had come to the conclusion that the termination of service of the probationer was not a termination simpliciter and it was passed as a punishment and was therefore an order of dismissal; it is impossible to say that this finding of fact was perverse or such as could not have been arrived at on the evidence. Hence the order for reinstatement was proper and cannot be interfered with.

Appeal by Special Leave from Award dated the 24th July, 1968 of the Labour Court, Meerut in Case No. 92 of 1966.

S. V. Gupte Senior Advocate (D.N. Mukherjee and M.L. Car, Advocates, with him), for Appellant.

S. Mohan Kumaramangalam and M. K. Ramamurthi, Senior Advocates (Vineet Kumar, Mrs. Shyamlal Pappu and J. Ramamurthy, Advocates with them), for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shelat, J.—In this appeal, by Special Leave, two questions arise : (1) whether standing orders govern the employees appointed before they are certified under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, 20 of 1946, and (2) whether the appellant-company was entitled to terminate the service of a workman appointed as a probationer before the expiry of the period of probation except on the ground of misconduct.

The first question relates to 3 workmen, Alladin, Ram Prasad and Noorul Zaman who were employed in 1929, 1935 and 1937 respectively, long before the company's standing orders were certified and brought into force in 1951 and who were superannuated under Standing Order 32 of the said standing orders. Prior to 1951 there were no rules or conditions of service prescribing the age of superannuation. Standing Order 32 for the first time laid down 55 years as the age of superannuation. Relying on standing order 32 the company served on the three workmen notices dated 19th December, 1964, 20th November, 1963 and 27th January, 1964, who had by then attained the age of 58, 64 and 59 years, by which the company retired them with effect from 1st January, 1965, 20th December, 1963 and 1st March, 1964 respectively. The Labour Court, to which the dispute arising from the compulsory retirement was referred, held that the company's standing orders having been certified long after these workmen were employed and the conditions of their employment not having provided any age of retirement, the company could not apply Standing Order 32 to them, and therefore, the orders of superannuation were bad, and directed their reinstatement and payment to them of their wages from the date of retirement till the date when they would be reinstated.

Thus, the question involved in this appeal is whether the company could retire by applying Standing Order 32 these three workmen, who admittedly had long passed the age of superannuation provided thereunder. Counsel for the company argued that once the standing orders are certified and come into operation, they would, subject to their modification as provided under the Act, bind all workmen, irrespective of whether they were employed before or after they came into force, and that therefore, the Labour Court was in error in holding to the contrary and ordering their reinstatement. Mr. Kumaramangalam, on the other hand, argued (1) that the company's action amounted to applying Standing Order 32 retrospectively, that that was not warranted for, if the standing orders were intended to be so applied, they would have so expressly provided, and (2) that in a previous reference, being Ref. No. 91 of 1964, between the appellant-company and its workmen, this very Labour Court had decided that these standing orders did not apply to workmen previously employed. That an appeal was sought to be filed in this Court against that order but no Special Leave was granted, and therefore, that order became final. Consequently, the company was not entitled to reargue the same question, as it was precluded from doing so by principles analogous to the principle of res judicata.

The question as to whether standing orders were retrospective in their application can obviously arise only if they do not in law bind workmen previously employed. Such a question can hardly arise if the provisions of the Act show, as contended by Counsel for the company, that once they are certified and come into force, they bind both the employer and all the workmen presently employed.

As observed in *Shahdara (Delhi) Saharanpur Light Railway Company Ltd. v. Shahdara-Saharanpur Railway Worker's Union*¹, the Act is a beneficial piece of legislation, its object being to require, as its preamble and its long title lay down, employers in industrial establishments to define with sufficient precision the conditions of employment of workmen employed under them and to make them known to such workmen. Before the passing of the Act, there was nothing in law to prevent an employer having different contracts of employment with workmen employed by him with different and varying conditions of service. Such a state of affairs led to confusion and made possible discriminatory treatment between employees and employers though all of them were appointed in the same premises and for the same or similar work. Such a position is clearly incompatible with the principles of collective bargaining and renders their effectiveness difficult, if not impossible. To do away with such diversity and bargaining with each individual workman, the Legislature provided by section 3 of the Act that every employer of an industrial establishment must, within 6 months from the date of the Act becoming applicable to his industrial establishment submit to the certifying authority under the Act Draft Standing Orders prepared by him for adoption in his industrial establishment providing therein for all matters set out in the Schedule to the Act, and where Model Standing Orders are prescribed to have such Draft Standing Orders in conformity with them. The Draft Standing Orders are to be accompanied by particulars of workmen employed in the establishment as also the name of the union, if any, to which they belong. This requirement clearly means particulars of the workmen in employment at the date of the submission of the Draft Standing Orders for certification and not those only who would be employed in future after certification. Under section 4, such draft orders are certifiable if they provide for all matters set out in the Schedule, are otherwise in conformity with the Act and are adjudicated as fair and reasonable by the certifying officer or the Appellate Authority. Section 5 requires the certifying officer to forward a copy of the draft standing orders to the union or in its absence to workmen in the prescribed manner with a notice requiring objections, if any, from the workmen.

After giving the employer and the union or the workmen's representatives an opportunity of being heard, the certifying officer has to decide whether or not any modification or addition to the draft submitted by the employer is necessary and then certify the Draft Standing Orders and send copies thereof and of his order in that behalf of the employer, the union or the representatives of the workmen. Section 6 confers the right of appeal to any person aggrieved by such order to the Appellate Authority, who, by his order, can either confirm or amend the Standing Orders. Under section 7 such Standing Orders are to come into operation on the expiry of 30 days from the date on which their authenticated copies are sent by the Certifying Officer to the parties where no appeal against these orders is filed or where such appeal is filed on expiry of 7 days from the date on which copies of the Appellate Authority's order are sent as required by section 6 (2). Section 9 requires the employer to post the Standing Orders as finally certified on boards maintained for that purpose at or near the entrance through which the majority of workmen enter the industrial establishment and in all departments thereof. Section 10 confers the right to an employer or any of the workmen to apply for modification after expiry of 6 months from the date on which they or the last modification thereof came into operation. The Schedule to the Act sets out matters which the Standing Orders must provide for. These matters are classification of workmen, shift working, periods and hours of work, holidays, pay days, wage rates, conditions and procedure for applying for grant of leave, closing and reopening of sections of the industrial establishment, temporary stoppage of work, liabilities and rights of the employer and the workmen arising therefrom, termination of employment, disciplinary action, penalties etc.

The obligation imposed on the employer to have standing orders certified, the duty of the Certifying Authority to adjudicate upon their fairness and reasonableness, the notice to be given to the union and in its absence to the representatives of the workmen, the right conferred on them to raise objections, the opportunity given to them of being heard before they are certified, the right of appeal and the right to apply for modifications given to workmen individually, the obligation on the employer to have them published in such a manner that they become easily known to the workmen, all these provisions abundantly show that once the Standing Orders are certified and come into operation, they become binding on the employer and all the workmen presently employed as also those employed thereafter in the establishment conducted by that employer. It cannot possibly be that such Standing Orders would bind only those who are employed after they come into force and not those who were employed previously but are still in employment when they come into force. The right of being heard given to the union or, where there is no union, to the representatives of the workmen, the right of appeal and the right to apply for modification given to workmen individually clearly indicate that they were provided for because the Standing Orders, as they emerge after certification, are intended to be binding on all workmen in the employment of the establishment at the date when they come into force and those employed thereafter. Surely, the union or, in its absence, the representatives of workmen, who are given the right to raise objections either to the Draft Standing Orders proposed by the employer or to the fairness and reasonableness of their provisions, could not have been intended to speak for workmen to be employed thereafter and not those whom they presently represent. Besides, if the Standing Orders were to bind only those who are subsequently employed, the result would be that there would be different conditions of employment for different classes of workmen, one set of conditions for those who are previously employed and another for those employed subsequently, and where they are modified, even several sets of conditions of service depending upon whether a workman was employed before the Standing Orders are certified or after, whether he was employed before or after a modification is made to any one of them and would bind only a few who are recruited after and not the bulk of them, who though in employment were recruited previously. Such a result could never have been intended by the Legislature, for, that would render the conditions of service of workmen as indefinite and diversified, as before the enactment of the Act. Why does section 3 (3) of the Act require the employer to give particulars of the workmen employed by him at the date of his submission of the Draft Standing Orders unless the object of making him furnish the particulars was to have uniformity of conditions of service and to make the Standing Orders binding on all those presently employed. That is why the Act also insists among other things that after they are certified they must be made known to all workmen by posting them at or near the entrance through which they pass and in the language known to the majority of them.

In *Guest Keen Williams Private Ltd. v. P. J. Sterling*¹, a view apparently contrary to the one above stated was said to have been taken since it was held there that it was unfair in that particular case to fix the age of superannuation of previous employees by a subsequent Standing Order, which should apply in that matter to future entrants. In that view the Court fixed 60 years as the age of retirement for such previous employees although the Standing Order had provided 55 years as the age of superannuation. In *Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Company Ltd. v. Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd Employees Union*², this Court, however, took the same view which we have stated above and held that the provisions of the Act clearly indicated that matters specified in the Schedule to the Act should be covered by uniform Standing Orders applicable to all workmen employed in an industrial establishment and not merely to entrants employed after their certification. The question arose out of an application made by the employer for modification of the existing Standing Orders by providing different rules relating to holidays and leave for employees appointed before a certain date and those appointed after that date. Negating such a modification, the Court, after examining the relevant provisions of the Act, stated at pages 504 and 505 as follows :

"One has merely to examine these clauses one by one to be satisfied that there is no scope for having two separate Standing Orders in respect to any one of them. Take the case of classification of workmen. It is inconceivable that there can be two separate Standing Orders in respect of this matter. What we have said about classification is equally true about each one of the other said clauses ; and so, the conclusion appears to be irresistible that the object of the Act is to certify Standing Orders in respect of the matters covered by the Schedule; and having regard to these matters, Standing Orders so certified would be uniform and would apply to all workmen alike who are employed in any industrial establishment."

"On principle, it seems expedient and desirable that matters specified in the Schedule to the Act should be covered by uniform Standing Orders applicable to all workmen employed in an industrial establishment. It is not difficult to imagine how the application of two sets of Standing Orders in respect of the said matters is bound to lead to confusion in the working of the establishment and cause dissatisfaction amongst the employees. If Mr Setalvad is right in contending that the Standing Orders in relation to these matters can be changed from time to time, it may lead to the anomalous result that in course of 10 or 15 years there may come into existence 3 or 4 different sets of Standing Orders applicable to the employees in the same industrial establishment, the application of the Standing Orders depending upon the date of employment of the respective employees. That, we think, is not intended by the provisions of the Act."

At pages 509 to 510 the Court referred to the case of *Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd.*¹, relied on by the employer's counsel and explained why the Court had fixed 60 years as the age of superannuation for the employees appointed before the standing orders were certified although the Standing Orders had fixed 55 years as the age of superannuation stating that :

"that course was adopted under the special and unusual circumstances expressly stated in the course of the judgment."

This decision thus confirms the view taken by us that the object of the Act is to have uniform standing orders providing for the matters enumerated in the Schedule to the Act, that it was not intended that there should be different conditions of service for those who are employed before and those employed after the Standing Orders come into force, and finally, that once the Standing Orders come into force, they bind all those presently in the employment of the concerned establishment as well those who are appointed thereafter.

Counsel for the workmen, however, drew our attention to the award in Reference No. 91 of 1964 under section 4 (k) of the U. P. Industrial Disputes Act, 1947-

2. (1966) 2 S.C.J. 480 : (1966) 2 S.C.R. 498 : A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 808.

That reference, no doubt, was between the appellant-company and its workmen and the question decided there was whether the company was right in compulsorily retiring the six workmen there concerned under these very Standing Orders although they were employed before they were certified and came into force. The Labour Court, relying on *Workmen of Kettlewell Bullen & Co., Ltd v. Kettlewell Bullen & Co. Ltd*¹, which in turn had relied on *Guest, Keen, William's case*², held that Standing Order 32 of these Standing Orders could not be applied to those previously appointed and that, therefore the company's action in retiring those workmen was not justified.

We may mention that the case of *Kettlewell Bullen & Co.*¹, was not one concerned with Standing Orders but with rules made by the company and this Court, relying on the decision in *Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd.*² held that where the rules of retirement are framed by the company they would have no application to its prior employees unless such employees have accepted the new rules. It is clear that neither the case of *Kettlewell Bullen & Co.*¹ nor the case of *Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd.*² in the light of the explanation given in the case of *Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd.*³ was applicable and the Labour Court was, therefore, clearly in error in basing its award on the decision in the case of *Kettlewell Bullen & Co.*¹.

The argument, however, was that even if that award was erroneous, the company did not appeal against it, consequently it became final and the issue there decided being the same and between the same parties, principles analogous to the principle of res judicata would apply and therefore no relief should be granted in the present case to the company. It is true, as stated in *The Newspapers Ltd. v. The State Industrial Tribunal. U. P.*⁴, that an award binds not only the individuals present or represented but all workmen employed in the establishment and even future entrants. But that principle is founded on the essential condition for the raising of an industrial dispute itself. If an industrial dispute can be raised only by a group of workmen acting on their own or through their union, the conclusion must be that all those who sponsored the dispute are concerned in it and therefore bound by the decision on such dispute. See *M/s. New India Motors (P.) Ltd. v. K. T. Morris*⁵. Such a consideration, however, is not the same as the principle of res judicata or principles analogous to res judicata. In *Workmen v. Bahmer Lawrie & Co.*⁶, no doubt, a case of revision of wage scales, this Court cautioned against applying technical considerations of res judicata thereby hampering the discretion of industrial adjudication. (See also *Shahdra (Delhi) Saharanpur Light Railway Co. Ltd. v. Shahdara Saharanpur Railway Workers Union*⁷. How inexpedient it is to apply such a principle is evident from the fact that the award in Reference No. 91 of 1964 was based on the decision in *Kettlewell Bullen & Co., Ltd.*¹ which in turn had followed the case of *Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd.*² on the supposition (which, as aforesaid, was not correct) that Standing Orders are not binding on those who are employed prior to their certification and their coming into force. The company, presumably, did not challenge the correctness of that award because it was perhaps then thought that that was the law laid down in *Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd.*². The consequence of holding that the company is barred by principles analogous to res judicata would be that there would be two sets of conditions of service, one for those previously employed and the other for those employed after the Standing Orders were certified, a consequence wholly incompatible with the object and policy of the Act. The very basis of the award in Reference No. 91 of 1964, namely, the wrong understanding of the decision in *Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd.*² having gone, it becomes all the more difficult and undesirable to perpetuate the distinction made therein between those who were previously appointed and those appointed subsequently and to refuse on such an untenable distinction relief to the company. 91 of 1964 was made on 24th May, 1965, when it was believed that the decision in *Guest, Keen, Williams Co. Ltd.*¹ laid down the principle that standing orders would not bind workmen previously employed. That that was not so was clarified in the case of *Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd.*² the decision in which was pronounced on 3rd November, 1965, removing thereby any possible misapprehension. The present reference was made on 23rd June, 1966, long after the decision in *Salem Erode Electricity Distribution Co. Ltd.*² and the Labour Court gave the award impugned in this appeal on 24th July, 1968. Thus, both the Reference and the award were made in circumstances different from those which prevailed when Reference 91 of 1964 was made and disposed of, a factor making it doubtful the application of a principle such as res judicata.

The second question relates to the workman, Shameem Khan. The company appointed him under a letter of appointment dated 2nd December, 1965, to the post of a clearer as a probationer for 6 months with discretion to the resident engineer to extend that period. The letter also stated that during his probationary period his service would be liable to termination without any notice and without assigning any reason therefor and that he would not be deemed to have been confirmed, automatically in the post on the expiry of the probation period unless so advised in writing. The workmen worked as such probationer till 28th February, 1966, when he was served with a memorandum that his service was terminated as from the close of that day.

The workman's case was that the company had no right to terminate his service before the expiry of the 6 months period of probation which is the period prescribed by standing order 2 (c), that the stipulation in the letter of appointment that his service was liable to termination during the probation period was contrary, to that standing order, and that therefore, that stipulation was not valid, and lastly, that the said order, though apparently one of termination simpliciter, was not a bona fide order, was in truth punitive in nature, and therefore, could not be passed without an opportunity of being heard having been given to him in a properly held enquiry. The fact is that no such enquiry was held and no opportunity was given to the workman to explain any misconduct for which he could be removed or dismissed.

The evidence before the Labour Court was that the concerned workman had unauthorisedly used the motor-cycle belonging to one Sidhana, a shift engineer in the company and that that motor-cycle met with an accident while the workman was using it causing damage to it. Three days after that accident a report alleging that his work as a probationer was unsatisfactory was made by his superior officer. On this evidence the Tribunal came to the conclusion that the impugned order was not an order of termination simpliciter, that though couched in that language it was passed as a punishment for the workman having used that vehicle without the consent of its owner and was, therefore, an order of dismissal. The Tribunal was also of the opinion that the said report alleging unsatisfactory work by the workman was colourable and made at the instance of the shift engineer or at any rate was inspired by the said incident. In this view the Labour Court held that the exercise of power to terminate the service of the workman was not bona fide and consequently it set aside that order and directed his reinstatement.

Now, it is a well-settled principle of industrial adjudication that even if an impugned order is worded in the language of a simple termination of service, industrial tribunals can look into the facts and circumstances of the case to ascertain if it was passed in colourable exercise of the power of the management to terminate the service of an employee and find out whether it was in fact passed with a view to punish him. The letter of appointment clearly states that the workmen, Shameem Khan, was appointed, as a probationer for a period of 6 months with power to the resident engineer to extend the period of probation. Ordinarily, that would mean that at the end of the probation period the company would have to decide whether to confirm him to a permanent post or, if that is not possible, to terminate his service. Standing order 2 (c) provides that a probationer is an employee who is provisionally employed to fill a permanent vacancy in a post and who has not completed the period of probation thereunder. It also lays down that the normal period of probation shall be six months but the resident engineer has the discretion to extend that period, the maximum period of probation being 12 months in all. Ordinarily, this would mean that a probationer's service cannot be terminated except for some misconduct until the expiry of the probation period. The letter of appointment, no doubt, contained a provision that the service of the workman was liable to termination even during the probationary period. That provision, however, must be read to mean that the appointment was subject to the management's power of termination as provided in the standing orders. Standing order 14 provides for such a power and lays down that the service of "any employee" (which expression includes a probationer as is clear from the classification of employees in standing order 2 can be terminated on grounds (a) to (j) therein set out. It is quite clear that the termination of service of the concerned workman cannot be attributed to any one of these grounds. Therefore, that order cannot be said to have been passed in conformity with the power to terminate his service under the standing orders.

But apart from this consideration, the Labour Court came to a finding on the evidence before it that the real reason for passing the impugned order was not the alleged unsatisfactory work on the part of the workman but his having unauthorisedly used the motor-cycle and causing damage to it, that the order was punitive and not a simple termination of service and was therefore in colourable exercise of the power of termination. This finding is clearly one of fact and meant that the Labour Court rejected the evidence led by the management that the work of the concerned workman was found unsatisfactory. It is impossible to say from the evidence before the Labour Court that that finding was perverse or such as could not be reasonably arrived at. In that view, it is impossible to interfere with the order of the Labour Court relating to workman, Shameen Khan.

In the result, the appeal is partly allowed. The order of the Labour Court in connection with the 3 workmen whom the company retired, is set aside but its order relating to workman, Shameem Khan, is confirmed. In accordance with the order passed by this Court on 24th January, 1969, while granting stay to the appellant-company, the company will pay to the workman, Shameem Khan, interest at 6 per cent per annum on the amount of the arrears of wages will due to him under the order of the Labour Court. As the appeal is partly allowed and partly dismissed, there will be no order as to costs.

... Respondents.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), section 2 (6-A)—Dividend—Amount distributed by company out of capital gains arising on or after 1st April, 1948—Whether liable to tax.

In a proceeding for assessment to income-tax for the year, 1949-50 the respondents claimed that the dividend distributed by the Ukhra Estate Zamindaries Ltd. was exempt from tax because the fund out of which the dividend was distributed did not form part of the "accumulated profits" of the company. The Income-tax Officer rejected the contention and brought the dividend to tax in the hands of the respondents. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner held that

Rs. 1,12,500 out of a total amount of Rs. 2,24,000 distributed by the company represented capital gains arising to the company on or after 1st April, 1948, and not being dividend within the meaning of section 2 (6-A) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the share distributed to the shareholders out of that amount was exempt from income-tax. The order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was reversed in appeal by the Tribunal. The High Court answered the reference in favour of the respondents. On appeal to Supreme Court, Held, that the proportionate share of the capital gains out of which the dividend was distributed to the shareholders of the company must be deemed exempt from liability to pay tax under section 12 as dividend income liable to tax.

The proviso to the Explanation of section 2 (6-A) clearly enacted that capital gains arising after 31st March, 1948, are not liable to be included within the expression "dividend". The definition is, it is true, an inclusive definition and a receipt by a shareholder which does not fall within the definition may possibly be regarded as dividend within the meaning of the Act unless the context negatives that view. But it is difficult on that account to hold that capital gains excluded from the definition of dividend by express enactment still fall within the charge of tax. According to the definition in section 2 (6-A) only the proportionate share of the member out of the accumulated profits (excluding capital gains arising in the excepted period) distributed by the company alone will be deemed the taxable component.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, Ag. C.J.—In a proceeding for assessment to income-tax for the year 1949-50 the respondents in these appeals claimed that the dividend distributed by the Ukhra Estate Zamindaries Ltd. was exempt from tax, because the fund out of which the dividend was distributed did not form part of the "accumulated profits" of the company. The Income-tax Officer rejected the contention and brought the dividend to tax in the hands of the respondents. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner held that Rs. 1,12,500 out of a total amount of Rs. 2,24,000 distributed by the company, represented capital gains arising to the company on or after 1st April, 1948 and not being dividend within the meaning of section 2 (6-A) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, the share distributed to the shareholders out of that amount was exempt from income-tax. The order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner was reversed in appeal by the Tribunal. In the view of the Tribunal the definition of "dividend" in section 2 (6-A) in force in the year of assessment was not exhaustive, and if the amount distributed was "dividend in ordinary parlance it became chargeable under the general charging section", and that clause 2 (6-A) "was concerned with deemed dividends, and exclusion of certain capital gains by the proviso had no bearing on the issue raised by the revenue."

The following question referred by the Tribunal to the High Court of Calcutta under section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act :

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the amount of Rs. 28,125 was rightly included as dividend in the total income of the assessee for the assessment year 1949-50?"

was answered in the negative. The Commissioner has appealed to this Court with certificates granted by the High Court.

"Dividend" in its ordinary connotation means the sum paid to or received by a shareholder proportionate to his shareholding in a company out of the total sum distributed. The relevant part of the definition contained in section 2 (6-A) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, in the year of assessment 1949-50 was as follows :—

“Dividend” includes—

(a) any distribution by a company of accumulated profits whether capitalised or not, if such distribution entails the release by the company to its shareholders of all or any part of the assets of the company ;

* * * *

Explanation.—The words ‘accumulated profits’ wherever they occur in the clause, shall not include : capital profit Provided further that the expression ‘accumulated profits’ wherever it occurs in this clause, shall not include capital gains arising before the 1st day of April, 1946 or after the 31st day of March, 1948.”

Dividend distributed by a company being a share of its profits declared as distributable among the shareholders, is not impressed with the character of the profits from which it reaches the hands of the shareholders. It would be therefore difficult to hold that the mere fact that a distribution has been made out of the capital gains, it has the attributes of capital gains in the hands of the shareholders. But that does not assist the case of the Revenue, for the Legislature has expressly excluded from the content of dividend, capital gains arising after 31st March, 1948.

The proviso to the Explanation clearly enacted that capital gains arising after 31st March, 1948 are not liable to be included within the expression “dividend”. The definition is, it is true, an inclusive definition and a receipt by a shareholder which does not fall within the definition may possibly be regarded as dividend within the meaning of the Act unless the context negatives that view. But it is difficult on that account to hold that capital gains excluded from the definition of dividend by express enactment still fall within the charge of tax. According to the definition in section 2 (6-A) of the Income-tax Act only the proportionate share of the member out of the accumulated profits (excluding capital gains arising in the excepted period) distributed by the company, alone will be deemed the taxable component.

There is no warrant for the view expressed by the Tribunal that the definition of “dividend” only includes deemed dividend. To hold that the capital gains within the excepted period are not part of the accumulated profits for the purpose of the definition under section 2 (6-A) and a distributive share thereof does not on that account fall within the definition of “dividend” and therefore of income chargeable to tax and still to regard them as a part of accumulated profits for the purpose of dividend in the popular connotation and to bring the share to tax in the hands of the shareholders is to nullify an express provision of the statute. We do not see any reason why such a strained construction should be adopted.

We agree with the High Court that the proportionate share of the capital gains out of which the dividend was distributed to the shareholders of the company must be deemed exempt from liability to pay tax under section 12 as dividend income liable to tax.

Counsel for the Revenue sought to argue that share of dividend which is not chargeable to tax by virtue of the exemption clause is still liable to tax as income other than dividend. But no such contention was raised before the Tribunal or the High Court and no question was raised in that behalf. We will not be justified in entering upon the question which was not raised or argued before the Tribunal and before the High Court.

The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. One hearing fee.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), section 34 (1) (b) and 10—Back assessment—Information—Judicial decisions—Part of assessable income—Failure to tax—Escapement—Purchase by assessee of properties from Hindu father—Character of property—Self-acquired in joint family property—Litigation between father and sons—Pendency of appeal at the time of purchase by assessee—Decision by Privy Council—Information—Payment by assessee to sons to get their interest released—Capital expenditure.

The assessee purchased a mill from a Hindu father on the basis that it was his self-acquired property. On the date of the purchase, the question whether the property was the self-acquired property of the father or the joint family property was the subject-matter of an appeal pending in the High Court. The High Court in the appeal held that the mill was the joint family property. The father appealed to the Privy Council. Pending that appeal, the assessee was submitting returns for the relevant assessment years. Before the assessments were taken up, the assessee entered into a compromise with the sons of the vendor and got a release of their interest in the property on payment of Rs. 1,15,000. The assessee as the Receiver appointed by the High Court was depositing the income from the property in the High Court. The Privy Council decided the appeal in favour of the father. On the basis of the decision of the Privy Council, the Income-tax Officer, commenced back assessment proceedings in respect of the lease income of the mills. The Tribunal upholding the orders of the Department held that the decision of the Privy Council constituted information for the back assessment and that the sum paid by the assessee for obtaining the sons' interest in the property released was a capital expenditure and hence not allowable.

The High Court in reference held that on the basis of the compromise between the assessee and the sons part of the amount was taken to be for acquisition of the capital asset and part towards the discharge of the claim towards the profits and hence the amount should be apportioned. The Revenue as well as the assessee appealed :

Held that the back assessment proceedings are validly taken as the decision of the Privy Council constituted the information. The payment of Rs. 1,15,000 is a capital expenditure made by the assessee to perfect his title to a capital asset and the assessee is not entitled to set-off any portion of the amount as attributable to the lease money.

Once an assessment is reopened by issuing a notice under the Act the previous under assessment is set aside and the whole assessment proceedings start afresh.

The word "information" in section 34 (1) (b) included information as to the true and correct state of the law and so would cover information as to relevant judicial decisions. Escapement under section 34 (1) (b) was not confined to cases where no return had been submitted by the assessee or where income had not been assessed owing to inadvertence or oversight or other lacuna attributable to the assessing authorities. But even in a case where a return had been submitted an Income-tax Officer had erroneously failed to tax a part of the assessable income it was a case where that part of the income had escaped assessment.

Held on facts: the assessee deliberately suppressed the fact that there was a compromise between himself and sons under which he was entitled to the whole of the income from the mill. The decision of the Privy Council would constitute information for the purposes of back assessment proceedings.

The contention that the Officer could have legitimately assessed a third share of the income which was due to the assessee according to the judgment of the High Court and there was escapement only to the extent of two-third share income is not of much avail to the assessee because once proceedings under section 34 are taken to be validly initiated with regard to the two-third share of the income, the jurisdiction of the Officer cannot be confined only to that portion of the income.

Also held: it is well established that where money is paid to perfect a title or as consideration for getting rid of a defect in the title or a threat of litigation the payment would be capital payment and not revenue payment. If the asset which is acquired is in its character a capital asset, then any sum paid to acquire it must surely be capital outlay. Money paid in consideration of the acquisition of a source of property or income is capital expenditure.

Held on facts: it cannot be said that the amount was paid partly for the acquisition of the capital asset and partly to discharge the claim towards profits. The fact that the High Court took into consideration the income from the mill in testing whether the offer made by the assessee for the release of the claim of the sons was a fair offer would not mean that the sons were given as a result of the compromise a share in the profits of the assessee. It was a lumpsum payment for acquisition of the capital asset and the claim of the sons for the lease money from the property was merely ancillary or incidental to the claim to the capital asset. The High Court was in error in holding that the amount should be apportioned between capital and income. The entire amount should be treated as capital payment and the assessee is not entitled to exclude from the income sought to be assessed in his hands any portion of that amount.

Jagdish Swarup, Solicitor-General of India (S. K. Aiyar and R. N. Sachthey Advocates, with him), for Respondent (In C. As. Nos. 893 to 898 of 1966) and the Appellants (in C. As. Nos. 1381 to 1386 of 1966).

Ramaswami, J.—The assessee who is the kartha of a Hindu undivided family was assessed in that status for the relevant assessment years, 1944-45, 1945-46, 1946-47 not only to income-tax but also to excess profits tax. On 1st February, 1941, he purchased from Randhi Appalaswamy (hereinafter referred to as the vendor) a spinning mill known as Sri Satynarayana Spinning Mills, Rajahmundry, for a sum of Rs. 54,731. The purchase was made at a period when there was litigation between the sons of the vendor and the vendor in respect of the spinning mill and other properties. The sons had filed a suit against the father, the vendor, claiming the schedule properties including the mill as joint family properties and for partition of the same. The vendor claimed that the properties were his self-acquired properties. The District Judge, Rajahmundry, held that the properties were the self-acquired properties of the vendor and dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. Against the judgment of the District Judge an appeal was filed in the Madras High Court, being A.S. No. 175 of 1938. While the appeal was pending, on 1st February, 1941 the assessee purchased the mill from the vendor who purported to sell the same as the sole owner. In A.S. No. 175 of 1938 the Madras High Court held that the properties of the vendor were not his self-acquired properties but were joint family properties in which the plaintiffs had a two-thirds share. Against this judgment the vendor preferred an appeal to the Privy Council. While that appeal was pending the assessee had submitted returns for the relevant assessment years. However, before the assessments were taken up the assessee entered into a compromise with the plaintiffs on 7th September, 1945, by virtue of which he got a release of the interest of the vendor's sons on payment of Rs. 1,15,000. While the appeal was pending before the Privy Council the plaintiffs had applied to the High Court for recovery of their share of the profits. The High Court appointed the assessee as the Receiver directing him to deposit the profits in the High Court. The assessee deposited a sum of Rs. 1,09,613 for the year 1944-45, Rs. 31,087 for the year 1945-46 and Rs. 4,775 for the year 1946-47. Under the compromise the assessee was entitled to withdraw these amounts on payment of Rs. 1,15,000. The Privy Council decided the appeal on 2nd July, 1947, reversing the order of the High Court and restoring that of the District Judge holding that Appalaswamy was the absolute owner of the mill and the sons had no right, title or interest therein. On receipt of the Privy Council's decision which finally determined the rights of the parties and the ownership of the assessee in the mill, the Income-tax Officer issued on 2nd March, 1948 a notice under section 34 of the Income-tax Act in respect of Rs. 1,09,613 received by the assessee as lease income of the mill. It was contended for the assessee (1) that the proceedings initiated under section 34 of the Act for the year 1944-45 assessment were invalid in law as there was no new information leading to the discovery that income had escaped assessment, (2) that in any event the assessee was entitled to set off the sum of Rs. 1,15,000 paid to the sons of Appalaswamy under the compromise approved by the High Court for releasing their rights, if any, in the mill against the assessee's income from the mill. The Income-tax Officer rejected these contentions and treated the whole amount of Rs. 1,15,000 as paid toward capital expenditure in acquiring an asset. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner rejected the appeal of the assessee. The Tribunal affirmed the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. It held in the first place that the assessee had not disclosed the impugned source of income from the mill in his original assessment, that the matter as to the assessee's ownership of the mill was sub-judice and that the decision of the Privy Council constituted information not only of law but also as to the factum of the ownership of the mill and the income therefrom. The Tribunal expressed the view that the sum of Rs. 1,15,000 could not be allowed to be set off against the assessee's income from the mill as it was an ex gratia payment to the sons of Appalaswamy who had no right, title or interest in the mill and it was paid in order to perfect a supposed defective title and as such was of capital nature. Thereafter the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal stated a case to the High Court under section 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 on the following questions of law:

“ R.A. No. 779 which relates to the assessment year 1944-45 :

(1) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, in respect of the assessment year 1944-45, the assessment made on the assessee in the status of a Hindu undivided family in respect of income received by him as Receiver could be justified notwithstanding the provisions of section 41 of the Act?

(2) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the assessment of the entire income of Rs. 1,09,613 in the hands of the assessee is valid in the face of the compromise memo. dated 7th September, 1945 approved by the Court ?

(3) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the assessee is not entitled to set off Rs. 1,15,000 being the amount paid to the minors for releasing their rights in the property from out of the amount received from the mill ?

R.A. No. 780 which relates to assessment year 1945-46 :

(1) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the assessment made under section 34 of the Act is valid in law ?

(2) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, in respect of the assessment year 1945-46, the assessment on the assessee in the status of a Hindu undivided family in respect of the income received by him as Receiver could be justified notwithstanding the provisions of section 41 of the Act ?

(3) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the assessment of the entire income of Rs. 31,037 in the hands of the assessee is valid in the face of the compromise memo dated 7th September, 1945 approved by the Court ?

(4) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the assessee is not entitled to set off Rs. 1,15,000 being the amount paid to the minors for releasing their rights in the property from out of the amount received from the mill ?

R.A. No. 781 which relates to assessment year 1946-47 :

(1) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, in respect of the assessment year 1946-47 the assessment on the assessee in the status of a Hindu undivided family in respect of income received by him as Receiver could be justified, notwithstanding the provisions of section 41 of the Act?

(2) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the assessment of the entire income of Rs. 4,775 in the hands of the assessee is valid in the face of the compromise memo. dated 7th September, 1945 approved by the Court?

The Appellate Tribunal pointed out in the statement of the case that question No. 1 in R.A. No. 780 for the assessment year 1945-46 pertained to the earlier assessment year 1944-45 in R.A. No. 779 and also that question No. 2 in R.A. No. 780 and R.A. No. 779 for the assessment year 1945-46 and the corresponding excess profits tax assessment did not arise in that year but pertained to the earlier assessment year 1944-45 in R.A. No. 779 and the corresponding excess profits tax assessment in R.A. No. 782.

The High Court answered question Nos. 1 and 2 in R.A. No. 779 and question No. 1 in R.A. No. 780 in the affirmative. The High Court held that re-assessment proceedings have been validly initiated under section 34 of the Act. The High Court found that the assessment on the assessee in the status of Hindu undivided family in respect of income received by him as Receiver was proper. The High Court thought that the basis of the compromise in the Madras High Court entered into between the assessee and the minor sons of the vendor Appalaswamy wherein the assessee paid Rs. 1,15,000 to the minor sons cannot be ignored. The High Court negated the contention of the Income-tax Department that the sum of Rs. 1,15,000 was paid to cure a supposed defect in the title and that it was a capital payment. Upon the interpretation of the terms of the compromise the High Court took the view that the amount of Rs. 1,15,000 was paid partly towards acquisition of capital asset and partly towards the discharge of the claim towards profits and hence it should be apportioned towards capital and income in the proportion of 90/85. C.As. Nos. 1331 to 1386 of 1966 are brought by certificate from the judgment of the High Court on behalf of the Commissioner of Income-tax and C.A. Nos. 893 to 898 of 1966 were brought by special leave from the same judgment to this Court on behalf of the assessee.

"(1) If in consequence of definite information which has come into his possession the Income-tax Officer, discovers that income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax have escaped assessment in any year, or have been under-assessed, or have been assessed at too low a rate, or have been the subject of excessive relief under this Act the Income-tax Officer may in any case in which he has reason to believe that the assessee has concealed the particulars of his income or deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars thereof at any time within eight years, and in any other case at any time within four years of the end of that year, serve on the person liable to pay tax on such income profits or gains or in the case of a company on the principal officer thereof a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22, and may proceed to assess or re-assess such income, profit or gains, and the provisions of this Act, shall, so far as may be, apply accordingly as if the notice were a notice issued under that sub-section.

(2) No order of assessment under section 23 or of assessment or re-assessment under sub-section (1) of this section shall be made after the expiry, in any case to which clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 23 applies, of eight years, and in any other case, of four years from the end of the year, in which the income, profits or gains were first assessable.

The first question arising in this case is whether the proceeding under section 34 is legally valid. It was contended by Mr. Narasaraju that the decision of the Privy Council could not be said to be definite information within the meaning of the section. It was said that the Income-tax Officer was fully aware of the circumstances of the case and the assessee had placed all the relevant facts before him, namely, that under the High Court's judgment the vendor was only entitled to one-third share of the income pending the decision of the appeal before the Privy Council. In our opinion there is no justification for this argument. It is not true to say that the assessee brought all the relevant facts before the Income-tax Officer. On the contrary he deliberately suppressed the fact that there was a compromise between himself and the plaintiffs under which he was entitled to the whole of the income from the mill. At any rate the Privy Council's decision which determined the rights of the parties irrespective of the compromise did constitute definite information within the meaning of section 34 of the Income-tax Act. This view is borne out by the decision of this Court in *Maharaja Kumar Kamal Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax*¹. In that case the Income-tax Officer had, following the decision of the High Court in *Kamakhyia Narain Singh's case*², omitted to bring to assessment for the year 1945-46 the sum of Rs. 93,604 representing interest on arrears of rent due to the assessee in respect of agricultural land on the ground that the amount was agricultural income. Subsequently the Privy Council, on appeal from that decision held that interest on arrears of rent payable in respect of agricultural land was not agricultural income. As a result of this decision the Income-tax Officer initiated re-assessment proceedings under section 34 (1) (b) of the Income-tax Act and brought the amount of Rs. 93,604 to tax. In these circumstances it was held by this Court firstly that the word "information" in section 34 (1)(b) included information as to the true and correct state of the law, and so would cover information as to relevant judicial decisions, secondly, that "escape" in section 34 (1) was not confined to cases where no return had been submitted by the assessee or where income had not been assessed owing to inadvertence or oversight or other lacuna attributable to the assessing authorities. But even in a case where a return had been submitted, if the Income-tax Officer had erroneously failed to tax a part of the assessable income, it was a case where that part of the income had escaped assessment. The decision of the Privy Council, therefore, was held to be information within the meaning of section 34 (1) (b) and the proceedings for re-assessment were validly initiated. In our opinion the principle of this decision governs the present case and it must be held that the proceedings initiated under section 34 for the assessment year 1944-45 were legally valid. It was stated on behalf of the appellant that in any case the Income-tax Officer could have legitimately assessed one-third share of the income which was due to the assessee according to the judgment of the Madras High Court and there was escape only to the extent of two-third share of the income. This argument is not of much avail to the appellant because once proceedings under section 34 are taken to be validly initiated with regard to two-third share of the income, the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer cannot be confined only to that portion of the income. Section 34 in terms states that once the Income-tax Officer decides to reopen the assessment he could do so within the period prescribed by serving on the person liable to pay tax a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under section 22 (2) and may proceed to assess or re-assess such income, profits or gains. It is, therefore, manifest that once assessment is reopened by issuing a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 the previous under-assessment is set aside and the whole assessment proceedings start afresh. When once valid proceedings are started under section 34 (1) (b) the Income-tax Officer had not only the jurisdiction but it was his duty to levy tax on the entire income that had escaped assessment during that year.

The second question involved in this case is whether the High Court was right in holding that any portion of the amount of Rs. 1,15,000 was liable to be treated as business expenditure. It is well established that where money is paid to perfect a title or as consideration for getting rid of a defect in the title or a threat of litigation the payment would be capital payment and not revenue payment. What is essential to be seen is whether the amount of Rs. 1,15,000 was paid for bringing into existence a right or asset of an enduring nature. In other words if the asset which is acquired is in its character a capital asset, then any sum paid to acquire it must surely be capital outlay. Money paid in consideration or the acquisition of a source of profit of income is capital expenditure both on principle and authority. In *Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables Ltd.*¹ Viscount Cave said :

"But where an expenditure is made, not only once for all, but with a view to bringing into existence an asset or an advantage for the enduring benefit of a trade, I think that there is very good reason (in the absence of special circumstances leading to an opposite conclusion) for treating such an expenditure as property attributable not to revenue but to capital."

In *Commissioner of Taxes v. Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines Ltd.*², Lord Radcliffe observed at p. 960 :

"Courts have stressed the importance of observing a demarcation between the cost of creating, acquiring or enlarging the permanent (which does not mean perpetual) structure of which the income is to be the produce or fruit and the cost of earning that income itself or performing the income-earning operations. Probably this is as illuminating a line of distinction as the law by itself is likely to achieve"

It is, however, contended on behalf of the assessee that the amount of Rs. 1,15,000 was paid partly for the acquisition of capital asset and partly to discharge the claim towards profits and hence there should be an apportionment of the amount. It is not possible to accept this contention. It appears from the order of the High Court that the value of the mill was fixed at Rs. 1,15,000 after taking into consideration the fact that the mill was built on a leasehold premises. The value of the machinery was fixed at Rs. 1,36,000 and the leasehold interest was fixed at Rs. 14,000. On this basis the share of the minors was taken to be Rs. 90,000. In respect of the profits the claim of the plaintiffs was taken to be Rs. 85,000. The total claim was therefore Rs. 1,75,000 so that the offer of Rs. 1,15,000 for the release of the claim of the plaintiffs in the mill was held to be fair. The High Court, therefore, certified the compromise to be for the benefit of the minor plaintiffs. In the course of its order dated 7th September, 1945 the High Court observed :

"There are, however, numerous risks which the continuance of the litigation would necessarily involve. The Privy Council might hold that the mill was the self-acquired property of the father, in which case the plaintiffs would get nothing and would incur a liability for costs. It might also be held that, though the property was the family property, the father was entitled as the natural guardian to sell the interests of minor sons in discharging of a binding family obligation. There is the further possibility that by the time the litigation ends the property will have deteriorated and its value will have been materially reduced by the termination of the lease of the land."

Taking all these contingencies into consideration we are of opinion that the offer made by the purchaser of Rs. 1,15,000 for the release of the claim, if any, of the two sons in the mill sold to him by their father is a fair offer, the acceptance of which would be beneficial to the minor second plaintiff."

It is true that the High Court took into consideration the income from the mill in testing whether the offer made by the purchaser of Rs. 1,15,000 for the release of the claim of the plaintiffs was a fair offer. But that does not mean that the sons of Appalaswamy were given as a result of the compromise a share in the profits of the assessee. It is clear from the circumstances of this case that the payment of Rs. 1,15,000 was made by the assessee in order to perfect his title to capital asset and the assessee is not entitled to set off any portion of the amount as attributable to the lease money. It was a lump sum payment for acquisition of a capital asset and the claim of the plaintiffs for the lease money from the property was merely ancillary or incidental to the claim to the capital asset. In our opinion the High Court was in error in holding that the amount should be apportioned between capital and income. In the result so far as questions 3 and 4 in R.A. No. 779, questions 1 and 2 in R.A. No. 780 and questions 2 and 3 in R.A. No. 781 are concerned the answer is that the entire amount of Rs. 1,15,000 should be treated as capital payment and the assessee is not entitled to exclude from the income sought to be assessed in his hands any portion of that amount.

We accordingly allow C.A. Nos. 1381 to 1386 of 1966 to the extent indicated above. C.A. Nos. 893 to 898 of 1966 are dismissed. There will be no order as to costs in either of two sets of appeals.

v.

Commissioner of Income-tax (Central) Calcutta

... Respondent.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), section 10—Business loss—Assessee, dealer in shares—Purchase and sale of shares—Part of a scheme to assist another company to acquire managing agency—Purchase at a higher rate than the market rate—Sale to the same company—Purchase on the overdraft account—If a transaction done in the ordinary course of business—If an allowable loss.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), section 66—Reference—Question arising out of the order of Tribunal—Loss—Disallowance by department—Tribunal sustaining disallowance for certain reasons—High Court upholding decision on the basis of reasons rejected by the Tribunal—No necessity on department to apply for and obtain reference—No reference on a question arising from the reasons given by the Tribunal.

Under an agreement dated 21st May, 1952, the managing agents of a jute company agreed to sell to M their entire holdings of the shares of the managed company consisting of preference shares at the rate of Rs. 196 per preference share and also to tender their resignation of agency with effect from 1st July, 1952. At the time of the agreement the market price of the preference share was Rs. 119 to Rs. 122. M company transferred the shares to three companies one of which is the assessee. M was appointed the managing agent of the jute company for a period of 10 years. Out of the total shares of 1,670 purchased by the assessee from M, one lot of 1,620 shares was purchased on 22nd May, 1952 at Rs. 186 per share and the second lot of 50 shares was purchased at Rs. 184 on 27th May, 1952. The assessee had to overdraw their bank account to purchase these. On 23rd December, 1952, the assessee sold back to M 1,575 shares at Rs. 115 per share and claimed the loss as one arising in the ordinary course of its business. The Department rejected the claim on the ground that the shares were purchased as contribution to scheme of acquisition of the managing agency of the jute company by M, that the loss therefore did not arise in the course of assessee's normal business of dealing in shares. The Tribunal however held that the assessee was not a pawn in the scheme of acquisition of the managing agency. But it held that the shares had not been acquired in the course of its share dealing business on the ground of the treatment of the loss given by the assessee in its own profit and loss account and held that the shares were acquired by the assessee as a measure of investment and not as stock-in-trade of the assessee's share dealing business. The High Court, on the proved and admitted facts inferred that the assessee as an associate of M company had entered into the transaction at the bidding of M company and hence the loss was not incurred in the ordinary course of its business. The assessee appealed :

Held, that the loss is not allowable as the shares were not bought and sold in the ordinary course of business of the assessee as a dealer in shares.

The question which was referred was couched in general terms and was not limited to or circumscribed by the reasons which had been given by the Tribunal against the assessee. The question of law on which reference can be made must arise out of the order of the Tribunal. The order which was made was in favour of the Department and against the assessee. It is true that certain reasons which had appealed to the Officer and the Appellate Commissioner were not accepted by the Tribunal. But it had come to the conclusion that the loss was not a loss that arose in the course of the assessee's business in share dealing. The question which was referred framed in the light of the final conclusion and it was not necessary for the Department to apply for and obtain a reference on a question arising from the reasons given by the Tribunal in support of its conclusion in favour of the Department.

On the admitted and proved facts there can be no doubt that the assessee did not acquire the preference shares in the ordinary course of business. These facts are : the market rate of the preference share was lower on the relevant days. On the very next day to the agreement between M and the then managing agent company shares were acquired by the assessee at a higher rate. Most of these shares were sold back to the same company at a lower rate.

The profit and loss account for the assessment year 1954-55 showed that the dealings in other shares were of comparatively much lesser value than the shares in question. The profit and loss which had been made and incurred on account of the other shares were also comparatively of minimal nature to the shares which were purchased by the assessee by obtaining an overdraft from a bank.

Appeal from the Judgment and Order, dated the 7th May, 1965, of the Calcutta High Court in Income-tax Reference No. 205 of 1961.

S. Ray, R. K. Choudhury and Mrs. B. P. Maheshwari, Advocates, for Appellant.
Jagdish Swarup, Solicitor General of India and S.C. Manchunda Senior Advocate (R. N. Sachthey and B. D. Sharma, Advocates, with them), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is an appeal by certificate from a judgment of the Calcutta High Court answering the following question referred to it in the negative and against the assessee :

“Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the loss of Rs. 1,11,816 suffered by the assessee on the sale of shares of Fort William Jute Company Ltd., was a loss that arose in its share dealing business?”

The assessee is a public limited company. It carries on, inter alia, business of dealing in shares and securities. The profits and losses arising from transactions in shares in the ordinary course of the assessee's business have always been treated as profits or losses of the share dealing business. During the assessment year 1954-55, relevant accounting period being the financial year 1953-54 the assessee suffered a loss of Rs. 1,11,816 on the sale of 1,575 preference shares of Fort William Jute Company Ltd. These shares were purchased on 22nd May, 1952 at the rate of Rs. 186 per share from Mugneeram Bangur and Co., and were sold on 23rd December, 1953 at the rate of Rs. 115 per share to the same company.

The background in which these transactions took place may be noticed: Kettlewell Bullen and Co., were the managing agents of Fort William Jute Co., Ltd., On 21st May, 1952, an agreement was entered into between Kettlewell Bullen and Co. and Mugneeram Bangur and Co., according to which the entire holding of Kettlewell Bullen and Co., in the managed company (Fort William Jute Co., Ltd.), consisting of 6,920 tax-free cumulative preference shares and 600 ordinary shares were to be sold to Mugneeram Bangur and Co., or their nominees at the agreed price of Rs. 185 per preference share and Rs. 400 per ordinary share. Pursuant to this agreement Kettlewell Bullen and Co., issued a circular letter to all shareholders of Fort William Jute Co., Ltd., informing them of the terms of the agreement and pointing out that Kettlewell Bullen and Co., would tender resignation from the office of the managing agents with effect from 1st July, 1952. It was stated in this letter “the purchase price of each ordinary share was Rs. 400 and of each preference share Rs. 185. It was further condition of the agreement that M/s. Mugneeram Bangur and Co., would offer to all shareholders of the company (ordinary and preference) to purchase their shares at the same price on the terms hereinafter referred to.” It was intended that M/s. Bangur Brothers Ltd., would be appointed managing agents.

At the time of the agreement, namely, 21st May, 1952, the market price of the preference shares ranged between Rs. 119 and Rs. 122 per share but the shares were purchased by the assessee on 22nd May, 1952, at the rate of Rs. 186 per share. A large part of the preference shares of Fort William Jute Co., Ltd., were transferred to three companies by Mugneeram Bangur and Co., who had to take over 8,617 preference shares in terms of the agreement. The companies to which these shares were transferred were (1) Marwar Textile Agency Ltd. (2) Union Co. Ltd. and (3) Star Co., Ltd., the assessee. M/s. Bangur Bros., were appointed as the managing agents of Fort William Jute Company for a period of ten years with effect from 1st July, 1952. The total number of preference shares of Fort William Jute Company Ltd., which were acquired by the assessee from Mugneeram Bangur and Co., was 1,670. One lot of 1,620 shares was purchased on 22nd May, 1952 of Rs. 186 per share and the second lot of 50 shares was purchased at Rs. 154 on 27th May, 1952. For the acquisition of these shares the assessee had to overdraw on its bank account. On 23rd December, 1953, 1,575 shares were sold to Mugneeram Bangur and Co., at Rs.115 per share resulting in a loss of Rs. 1,11,816 which was included in the loss of Rs. 1,30,152 debited to the profit and loss account under the head "loss on sale of investment." The assessee claimed this as a loss arising in the ordinary course of its business.

The Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner rejected the assessee's claim on the ground that the shares were purchased as a contribution to the scheme of acquisition of the managing agency of the Fort William Jute Co., Ltd., by Mugneeram Bangur and Co., or its nominee. The loss, therefore, did not arise in the course of the assessee's normal business of dealing in shares. The Appellate Tribunal found that there was no evidence that the assessee had been made a pawn in the scheme of acquisition of the managing agency of Fort William Jute Co., Ltd., by Mugneeram Bangur and Co., or that the shares were acquired by the assessee to relieve the latter of the load of their shares in pursuance of that scheme. The Tribunal was further of the view that even if Mugneeram Bangur and Co., had a controlling interest in the assessee-firm by having a majority of the shares in it no such inference could necessarily be raised that the assessee did not purchase the shares of Fort William Jute Co., Ltd., as a measure of its own activity as a dealer in shares. The Tribunal, however, held that the shares were not acquired in the course of the assessee's share dealing business for the reason that in the profit and loss account for the year ending 31st March, 1954, the assessee had made a distinction between its transactions as a dealer and as an investor in shares. The Tribunal found that while the profit on sale of shares out of its stock-in-trade had been shown and described as such in the profit and loss account, the loss on sale of investment had been shown in the profit and loss account as a loss in investment. From the treatment of the loss given by the assessee in its own profit and loss account the Tribunal came to the conclusion that the shares of Fort William Jute Co., Ltd., were acquired by the assessee as a measure of investment and not as stock-in-trade of the assessee's share dealing business.

The High Court, while dealing with the question which had been referred at the instance of the assessee, was of the opinion that the Tribunal had not properly considered the primary facts which had been found by the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. It proceeded to refer to some of the proved and admitted facts which were :

(1) The profit and loss account relating to the sale of shares showed that the transactions in Fort William Jute Co., shares stood apart from the other transactions. While the other transactions were of a few thousand rupees only rising to nearly 30,000 in one case the transaction in Fort William Jute Co., shares involved the payment of nearly Rs. 3,00,000.

(2) These shares were acquired in one lot from Mugneeram Bangur and Co., and sold back to the same concern in one lot which was altogether unusual.

(3) The shares in question were purchased by the assessee one day after the agreement was entered into between Kettlewell Bullen and Co., and Mugneeram Bangur and Co.

(4) The preference shares of the face value of Rs. 100 were purchased at Rs. 186 per share on 22nd May, 1952, when on the previous day the quotation in the market was Rs. 119 per share only. Taking the over-all picture the High Court felt that there could be only one inference that the assessee—an associate of Mugneeram Bangur and Co.—had entered into the transaction relating to preference share at the bidding of the Bangurs B for the purpose of helping them. It was observed that the Tribunal was wrong in holding that there was no evidence that these associates had been made pawns in the transaction. The conclusion of the High Court was “on the facts and circumstances of the case it is impossible to hold that the assessee bought shares in the ordinary course of business or would have bought them but to help Mugneeram Bangur and Co., in their scheme of acquisition of the managing agency rights.” It appears that the High Court was not impressed with the view of the Tribunal that on the basis of entries in the profit and loss account it could be held that the share transactions in question related to the capital account, the shares having been acquired as a measure of investment.

The first contention raised on behalf of the assessee, which is the appellant before us, is that the High Court was not entitled to reverse the findings of fact of the Appellate Tribunal since the department had not challenged the same by means of appropriate proceedings for reference of a question challenging those findings. It is pointed that the Tribunal had come to the conclusion that there was no evidence to show that the assessee had been made a pawn in the scheme of acquisition of the managing agency of Fort William Jute Co., by Mugneeram Bangur and Co., or that the preference shares had been acquired by the assessee pursuant to that scheme. It is submitted that the Tribunal had thus reversed the view which had commended itself to the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and to that extent the Tribunal's decision was in favour of the assessee and could not be reversed or set aside by the High Court in the absence of any reference at the instance of the department. It is noteworthy that the question which was referred is couched in general terms and was not limited to or circumscribed by the reasons which had been given by the Tribunal against the assessee. The question of law on which reference can be made must arise out of the order of the Tribunal. The order which was made in the present case was in favour of the department and against the assessee. It is true that certain reasons which had appealed to the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner were not accepted by the Appellate Tribunal but it had come to the following conclusions which was material for the disposal of the appeal :

“We accordingly uphold the view taken by the authorities below that the loss of Rs. 1,11,816 incurred on the sale of 1,575 preference shares of Fort William Jute Co., Ltd., was not a loss that arose in course of the appellant's business in share dealing though for different reasons.”

The question which was referred was framed in the light of the final conclusion and in our judgment it was not necessary for the department to apply for and obtain a reference on a question arising from the reasons given by the Tribunal in support of its conclusion in favour of the department.

It has next been contended on behalf of the appellant that where a question is one of mixed facts and law the facts as found by the Tribunal must be accepted as correct. The Tribunal had negatived the finding of the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner that the preference shares had been acquired by the assessee as a pawn in the scheme of transfer of the managing agency of Fort William Jute Co. Ltd. It was, therefore, not open to the High Court to come to the same conclusion by not treating the finding of the Appellate Tribunal as final. Our attention has been invited to the observations in *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay City-I v. Greaves Cotton and Co. Ltd.*¹, that it is not open to the High Court in a reference under section 66 (1) of the Income-tax Act, 1922 to embark upon a re-appraisal of the evidence and to arrive at findings of fact contrary to those of the Tribunal. The finding of fact will be defective in law if there is no evidence to support it or if the finding is unreasonable or perverse, but it is not open to a party to challenge such a finding unless reference has been made of a specific question concerning that finding. In *Oriental Investment Co. (P.) Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax*², it has been reiterated that in dealing with findings on questions of mixed law and fact, the High Court must accept the findings of the Tribunal on the primary question of fact as final although it is open to the High Court to examine whether the Tribunal had applied the relevant legal principles correctly. It is argued that the High Court has not characterised the aforesaid finding of the Appellate Tribunal as perverse or arbitrary and once that finding is accepted there would be no justification for holding that the assessee had been made a pawn in the matter of the scheme of transfer of the managing agency of Fort William Jute Co., Ltd. by Mugneeram Bangur and Co. or Bangur Brothers Ltd. In any case there were several facts which showed that the assessee was not privy or party to the aforesaid scheme. It did not acquire any interest in the managing agency nor was it a subsidiary or associate of Mugneeram Bangur group of concerns. The assessee was connected with the Bangurs only to the extent that out of its four directors two of the directors were Bangurs.

2. (1969) 72 I.T.R. 408 : (1969) 1 I.T.J. 491 :

In our opinion even if the conclusion of the High Court on the point mentioned above is not taken into consideration the question which was referred had to be answered against the assessee. On admitted and proved facts there can be no manner of doubt that the assessee did not acquire the preference shares in the ordinary course of business. These facts may be restated as follows :

(1) The market rate of the preference shares remained constant at the figure of Rs. 119 between 16th April, 1952, and 21st May, 1952.

(2) On 12th May, 1952, the agreement between Mugneeram Bangur and Kettlewell Bullen & Co. was entered into for purchasing the entire holding of the managing agency company in the managed company.

(3) On 22nd May, 1952, 1,620 shares were acquired by the assessee from Mugneeram Bangur and Co. at the rate of Rs. 186 per share. 50 more shares were acquired on 27th May, 1952, at Rs. 184 per share. The shares were obviously acquired at a price which was very much higher than the market price which prevailed only a day before they were purchased by the assessee.

(4) Out of 1,670 shares taken over by the assessee from Mugneeram Bangur and Co., 1,575 were sold back to the same company at the rate of Rs. 115 per share.

(5) The profit and loss account for the assessment year 1954-55 showed that the dealings in other shares were of comparatively much lesser value than the shares in question. The profits and losses which had been made and incurred on account of the other shares were also comparatively of minimal nature.

(6) The shares of Fort William Jute Co. Ltd., were purchased by the assessee by obtaining an overdraft from a bank.

All the above facts and circumstances which have some extraordinary features lead to the irresistible conclusion that whatever the motives which entered into the acquisition of the shares, they were certainly not bought and sold in the ordinary course of business of the assessee as a dealer in shares. The answer to the question must, therefore, be in the negative and against the assessee and it was rightly so returned by the High Court.

The appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

v.

Controller of Estate Duty, Delhi and Rajasthan, New

Delhi

... Respondent.

Estate Duty Act (XXXIV of 1953), section 10—Property deemed to pass on death—Gift of fixed deposit receipts taken in joint names of donor and donee—Renewals after gift in joint names—Donor whether entirely excluded—Liability to estate duty.

On 16th August, 1953, the deceased executed a deed of gift in favour of her minor grandson in respect of three fixed deposit receipts which were taken in the joint names of the deceased and her grandson and the gift was accepted on behalf of the minor by his father and natural guardian. On 17th August, 1953, the deceased sent a copy of the declaration of gift to the bank and intimated that her grandson was the sole owner of the amounts and till he attained the age of majority the fixed deposit receipts should remain in the joint names as they then stood. From time to time, the deceased presented the fixed deposit receipts for renewal when they matured and obtained fresh receipts in the joint names of herself and her grandson. On the death of the deceased, the Assistant Controller of Estate Duty held that possession and enjoyment of the gifted property was not assumed by the donee to the entire exclusion of the donor and on that account the amounts of the fixed deposit receipts and interest thereon formed part of the estate of the deceased and was liable to estate duty. In appeal the Central Board of Revenue confirmed the order. The High Court, on a reference held that the amounts were liable to estate duty. On appeal to the Supreme Court, Held, that the amounts were liable to be included in the estate of the deceased as property deemed to pass on death under section 10 of the Estate Duty Act, 1953.

Section 10 clearly means that if in respect of any property which is gifted, bona fide possession and enjoyment is not immediately assumed by the donee and thenceforward retained by him to the entire exclusion of the donor or of any benefit to him therein the property gifted shall not be excluded from the estate subject to estate duty.

Held on facts : the conduct of the deceased clearly indicates that she had no intention to part with control over the property; the fixed deposit receipts were obtained in joint names, and the deceased had authority to withdraw the amount from the bank, without consulting the guardian of her grandson. The fixed deposit receipts were renewed on several occasions even after the execution of the deed of gift in the joint names of the deceased and her grandson. The deceased alone presented the fixed deposit receipts for renewal. She could under the terms of the receipts receive the moneys to the entire exclusion of her grandson. In the circumstances, it cannot be held that bona fide possession and enjoyment of the property gifted was immediately assumed by the grandson and thenceforward retained by him to the entire exclusion of the deceased. The right retained by the deceased to have the receipts made out in her name jointly with her grandson and the power to recover the amount from the bank without the concurrence of her grandson clearly indicate that she was not excluded, but she had retained important benefits in herself in the fixed deposit receipts.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, Acting C.J.—Purnabai widow of Sagarmal Mody held on 1st April, 1953, three deposit receipts of the aggregate face value of Rs. 6,26,724-14-0 with the State Bank of Bikaner. By her letter dated 22nd July, 1953, Purnabai informed the bank that she intended to make a gift of the amounts of two out of the three receipts to Suryakant, son of her adopted son Satyanarayana, and requested that the receipts be renewed for three months in the joint names of and that the renewed fixed deposit receipts be sent to Satyanarayana at Bombay. Pursuant to this letter two fresh receipts were issued on 3rd August, 1953 for Rs. 5,00,000 and Rs. 45,793-4-0. It appears that a receipt for Rs. 80,931-10-0 was previously obtained in the joint names of Purnabai and Suryakant on 4th July, 1953.

On 16th August, 1953. Purnabai executed a deed of gift in favour of Suryakant in respect of the three receipts containing the following recitals :

“Out of natural love and affection I have towards the said Suryakant son of Satyanarayana I hand over to the said Satyanarayana as the father and natural guardian of the said Suryakant Fixed Deposit Receipts total for Rs. 6,26,724-14-0 * * * F. D. R. No. 222/8293. dated 3rd August, 1953 for Rs. 45,793-4-0 F.D. R. No. 221/8292, dated 3rd August, 1953 for Rs. 5,00,000 of the Bank of Bikaner Ltd., Jaipur and F. D. R. No. 11446, dated 4th July, 1953 for Rs. 80,931-10-0 of Bank of Bikaner Ltd., Jhunjhunu in the name of Purnabai Sagarmal and Suryakant Satyanarayana Mody payable to either or survivor as and by way of gift to the said Suryakant on the 15th of August, 1953 and that the said Satyanarayana for and on behalf of and as the natural guardian of the said Suryakant accepted the said gift of Rs. 6,26,724-14-0 * * * * gifted by me as aforesaid.”

The gift deed contained a confirmation by Satyanarayana that he had accepted the gift for and on behalf of and as natural guardian of Suryakant, “to the intent and effect that the said Suryakant shall be the absolute owner of the sum gifted.”

On 17th August, 1953, Purnabai addressed a letter to the manager of the bank enclosing a copy of the declaration of gift and intimated that her grandson Suryakant was the sole owner of the amount of the two fixed deposit receipts and till Suryakant S. Mody attained the age of majority the receipts should remain in the joint names as they then stood.

From time to time, Purnabai presented the receipts for renewal when they matured and obtained fresh receipts in the joint names of herself and Suryakant. On 25th August, 1955 the receipt for Rs. 80,931-10-0 was encashed and out of the amount of Rs. 86,732 realized, Rs. 5,000 were invested in the name of Suryakant in National Savings Certificates. The balance was also deposited alone with a firm in Bombay also in the name of Suryakant alone. The other two receipts were renewed in the joint names of Purnabai and Suryakant.

After the death of Purnabai on 15th February, 1956, the two receipts were encashed by Suryakant. The Assistant Controller of Estate duty in proceedings for assessment of estate duty held inter alia that possession and enjoyment of the gifted property was not assumed by the donee to the entire exclusion of the donor, and on that account the amount of the two receipts and interest thereon formed part of the estate of Purnabai and was liable to estate duty. Regarding the third receipt for Rs. 80,931-10-0 the Assistant Controller observed that even though the earlier receipt was discharged on 25th August, 1955 i.e. within two years of the death of Purnabai and the amount was invested in the name of Suryakant, by virtue of the Estate Duty Act the amount held in the name of Suryakant alone, was for assessment of estate duty liable to be included in the estate of Purnabai.

In appeal the Central Board of Revenue confirmed the order. The Board held that at all material times during the currency of the fixed deposit Purnabai had the right to receive the money from the bank by giving discharge for the same and that whenever the fixed deposit receipts matured during the lifetime of Purnabai, the receipts were, in fact, discharged by her alone and in the circumstances it could not be said that the property was held by the donee to the entire exclusion of the donor.

The Board of Revenue referred the following question to the High Court of Rajasthan for opinion :

“ Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the sum of Rs. 6,85,193 was correctly included in the estate of the deceased as property deemed to pass on her death under section 10 of the Estate Duty Act, 1953? ”

The High Court of Rajasthan answered the question in the affirmative, With certificate granted by the High Court this appeal has been preferred.

The deposit receipts were renewed from time to time after 16th August, 1953, in the joint names of Purnabai and Suryakant. Till 25th August, 1955, under their terms the receipts could be encashed by either or the survivor. Even after Purnabai made a gift of the amount represented by the three receipts, she continued to obtain the receipts in the joint names, presumably with the object of not parting with control over those receipts.

Counsel for the appellant however contended that the fixed deposit receipts were held by Purnabai in her name as benamidar for Suryakant. Counsel placed strong reliance upon the letters dated 22nd July, 1953, 17th August, 1953 and the terms of the deed of gift dated 16th August, 1953. By the letter dated 22nd July, 1953 the manager of the bank was informed that in respect of two out of the three receipts Purnabai intended to make a gift and the manager was requested that the receipts be made in the joint names of Purnabai and Suryakant. It was expressly recited in the letter :

“ I intend to gift the entire amount of the receipts to my grandson Mr. Suryakant S. Mody hence you are requested to prepare the receipts in joint names as under :

Purnabai Sagarmall Mody and/or Suryakant S. Mody payable to either or survivor.”

The deed of gift also recites that Purnabai had made a gift of the amount of Rs. 6,26,724-14-0 represented by the previous receipts in favour of Suryakant, and that the gift was accepted by Satyanarayana on behalf of Suryakant. The letter 17th August, 1953, recites that a copy of the deed of declaration of gift was sent to the bank for record and information and proceeds to state :

“ Further I would like to state that now Suryakant S. Mody is the sole owner of the above fixed deposit receipts in question till Suryakant S. Mody attains majority the receipts should remain in joint names as it stands now.”

It is clear that Purnabai desired to make a gift of the amount represented by the previous deposit receipts and did in fact execute a deed of gift. The bank had notice of the gift deed. Counsel for the appellant contends that Purnabai did everything possible to divert herself of her interest in the money held by her, in deposit with the bank, and retained no interest therein and that in obtaining renewal of the receipts in the joint names of herself and of Suryakant, she was merely a benamidar and in any event was acting on behalf of Suryakant. Counsel further contends that the bank having notice of the gift could not have parted with the money except only for the benefit of the minor and by obtaining renewal of the receipt in favour of the minor Suryakant and Purnabai, the latter retained no possession or enjoyment of the money represented by the receipts. Counsel invited our attention to a decision of the Madras High Court in *Imperial Bank of India, Madras v. S. Krishnamurthi and another*¹, in which Beasley, C. J. speaking for the Court observed that when a bank having notice that the administrators of the estate of the depositor intended to commit a breach of trust by seeking to invest monies contrary to express directions of the will paid out the money, the bank was liable to make good to the beneficiary the money deposited by the testator. In that case one Naidu had deposited a sum of money with the Imperial Bank of India in fixed deposit. Naidu died having bequeathed by his will the amount deposited to his son Krishnamurthi who was then a minor. Naidu had appointed by his will two persons to be guardians of Krishnamurthi with authority to receive the amount in fixed deposit with the Imperial Bank and to apply the same for the maintenance and education of Krishnamurthi. The guardians obtained from the High Court of Madras grant of letters of administration with copy of the will annexed. After the death of one of the guardians the surviving guardian withdrew the money from the bank on the pretext that he wanted to invest it on more advantageous terms in house property or some other form of investment and misappropriated it. On attaining the age of majority Krishnamurthi sued the bank. It was held by the High Court that the bank knowing of the trust created by the will had parted with and delivered the amount deposited to the administrator who intended to commit a breach of the trust. The learned Chief Justice quoted a passage from Hart's Laws of Banking (End. 3) at page 159 that "A banker who receives into his possession moneys of which his customer to his knowledge became the owner in a fiduciary character, contracts the duty and to part with them at the mandate of his customer for purposes which are inconsistent with the customer's fiduciary character and duty," and upheld the claim of Krishnamurthi.

It is unnecessary to consider whether in the present case the investment was made by renewal of fixed deposit receipts after 16th August, 1953, for a purpose which the bank knew was inconsistent with Purnabai's fiduciary character and duty. We are not concerned in this case to decide whether the bank could have refused to pay the amount of the renewed deposit receipts if demanded by Purnabai. Whether the amount of deposit receipts was liable to estate duty must be determined on the true effect of section 10 of the Estate Duty Act 34 of 1953. Section 10 of that Act provides :

"Property taken under any gift, whenever made, shall be deemed to pass on the donor's death to the extent that bona fide possession and enjoyment of it was not immediately assumed by the donee and thenceforward retained to the entire exclusion of the donor or of any benefit to him by contract or otherwise :

Provided that the property shall not be deemed to pass by reason only that it was not, as from the date of the gift, exclusively retained as aforesaid, if by means of the surrender of the reserved benefit or otherwise, it is subsequently enjoyed to the entire exclusion of the donor or of any benefit to him for at least two years before the death. Provided....."

The phraseology of the section is somewhat involved. The purport of the section is however, clear. The section clearly means that if in respect of any property which is gifted, bona fide possession and enjoyment is not immediately assumed by the donee and thenceforward retained by him to the entire exclusion of the donor or of any benefit to him therein the property gifted shall not be excluded from the estate subject to estate duty.

The question which must be determined therefore is whether in the present case the donee did under the deed of gift immediately assume bona fide possession and enjoyment of the fixed deposit receipts gifted to him, and thenceforward retained the same to the entire exclusion of Purnabai or of any benefit arising to her by contract or otherwise. The conduct of Purnabai clearly indicates that she had no intention to part with control over the property ; the deposit receipts were obtained in joint names, and Purnabai had authority to withdraw the amount from the bank, without consulting the guardian of Suryakant. The deposit receipts were renewed on several occasions even after the execution of the deed of gift in the joint names of Purnabai and Suryakant. Purnabai alone presented the fixed deposit receipts for renewal. She could under the terms of the receipts receive the moneys to the entire exclusion of Suryakant. We are unable to hold, in the circumstances, that bona fide possession and enjoyment of the property gifted was immediately assumed by Suryakant and thenceforward retained by him to the entire exclusion of Purnabai. The right retained by Purnabai to have the receipts made out in her name jointly with Suryakant and the power to recover the amount from the bank without the concurrence of Suryakant clearly indicate that she was not excluded, but she had retained important benefits in herself in the fixed deposit receipts.

It is true that the third receipt was encashed during the life time of Purnabai and the amount was invested in the name of Suryakant alone. But the encashment and reinvestment were within two years of the death of Purnabai and the amounts so reinvested were liable to be included in the estate of Purnabai.

The argument that fixed deposit receipts had remained exclusively in the possession of Satyanarayana as guardian of Suryakant and they were obtained by him from Purnabai for the purpose of renewal is not supported by any evidence. There is also no evidence that in obtaining the receipts in the joint names Purnabai acted as a guardian of Suryakant nor that she was a benamidar of Suryakant. We are of the view that the High Court was right in answering the question against the appellant.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT:—J. C. SHAH AND G. K. MITTER, JJ.

Income-tax Officer Special Investigation Circle-B, Meerut

v.

M/s. Seth Brothers and Others etc.

... Respondents.

Income-tax Act (XLIII of 1961), section 132 (as amended in 1965)—Search and seizure—Scope of powers—Warrant of authorisation—Whether should specify particulars of documents and books of account—Large number of documents seized—Some documents found not relevant—Whether vitiates search and seizure—Books of account and other documents in respect of other business carried on by partners of assessee-firm—Whether relevant—Whether can be seized—Failure to place identification marks on documents—Effect of—Presence of police officers during search—Effect of.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 226—Writ Jurisdiction—Search and seizure under Income-tax Act—Scope of power of High Court.

On 14th March, 1963, the Income-tax Officer, Meerut, issued a notice under section 148 of the Income-tax Act, 1961, intimating the respondents that there was reason to believe that their income chargeable to tax had escaped assessment and it was proposed to reassess this income for the assessment year 1954-55. In response to the notice a return was filed under protest. In the meantime information was received by the Income-tax Commissioner, U.P., that the respondents were maintaining "duplicate records" and were evading assessment of their true income and that it was necessary to seize the records which may be found in the premises in which the respondents carried on the business. The Commissioner issued an order authorising two Income-tax Officers to search the premises and seize books and documents which would be relevant or useful for purposes of reassessment proceedings. The Income-tax Officers conducted the search and seized a number of books and documents. The respondents filed a petition in the High Court to quash the proceedings and the High Court held that the action of the Commissioner and the Income-tax Officers who purported to act in pursuance of the letters of authorisation was mala fide and quashed the proceedings. On appeal to the Supreme Court, Held, that the decision of the High Court cannot be accepted as correct.

Since by the exercise of the power under section 132 of the Income-tax, Act, 1961 a serious invasion is made upon the rights, privacy and freedom of the taxpayer, the power must be exercised strictly in accordance with the law and only for the purposes for which the law authorises it to be exercised. If the action of the officer issuing the authorization, or of the designated officer is challenged the officer concerned must satisfy the Court about the regularity of his action. If the action is maliciously taken or power under the section is exercised for a collateral purpose, it is liable to be struck down by the Court. If the conditions for exercise of the power are not satisfied the proceeding is liable to be quashed. But where power is exercised bona fide, and in furtherance of the statutory duties of the tax officers any error of judgment on the part of the officer will not vitiate the exercise of the power.

Where the Commissioner entertains the requisite belief and for reasons recorded by him authorises a designated officer to enter and search premises for books of account and documents relevant to or useful for any proceeding under the Act, the Court in a petition by an aggrieved person cannot be asked to substitute its own opinion whether an order authorising search should have been issued. Again, any irregularity in the course of entry, search and seizure committed by the officer acting in pursuance of the authorisation will not be sufficient to vitiate the action taken, provided the officer has in executing the authorisation acted bona fide.

The Act and the Rules do not require that the warrant of authorisation should specify the particulars of documents and books of account : a general authorisation to search for and seize documents and books of account relevant to or useful for any proceeding complies with the requirements of the Act and the Rules. It is for the officer making the search to exercise his judgment and seize or not to seize any documents or books of account. An error committed by the officer in seizing documents which may ultimately be found not to be useful for or relevant to the proceeding under the Act will not be itself vitiate the search, nor will it entitle the aggrieved person to an omnibus order releasing all documents seized.

The aggrieved party may move a competent Court for an order releasing the documents seized. In such a proceeding the officer who has made the search will be called upon to prove how the documents seized are likely to be useful for or relevant to a proceeding under the Act. If he is unable to do so, the Court may order that those documents be released.

The circumstance that a large number of documents have been seized is not a ground for holding that all documents seized are irrelevant or the action of the officer is mala fide.

Section 132 of the Income-tax Act does not require specific mention by description of each particular documents which has to be discovered on search : it is for the officer who is conducting the search to decide whether a particular document found on search is relevant for the purpose or not.

The mere fact that it may ultimately be found that some document seized was not directly relevant to any proceeding under the Act or that another officer with more information at his disposal may have come to a different conclusion will not be a ground for setting aside the order and the proceeding for search and seizure.

The books of account and other documents in respect of other business carried on by the partners of the firm of the assessee would certainly be relevant because they would tend to show inter-relation between the dealing and supply materials having a bearing on the case of evasion of income-tax by the firm. The fact that the Income-tax Officers made a search for and seized the books of account and documents in relation to business carried on in the names of other firms and companies will not make the search and seizure illegal.

In the absence of any thing to show that the documents were either replaced or tampered with, failure to place identification marks will not by itself supply a ground for holding that the search was mala fide. A delay of two months in issuing a notice calling for explanation is also not a ground for holding that the action was taken for a collateral purpose.

By the express terms of the Act and the Rules the Income tax Officer may obtain the assistance of a police officer. By sub-section (13) of section 132 the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, relating to searches apply, so far as may be, to searches under section 132. Thereby it is only intended that the officer concerned shall issue the necessary warrant, keep present respectable persons of the locality to witness the search, and generally carry out the search in the manner provided by the Code of Criminal Procedure. But sub-section (2) of section 132 does not imply that the limitations prescribed by section 165 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are also incorporated therein.

In appropriate cases a writ-petition may lie challenging the validity of the action on the ground of absence of power or on a plea that proceedings were taken maliciously or for a collateral purpose. But normally the High Court in such a case does not proceed to determine merely on affidavits important issues of fact especially where serious allegations of improper conduct are made against public servants.

Held on facts :—It cannot be held on the evidence that in keeping police officers present at the time of the search in the house of influential businessmen to ensure the protection of the officers and the record, excessive force was used.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—M/s. Seth Brothers run a flour mill in the name and style of "Imperial Flour Mills." From 1st April, 1953 to March, 1956 the business was carried on by M/s. Seth Brothers, of which the partners were Baikunth Nath and Vishwa Nath. Between March 1956 and 31st March, 1957 the business was carried on by Baikunth Nath, Vishwa Nath, Dr. Manmohan Nath, Mrs. Rama Rahi and Mrs. Sushila Devi. On 7th April, 1957 Mrs. Prem Lata was admitted as a partner. The partners were engaged in carrying on other businesses in the names of Seth Brothers (Private) Ltd., Nath Brothers (Private) Ltd., and Meerut Cold Storage and General Mills.

The owners of the business were, year after year, assessed to income-tax in respect of the income arising in the course of the business. On 14th March, 1963 the Income-tax Officer, Meerut, issued a notice under section 148 of the Income-tax Act, 1961, intimating M/s. Seth Brothers that there was reason to believe that their income chargeable to tax had escaped assessment and it was proposed to re-assess this income for the assessment year 1954-55. In response to the notice Baikunth Nath and Vishwa Nath filed a return under protest. In the meantime information was received by the Income-tax Commissioner, U.P., that M/s. Seth Brothers were maintaining "duplicate records" and were evading assessment of their true income and that it was necessary to seize the records which may be found at "Shanti Niketan", Meerut in which M/s. Seth Brothers carried on the business of Imperial Flour Mill and other businesses. The Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., on 29th May, 1963 drew up a memorandum that on a report of the Income-tax Officer, D-Ward, Meerut, requesting for authorisation under section 132 of the Income-tax Act, 1961, to enter and search the premises of M/s. Seth Brothers, he was satisfied about the need for the issue of the authorisation. The Commissioner also issued an order in Form 45 prescribed under Rule 112 of the Income-tax Rules, 1962, authorising two Income-tax Officers—R. R. Agarwal and R. Kapoor—to enter the premises known as “Shanti Niketan”, at Meerut and to search for and seize such books and documents as may be considered relevant or useful for the purpose of the proceeding of reassessment, and to place identification marks thereon and to convey them to the Income-tax Office.

On the 7 and 8 of June, 1963 the premises described in the order were searched and account books and certain documents found therein were seized and were carried to the Income-tax Office. M/s. Seth Brothers then moved a petition in the High Court of Allahabad for an order quashing the proceedings of the Income-tax Authorities. Petitions were also filed by Nath Brothers (Private) Ltd., Seth Brothers (Private) Ltd., and Seth Brothers, Meerut, for the same relief. By these petitions they claimed writs of certiorari quashing the letters authorising search of the premises at Shanti Niketan, and writs of mandamus directing the Income-tax Officer to return all the books, papers and articles seized during the search and for writs of prohibition restraining the Income-tax Department from using any information gathered as a result of the search. It was submitted by the petitioners that K. L. Ananda, Income-tax Officer, and Satya Prakash an “ex-employee” of M/s. Seth Brothers had given false information to the Deputy Director of Inspection with a view to blackmail the partners of M/s. Seth Brothers, and that the order of search was made by the Commissioner of Income-tax at the direction of the Deputy Directors of Inspection, that the action of the Income-tax Officer in searching the premises and in seizing the books of account was malicious and that in any event section 132 of the Income-tax Act 1961, and the rules framed thereunder, were violative of the fundamental freedoms, guaranteed by Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 31 of the Constitution.

Affidavits were filed on behalf of M/s. Seth Brothers. It was affirmed that “the so-called duplicate records” seized by the Income-tax Officer were copies of the books of account and that action had been taken by the Commissioner of Income-tax, not on his own initiative but at the behest of the Directorate of Inspection. In reply to the contentions raised by the assessee several affidavits sworn by Officers of the Income-tax Department were filed. The Commissioner of Income-tax stated in his affidavit that before issuing letters of authorisation and the warrant of search he was satisfied that it was necessary to take action under section 132 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1961, and that the letters of authorisation were not issued at the direction of the Directorate of Inspection. The Income-tax Officers stated that in consequence of the search a large number of “duplicate account books and records” maintained by M/s. Seth Brothers were recovered that the search was carried out according to law and in the presence of two of the partners of the firm and their advocates, that all the documents seized were relevant for the purpose of reassessment, that there was close connection between the different business activities of the partners of M/s. Seth Brothers and that all the documents which were seized were in relation to those activities. The Deputy Director of Inspection in his affidavit stated that he did not give any direction to the Commissioner to issue authorisation for search and seizure.

The High Court of Allahabad held on a consideration of the averments made in the affidavits filed on behalf of M/s. Seth Brothers and the Revenue that “there was reason to believe” that instructions were issued by the Directorate of Inspection for a general raid and seizure of all account books and papers which may be found at the premises of the firm; that some out of the documents seized by the Income-tax Officers were irrelevant for the purpose of any proceeding under the Act; that besides the documents belonging to M/s. Seth Brothers the Income-tax Officers seized documents relating to the transactions of the allied concerns; that marks of identification were not placed on certain documents at the time they were seized; that the documents seized were detained by the Income-tax Officer for more than two months; and that the police force employed during the raid was excessive. The High Court concluded :—

“It is true that there was no ill-will between the * * * (partners of Seth Brothers) on one side and respondent Nos 1, 3 and 4 (Commissioners of Income-tax, U. P.

and Punjab and Income-tax Officer, Special Investigation Circle-A, Meerut) on the other side. But the extent of the seizure was far beyond the limits of section 132 of the Act. The action was mala fide in the sense that, there was abuse of power conferred on Income-tax Officers by section 132 of the Act. The act being mala fide, the proceedings should be quashed by this Court by issuing a writ of mandamus."

The Income-tax Officers, S. I. Circle, has appealed to this Court with Special Leave.

Section 132 as originally enacted by Act 43 of 1961 was substituted by a modified provision by the Finance Act of 1964 which in its turn was replaced by section 1 of the Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1965. By section 8 of that Act it was provided inter alia, that any search of a building or place by an.....Income-tax Officer purported to have been made in pursuance of sub-section (1) of section 132 of the principal Act shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with the provisions of that sub-section as amended by the Act of 1965 as if those provisions were in force on the day the search was made.....The relevant part of section 132 as substituted by the Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1965 may, therefore, be set out :

"132. Search and seizure.—(1) Where the Director of Inspection or the Commissioner, in consequence of information in his possession, has reason to believe that—

(a) any person to whom a summons under sub-section (1) of section 37 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), or under sub-section (1) of section 131 of this Act, or a notice under sub-section (4) of section 22 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or under sub-section (1) of section 142 of this Act was issued to produce, or cause to be produced, any books of account or other documents has omitted or failed to produce, or cause to be produced, such books of account or other documents as required by such summons or notice, or

(b) any person to whom a summons or notice as aforesaid has been or might be issued will not, or would not, produce or cause to be produced, any books of account or other documents which will be useful for, or relevant to, any proceeding under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), or under this Act, or

(c) any person is in possession of any money, bullion, jewellery or other valuable article or thing and such money, bullion, jewellery or other valuable article or thing represents either wholly or partly income or property which has not been disclosed for the purposes of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), or this Act (hereinafter in this section referred to as the undisclosed income or property), he may authorise any Deputy Director of Inspection, Inspecting Assistant Commissioner, Assistant Director of Inspection or Income-tax Officer (hereinafter referred to as the authorised officer) to—

(i) enter and search any building or place where he has reason to suspect that such book of account, other documents, money, bullion, jewellery or other valuable article or thing are kept ;

(ii) break open the lock of any door, box, locker, safe, almirah or other receptacle for exercising the powers conferred by clause (i) where the keys thereof are not available ;

(iii) seize any such books of account, other documents, money, bullion, jewellery or other valuable article or thing found as a result of such search ;

(iv) place marks of identification on any books of account or other documents, or make or cause to be made extracts or copies therefrom ;

(v) make a note or an inventory of any such money, bullion, jewellery or other valuable article or thing.

(2) The authorised officer may requisition the services of any police officer or of any officer of the Central Government or of both, to assist him for all or any of the purposes specified in sub-section (1) and it shall be the duty of every such officer to comply with such requisition.

(3) The authorised officer may, where it is not practicable to seize any such books of account, other document, money, bullion, jewellery or other valuable article or thing, serve an order on the owner or the person who is in immediate possession or control thereof that he shall not remove, part with or otherwise deal with it except with the previous permission of such officer and such officer may take such steps as may be necessary for ensuring compliance with this sub-section.

* * * *

(8) The books of account or other documents seized under sub-section (1) shall not be retained by the authorised officer for a period exceeding one hundred and eighty days from the date of the seizure unless the reasons for retaining the same are recorded by him in writing and the approval of the Commissioner for such retention is obtained:

Provided *

(13) The provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (V of 1898), relating to searches and seizure shall apply, so far as may be, to searches and seizure under sub-section (1)."

The Central Board of Direct Taxes has, in exercise of the power conferred by section 295 (1) of the Act, framed, rule 112 prescribing the procedure to be followed by the Commissioner and the authorised officers.

The Commissioner or the Director of Inspection may after recording reasons order a search of premises, if he has reason to believe that one or more of the conditions in section 132 (1) exist. The order is in the form of an authorization in favour of a subordinate departmental officer authorising him to enter and search any building or place specified in the order, and to exercise the powers and perform the functions mentioned in section 132 (1). The officer so authorised may enter any building or place and make a search where he has reason to believe that any books of account or other documents which in his opinion will be useful for, or relevant to, any proceeding under the Act, may be found. The officer making a search may seize any books of account or other documents and place marks of identification on any such books of account or other documents, make or cause to be made extracts or copies therefrom and may make an inventory of any articles or things found in the course of any search which in his opinion will be useful for, or relevant to any proceeding under the Act and remove them to the Income-tax Office or prohibit the person in possession from removing them. He may also examine on oath any person in possession of or control of any books of account or documents or assets.

The section does not confer any arbitrary authority upon the Revenue Officers. The Commissioner or the Director of Inspection must have, in consequence of information, reason to believe that the statutory conditions for the exercise of the power to order search exist. He must record reasons for the belief and he must issue an authorization in favour of a designated officer to search the premises and exercise the power set out therein. The condition for entry into and making search of any building or place is the reason to believe that any books of account or other documents which will be useful for, or relevant to, any proceeding under the Act may be found. If the officer has reason to believe that any books of account or other documents would be useful for, or relevant to, any proceedings under the Act he is authorised by law to seize those books of account or other documents and to place marks of identification therein, to make extracts or copies therefrom and also to make a note or an inventory of any articles or other things found in the course of the search. Since by the exercise of the power a serious invasion is made upon the rights, privacy and freedom of the taxpayer, the power must be exercised strictly in accordance with the law and only for the purposes for which the law authorizes it to be exercised. If the action of the officer issuing the authorization, or of the designated officer is challenged the officer concerned must satisfy the Court about the regularity of his action. If the action is maliciously taken or power under the section is exercised for a collateral purpose, it is liable to be struck down by the Court. If the conditions for exercise of the power are not satisfied the proceeding is liable to be quashed. But where power is exercised bona fide and in furtherance of the statutory duties of the tax officers any error of judgment on the part of the officers will not vitiate the exercise of the power. Where the Commissioner entertains the requisite belief and for reasons recorded by him authorises a designated officer to enter and search premises for books of account and documents relevant to or useful for any proceeding under the Act, the Court in a petition by an aggrieved person cannot be asked to substitute its own opinion whether an order authorising search should have been issued. Again, any irregularity in the course of entry, search and seizure committed by the officer acting in pursuance of the authorisation will not be sufficient to vitiate the action taken, provided the officer has in executing the authorisation acted bona fide.

The Act and the Rules do not require that the warrant of authorisation should specify the particulars of documents and books of account: A general authorisation to search for and seize documents and books of account relevant to or useful for any proceeding complies with the requirements of the Act and the Rules. It is for the officer making the search to exercise his judgment and seize or not to seize any documents or books of account. An error committed by the officer in seizing documents which may ultimately be found not to be useful for or relevant to the proceeding under the Act will not by itself vitiate the search, nor will it entitle the aggrieved person to an omnibus order releasing all documents seized.

The aggrieved party may undoubtedly move a competent Court for an order releasing the documents seized. In such a proceeding the officer who has made the search will be called upon to prove how the documents seized are likely to be useful for or relevant to a proceeding under the Act. If he is unable to do so, the Court may order that those documents be released. But the circumstance that a large number of documents have been seized is not a ground for holding that all documents seized are irrelevant or the action of the officer is mala fide. By the express terms of the Act and the Rules the Income-tax Officer may obtain the assistance of a police officer. By sub-section (13) of section 132 the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, relating to searches apply, so far as may be, to searches under section 132. Thereby it is only intended that the officer concerned shall issue the necessary warrant, keep present respectable persons of the locality to witness the search, and generally carry out the search in the manner provided by the Code of Criminal Procedure. But sub-section (2) of section 132 does not imply that the limitations prescribed by section 165 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are also incorporated therein.

In *Income-tax Officer, A-Ward, Agra, and others v. Firm Madan Mohan Damma Mal and another*¹, it was observed that the issue of a search warrant by the Commissioner is not a judicial or a quasi-judicial act and even if the Commissioner is enjoined to issue a warrant only when in fact there is information in his possession in consequence of which he may form the necessary belief, the matter is not thereby subject to scrutiny by the Court. Section 132 of the Income-tax Act does not require specific mention by description of each particular document which has to be discovered on search; it is for the officer who is conducting the search to decide whether a particular document found on search is relevant for the purpose or not. That statement of the law, in our judgment, accurately states the true of effect section 132. The mere fact that it may ultimately be found that some document seized was not directly relevant to any proceeding under the Act or that another officer with more information at his disposal may have come to a different conclusion will not be a ground for setting aside the order and the proceeding for search and seizure.

The authorisation issued by the Commissioner was, in the view of the High Court, open to challenge on the ground that the Commissioner did not apply his mind to the existence of circumstances which justified the exercise of the power to issue authorisation. The action of the Income-tax Officers who searched the premises was quashed on the ground that they seized some documents which were irrelevant to the process of re-assessment. In our judgment, in reaching their conclusion that the Commissioner acted at the behest of the Director of Inspection, the High Court ignored important evidence on the record. It was averred in the petition of M/s. Seth Brothers that :—

(56) "It appears that the Deputy Director of Inspection at the instigation of Shri K L Nanca and Sri Satya Prakash, without making any enquiries or having any material, ordered a raid for search and seizure of all the account books and papers, which could be found."

(57) "That, according to such directions of the Directorate, the Commissioner of Income-tax, UP Lucknow, was made to issue authorisations under section 132 of the Act of 1961 in favour of opposite Parties Nos 3 and 4 to search out the premises of 'Shanti Niketan', Civil Lines, Meerut, and to seize the account books, documents and papers, which could be recovered therefrom."

The High Court observed that even though a number of affidavits were filed by the Income-tax Authorities, no reference to paragraph 56 of the writ petition was made and the "only affidavit filed by Shri A. L. Jha, Commissioner of Income-tax was vague in the extreme". The allegation in paragraphs 56 and 57 of the writ petition made on definite allegation that the Commissioner of Income-tax acted at the behest of the Deputy Director of Inspection and not on his own satisfaction reached in consequence of information in his possession. In the verification clause Baikunth Nath stated that the contents of paragraph 57 were true on information received from the Deputy Director of Inspection (Investigation) Income-tax, Central Revenue Buildings, New Delhi, but said nothing about the contents of paragraph 56. The affidavits filed on behalf of the Income-tax Department specifically denied the allegations made in paragraphs, 56 and 57. R. R. Agarwal (one of the Income-tax Officer authorised to conduct the search) in his affidavit affirmed that the letter of authorisation was issued to him by the Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., Lucknow, after the Commissioner had been satisfied on the report submitted by the deponent.

The Commissioner of Income-tax, Mr. A. L. Jha, by his affidavit denied that letters of authorisation were issued under the directions of the Deputy Director of Inspection or anybody connected with Directorate. He also stated that in respect of the case of M/s. Seth Brothers some information was brought to him by the Directorate and that information corroborated the report made to him by Mr. R. R. Agarwal and that after taking into consideration all those materials he was satisfied that a search of the premises of M/s. Seth Brothers "was called for" and that he issued the impugned letters of authorisation.

Mr. R. V. Ramaswamy, Deputy Director of Inspection (Investigation), in paragraph 6 of his affidavit denied that the raid or search of the premises of M/s. Seth Brothers was ordered by him.

The affidavit of R. Kapur, Income-tax Officer, Special Investigation Circle, who was authorised by the Commissioner of Income-tax to make the search is also relevant. Mr. Kapur averred that some information was received by Mr. R. R. Agarwal from which it appeared that the firm of M/s. Seth Brothers and its partners were "evading tax by maintaining duplicate a sets of accounts" and by suppressing relevant documents and papers from the Department; that Mr. R. R. Agarwal made written request to the Commissioner of Income-tax for letters of authorisation in order to carry out the search of the assessee's premises and in pursuance thereof on 29th May, 1963 the Commissioner of Income-tax issued three authorisation letters, two in favour of Mr. R. R. Agarwal and one in favour of the deponent authorising them to carry out the search in accordance with the terms of the authorisation letters.

In this state of the record we are unable to agree with the High Court that the letters of authorisation were issued by the Commissioner of Income-tax at the direction of the Director of Inspection (Investigation). The attention of the Court was presumably not invited to the relevant paragraphs of the affidavits of the Officers concerned.

It is true that a large number of documents were seized from the premises of M/s. Seth Brothers but that has by itself no direct bearing on the question whether the Income-tax Officer acted mala fide. If the Income-tax Officer in making a search had reason to believe that any books of account or other documents useful for, or relevant to, any proceeding under the Act may be found, he may make a search for and seize those books of account and other documents. Some books, maps of the cold storage, assessment returns and doctor's prescriptions were seized by the Income-tax Officer. It appears, however, from the inventory that a large number of documents which related to the business of the assessee and their allied concerns were also seized. It would be impossible merely from the circumstance that some of the documents may be shown to have no clear or direct relevance to any proceeding under the Act, that the entire search and seizure was made not in bona fide discharge of official duty but for a collateral purpose. The suggestion that the books of account and other documents which could be taken possession of should only be those which directly related to the business carried on in the name of M/s. Seth Brothers has, in our judgment, no substance. The books of account and other documents in respect of other business carried on by the partners of the firm of the assessee would certainly be relevant because they would tend to show interrelation between the dealings and supply materials having a bearing on the case of evasion of income-tax by the firm. We are unable to hold that because the Income-tax Officer made a search for and seized the books of account and documents in relation to business carried on in the names of other firms and companies, the search and seizure were illegal.

It is also said that marks of identification were not placed on several documents. Assuming that this allegation is true, in the absence of anything to show that the documents were either replaced or tampered with, that irregularity will not by itself supply a ground for holding that the search was mala fide. A delay of two months in issuing a notice calling for explanation is also not a ground for holding that the action was taken for a collateral purpose.

It is not disputed that assistance of the police may be obtained in the course of a search. The High Court has, however, found that the police force employed was excessive. But we are unable to hold that on the evidence, in keeping police officers present at the time of the search in the house of influential businessmen to ensure the protection of the officers and the record, excessive force was used.

We accordingly see no good grounds to accept the finding recorded by the High Court that the manner in which the search and seizure were conducted "left no room for doubt that the Income-tax Officer did not apply his mind and formed no opinion regarding the relevancy or usefulness of the account books and documents for any proceedings under the Income-tax Act". The High Court accepted that the correctness of the opinion actually formed by the Income-tax Officer was not open to scrutiny in a writ petition, but in their view no opinion was in fact formed by the Officer and the search and seizure of documents, and books of account must on that account be held as made in excess of the powers conferred upon the Income-tax Officer and mala fide. For these observations we find no warrant. The Income-tax Officers concerned have sworn by their affidavits that they did in fact form the requisite opinion under section 132 of the Act and the other evidence and the circumstances do not justify us in discarding that assertion.

These proceedings were brought before the High Court by way of a writ petition under Article 226 of the Constitution before any investigation was made by the Income-tax Officer pursuant to the action taken by them. In appropriate cases a writ petition may lie challenging the validity of the action on the ground of absence of power or on a plea that proceedings were taken maliciously or for a collateral purpose. But normally the High Court in such a case does not proceed to determine merely on affidavit important issues of fact especially where serious allegations of improper conduct are made against public servants. The Income-tax Officers who conducted the search asserted that they acted in good faith in discharge of official duties and not for any collateral purpose. The Commissioner of Income-tax also denied that he acted at the direction of the Deputy Director of Inspection and that case was supported by the Deputy Director of Inspection. If the learned Judges of the High Court were of the view that the question was one in respect of which an investigation should be made in a petition for the issue of a writ, they should have directed evidence to be taken viva voce. The High Court could not, on the assertions by the partners of the firm which were denied by the Income-tax Officer, infer that the premises of M/s. Seth Brothers were searched and documents were seized for a collateral purpose, merely from the fact that many documents were seized or that some of the documents seized marks of identification were not put or that the documents belonging to the "sister concerns" of the "Imperial Flour Mills" were seized.

In our view the decision of the High Court that the action of the Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. and the Income-tax Officers who purported to act in pursuance of the letters of authorisation was mala fide, cannot be accepted as correct.

Counsel for M/s. Seth Brothers contended that opportunity may be given to the assessee to lead evidence viva voce to prove that the revenue officers acted for a collateral purpose. We do not entertain this request since we propose to remand the case to the High Court to decide questions which have not been decided. The applicants, if so advised, may move the High Court for leave to lead evidence. It is for the High Court to decide whether at this stage after nearly six years leave to examine witnesses should be granted.

The order passed by the High Court is set aside and the proceeding is remanded to the High Court. The High Court will deal with and dispose of the proceeding according to law. We may observe that Counsel for the Income-tax Officer did not invite us to decide the question of the vires of section 132 of the Income-tax Act on which the High Court has expressed no opinion. M/s. Seth Brothers and the other petitioners in the High Court will pay the costs of these appeals in this Court. There will be one hearing fee. Costs in the High Court will be costs in the petitions.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922)—Adventure in the nature of trade—Shares—Purchase and sale by assessee—Dealer or investor—Mixed question of law and fact.

The departmental authorities, the Tribunal in appeal and the High Court in reference held that the surplus realised by the assessee by the sale of certain shares was revenue income liable to tax under the Act. The department rejected the contentions put forward by the assessee that the purchase of certain shares of a company was with a view to secure its managing agency and had thereafter distributed the shares to the various associates of the assessee, that in regard to other shares the assessee purchased them when a new issue of the shares was not taken over by the public and that the shares were sold on account of "financial embarrassment" and not with the object of earning income. With Special Leave the assessee appealed.

Held, that the surplus is assessable as revenue income.

Whether a transaction is or is not an adventure in the nature of trade is a question of mixed law and fact ; in each case the legal effect of the facts found by the Tribunal on which the taxpayer could be treated as a dealer or an investor in shares, has to be determined.

Held on facts: the transaction in relation to certain shares, since the inception appears to be impressed with the character of a commercial transaction, entered into with a view to earn profit. Large block of shares was purchased at the ruling rates with borrowed money, and soon thereafter the shares were disposed of at a profit in small lots. Some of the shares were sold through brokers to strangers. The story of the assessee that some or all the shares were merely distributed to its associates is not proved. The interest which the firm had to pay for the amount borrowed for purchasing the shares were debited in the revenue account and was not claimed as a revenue allowance. In regard to certain other shares it was claimed that the shares were taken over because the public did not accept those shares. It was one of the objects of the assessee to finance its allied concerns and in taking over shares which the public did not subscribe the assessee was acting in the course of its business. The assessee commenced selling the shares soon after they were purchased. The story that the shares had to be sold on account of financial embarrassment is plainly belied by the circumstances that the assessee went on purchasing and the selling the same shares. The transactions were all stamped with the character of commercial transactions entered into with a profit motive and were not transactions in the nature of capital investment.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, Ag. C. J.—In proceedings for assessment to income-tax for the year 1946-47, the appellant-firm was assessed to tax in respect of an amount of Rs. 3,99,587 received by it as profit on sale of shares. The plea of the firm that the amount was "capital gain" and was on that account not taxable was rejected. In the view of the Income-tax Officer the profit arose from "a well planned business activity in which the assessee had fully utilised its resources". The Appellate Assistant Commissioner affirmed the decision of the Income-tax Officer. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal dismissed the appeal filed by the firm.

The Tribunal amongst others referred the following question to the High Court of Allahabad for opinion :

"Whether the surplus realised by the sale of the shares of Aluminium Corporation of India Ltd., J.K. Investment Trust and Raymond Woollen Mills amounting in aggregate to Rs. 3,99,587 or any part thereof was the revenue income of the assessee liable to tax under the Income-tax Act, 1922?"

The High Court answered the question in the affirmative. The firm has appealed to this Court with Special Leave.

In 1944 the firm purchased 50,000 ordinary shares of Raymond Woollen Mills Ltd., (hereinafter called "Raymond") for Rs. 69,75,255. The firm paid Rs. 7,00,000 on 4th November, 1944 and the balance on 6th December, 1944. The transaction was financed with the aid of a loan of Rs. 70 lakhs borrowed from the Hindustan Commercial Bank Ltd. The firm sold those shares through brokers between 23rd November, 1944 and 2nd April, 1946 and realised Rs. 72,42,200, the transaction resulting in a net profit of Rs. 2,66,945. Between 26th January, 1945 and 5th April, 1946 the firm also purchased 67 debentures, 5,582 preference shares and 18,576 ordinary shares of the Aluminium Corporation Ltd. (hereinafter called "Aluminium") for Rs. 8,57,480. Except 2,118 preference shares, the entire lot of shares with the debentures was sold for Rs. 7,05,957 between 1st February, 1945 and 13th August, 1945. Adjusting the cost of shares left on hand the firm realised a net profit of Rs. 60,278 in that transaction. The firm also purchased 290 "A" Class shares of J. K. Investment Trust Ltd., (hereinafter called "J. K. Trust") on 4th February, 1945 for Rs. 1,45,000 and sold the same on 22nd August, 1945 for Rs. 2,17,264, the transaction resulting in a net profit of Rs. 72,364.

Before the departmental authorities the firm claimed that it had taken over the entire share capital issued by Raymond with a view to secure its managing agency and had thereafter distributed the shares of Raymond to the various associates of the firm, and the transaction being one to facilitate acquisition of a capital asset being a capital investment, the profit realised by sale of the shares was not liable to be assessed to income-tax. The firm also claimed that when a part of the new issue of capital of Aluminium was not taken over by the public, the firm as financiers of the J. K. Group of Industries took over the shares and the debentures not subscribed within the time allowed. This transaction, it was contended, was also of the nature of capital investment. It was explained that the shares were sold on account of "financial embarrassment" and not with the object of earning income, and the profit realised by the sale did not attract tax. Similar contentions were also raised in respect of the shares of J. K. Trust. The departmental authorities rejected the contentions. The Tribunal agreed with them.

From the facts found by the Tribunal it is clear that for purchasing the Raymond shares, the firm paid Rs. 7,00,000 on 4th November, 1944, and the balance on 6th December, 1944, and commenced selling the shares on 23rd November, 1944. The contention that the shares were only distributed to the "allied concerns" is contrary to the findings of the Tribunal. Some of the shares were sold through brokers to outsiders. It is a significant circumstance that the firm parted with all the Raymond shares by 2nd April, 1946 and did not retain a single share after that date. It is true that some of the shares were held by J. K. Industries Ltd., and other J. K. concerns. But the transfer even to the J. K. concerns was in all cases for a profit. Within a few days after purchasing the Raymond shares, the "firm started unloading them", and the shares were never sold without making profit. The interest paid for the loan borrowed from the Hindustan Commercial Bank Ltd., for financing the purchase of Raymond shares was debited in the accounts as a revenue expenditure, and it was claimed as a permissible allowance. The firm used to promote companies. One of its activities was to finance "sister concerns" known as J. K. Industries. The case of the firm that the shares had to be sold on account of "financial embarrassment" was plainly untrue. The Tribunal was, in our judgment, right in inferring that the "purchase and sale of shares was a business activity which was continuous" and since the firm "had entered upon a well-planned scheme for earning profit and that in furtherance and execution of that profit making scheme they sold the shares at the opportune time" and that "the sale of the shares was not merely on account of pecuniary embarrassment" as claimed, the profit realised by the firm by the sales of shares could not be characterised as a casual receipt, nor could it be treated as accretion to a capital asset.

Strong reliance was, however, placed on a somewhat obscure statement in the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner :

"In the case of Raymond Woollen Mills shares it is clear beyond doubt that the purchase of the shares was a first rate business deal and that it was motivated by the desire and intention to acquire the managing agency of the Mills. If this is not an operation in the scheme of profit-making, it is not known what will constitute such a transaction."

Apparently there is a typographical error in the second clause of the first sentence, and the word "not" has by inadvertence been omitted otherwise in the context in which it occurs the clause has no meaning whatever. In any event as rightly pointed out by the High Court the reasons given by the Tribunal and the conclusion recorded by it are inconsistent with the finding that the shares were purchased with the sole object of acquiring the managing agency of the Raymond Woollen Mills and not with a view to make profits.

Counsel for the firm invited our attention to the decision of this Court in *Ramnarin Sons (P.) Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay*¹, in support of his contention that a transaction for purchasing shares with the object of acquiring the managing agency of a company will be regarded as capital investment and not a business in share. In *Ramnarin Sons case*¹, the appellant-company was a dealer in shares and securities and also carried on business as managing agents of other companies. With a view to acquire the managing agency of a company, the appellant-company purchased from the managing agents a large block of shares at a rate approximately 50 per cent above the ruling market rate. Two months later the appellant-company sold a small lot out of those shares at a loss and claimed the loss as a trading loss. It was found in that case by the Tribunal that the intention of purchasing the shares was not to acquire them as part of the stock-in-trade of taxpayer's business in shares but to facilitate the acquisition of the managing agency of the company which was in fact acquired, and on that account loss incurred by the sale of a small lot could be regarded only as a loss of capital nature. The Court observed in that case that the circumstance that the taxpayer had borrowed loans at interest to purchase the shares or that it was a dealer in shares and was authorised by its memorandum of association to deal in shares was of no effect. On a review of the evidence the Tribunal held that the shares were purchased with the object of acquiring the managing agency and with that view the High Court agreed.

Whether a transaction is or is not an adventure in the nature of trade is question of mixed law and fact ; in each case the legal effect of the facts found by the Tribunal on which the taxpayer could be treated as a dealer or an investor in shares, has to be determined. In the present case the transaction since the inception appears to be impressed with the character of a commercial transaction entered with a view to earn profit. Large block of shares was purchased at the ruling rates with borrowed money, and soon thereafter the shares were disposed of at a profit in small lots. Some of the shares were sold through brokers to strangers. The story of the firm that some or all the shares were merely "distributed" to its associates is not proved. The interest which the firm had to pay for the amount borrowed for purchasing the shares was debited in the revenue account and was claimed as a revenue allowance.

It was not the case of the firm that Aluminium and J. K. Trust shares were purchased for acquiring the managing agency. It was claimed that the shares were taken over because the public did not accept those shares. It was one of the objects of the firm to finance its allied concerns and in taking over shares which the public did not subscribe the firm was acting in the course of its business. The firm commenced selling the shares soon after they were purchased. Aluminium shares were purchased between 26th January, 1945 and 5th April, 1946 (except a few which were retained) and sold at profit. Whereas the first lot was purchased on 26th January, 1945, the first sale was made on 1st February, 1945. It could not be said that this was an investment in shares independent of the trading activity of the firm. The story that the shares had to be sold on account of financial difficulties is plainly belied by the circumstance that the firm went on purchasing and selling the Aluminium shares. J. K. Trust shares were purchased on 14th February, 1945 and were sold on 22nd August, 1945. Aluminium shares as well as J. K. Trust shares were sold at a profit and through brokers. These transactions were also stamped with the character of commercial transactions entered into with a profit motive and were not transactions in the nature of capital investments. The answer recorded by the High Court is therefore correct.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—M. Hidayatullah, Chief Justice AND G. K. MITTER, J.

Collector of Customs, Calcutta and others

v.

Soorajmull Nagarmull and another

... Respondents.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), section 46 (5-A)—Tax recovery—Garnishee notice—Payment out of Court—Certificate of payment by Court—Assessee-firm—Excess customs duty paid by assessee—Decree against Union of India—Garnishee notice by Income-tax Officer to Collector of Customs—Requiring payment of decree amount towards arrears of income-tax and penalty due by assessee—Payment by Collector—Amount adjusted towards super-tax due by assessee—Application by Collector to Court for certifying payment under the Code of Civil Procedure.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 21, rule 2.

The assessee-firm obtained decrees against the Union of India for refund of the excess customs duty paid by it. In pursuance of a garnishee notice issued under section 46 (5-A) of the Income-tax Act, the Collector of Customs paid the amounts to the Income-tax Department and the sums were adjusted towards the super-tax payable by the assessee. The Collector applied under Order 21, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, for certifying the payment made out of Court. The High Court refused to certify the payment on the grounds that the decrees were against the Union of India and not the Collector of Customs, that the sums were held by the Collector on behalf of the Union of India and not on behalf of the assessee, that the notice was defective inasmuch as it asked for payment towards income-tax and towards penalty, while the receipts which were granted to the assessee, stated that the amount was for super-tax. The Collector of Customs appealed.

Held that, in the case of a garnishee payment or one made under section 46 (5-A) of the Income-tax Act, if the payment has been legally made out of Court, there is no reason why the judgment-debtor cannot move the Court for getting the adjustment or payment certified as required under Order 21, rule 2, of the Code.

Order 21, rule 2, of the Code merely contemplates payment out of Court and says nothing about voluntary payment. A garnishee order can never by its nature lead to a voluntary payment and it is not to be thought that a garnishee order does not lead to the adjustment of the decree sufficient for being certified by the Court.

Held on facts : the Union of India operates through different Departments and a notice to the Collector of Customs was a proper notice to issue because it was the Collector of Customs who had in the first instance recovered the money and held it from the assessee, and under the decrees of the Court the Union of India was liable to refund it to the assessee. Since super-tax is also a kind of income-tax, the notice was not defective.

Appeals by Special Leave from the Judgments and Orders, dated the 22nd January, 1964, of the Calcutta High Court in Appeals Nos. 199 and 200 of 1962 from Original Order.

B. Sen, Senior Advocate (S.P. Nayar, Advocate, with him) for Appellants (In both the Appeals).

A.N. Sinha and D.N. Gupta, Advocates, for Respondent No. 1 (In both the Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hidayatullah, C. J.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Calcutta refusing to enter satisfaction of two decrees under Order 21, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, obtained by the respondents against the Union of India in the following circumstances.

* C. As. Nos. 429 and 430 of 1966.

The respondents, M/s. Soorajmull Nagarmull, imported spindle oil from Philadelphia. The firm was required to pay customs duty under Item 27 (3) of the First Schedule to the Tariff Act, 1934 at 27 per cent. ad valorem. The firm filed two suits asking for refund of excess duty claiming that the oil was dutiable only under Item 27 (8) at 2 as. 6 ps. per imperial gallon. The suits were filed against the Collector of Customs, the Assistant Collector of Customs for Appraisalment and the Union of India. The suits were successful and decrees were passed against the Union of India for refund of the amount charged in excess. In one suit the decree was for payment of Rs. 43,723 with interest at 6 per cent per annum from 1st day of April, 1952, until realisation. In the second suit the decree was for Rs. 75,925 with similar interest.

Since the firm had not paid a sum of Rs. 18,08,667.72 as tax, the Income-tax Officer, Circle II, Calcutta, issued a notice under section 46 (5-A) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, calling upon the Collector of Customs to pay the amount of the decree to him and stating that his receipt would constitute a good and sufficient discharge of the liability for refund to the firms. The Collector of Customs paid the amount into the Reserve Bank and the Reserve Bank issued receipts crediting the amount against super-tax due from the firm. The Collector of Customs then applied to the High Court of Calcutta under Order 21, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the adjustment of the decrees by this payment. This was refused by a learned single Judge who gave no reasons while dismissing the petition. On appeal to the Division Bench it was held by the Division Bench on 22nd January, 1964, that the adjustment of the decrees could not be granted. It is against the last order that the present appeals have been filed by Special Leave of this Court.

The High Court, in reaching the conclusion observed that the decrees were against the Union of India and not the Collector of Customs. Further the sums were held by the Collector of Customs on behalf of the Union of India and not on behalf of the firm. The High Court found the notice to be defective inasmuch as it asked for payment towards income-tax and towards penalty, while the receipts, which were granted to the firm, stated that the amount was for super-tax. On these three grounds, the High Court held that the learned single Judge was right in dismissing the application of the Collector of Customs for the adjustment of the decrees.

Order 21, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, takes note of payments out of Court to decree-holders and provides that where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly. It is also provided that the judgment-debtor also may inform the Court of such payment or adjustment, and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified.

The contention of the respondents in these appeals is that the decrees were not passed against the Collector of Customs but against the Union of India and that payment by the Collector of Customs was not a payment by the judgment-debtor. In our judgment this plea is highly technical. The amount was recovered by the Collector of Customs from the firm and was being held by the Union of India through the Collector of Customs. The Collector of Customs paid the money not on behalf of himself but on behalf of the Union of India and it must be treated as a proper payment of the amount to the firm. The objection of the respondent that it amounts to a payment by one Department of the Government to another, does not, in our opinion, hold much substance. It is also extremely technical. The Union of India operates through different Departments and a notice to the Collector of Customs in the circumstances was a proper notice to issue because it was the Collector of Customs who had in the first instance recovered this money and held it from the firm.

It is next contended that the notice is defective inasmuch as it shows that the money was lying with the Collector of Customs whereas it was, in fact, lying with the Union of India and that it was not money held by the Collector of Customs on behalf of the firm. Section 46 (5-A) of the Income-tax Act reads as follows :

“46. Mode and time of recovery.—.....

(5-A) The Income-tax Officer may at any time or from time to time, by notice in writing (a copy of which shall be forwarded to the assessee at his last address known to the Income-tax Officer) require any person from whom money is due or may become due to the assessee or any person who holds or may subsequently hold money for or on account of the assessee to pay to the Income-tax Officer either forthwith upon the money becoming due or being held or at or within the time specified in the notice (not being before the money becomes due or is held) so much of the money as is sufficient to pay the amount due by the taxpayer in respect of arrears of income-tax and penalty; or the whole of the money when it is equal to or less than that amount.....

Any person making any payment in compliance with a notice under this sub-section shall be deemed to have made the payment under the authority of the assessee and the receipt of the Income-tax Officer shall constitute a good and sufficient discharge of the liability of such person to the assessee to the extent of the amount referred to in the receipt.

Any person discharging any liability to the assessee after receipt of the notice referred to in this sub-section shall be personally liable to the Income-tax Officer to the extent of the liability discharged or to the extent of the liability of the assessee for tax and penalties, whichever is less.

If the person to whom a notice under this sub-section is sent fails to make payment in pursuance thereof to the Income-tax Officer, further proceedings may be taken by and before the Collector on the footing that the Income-tax Officer's notice has the same effect as an attachment by the Collector in exercise of his powers under the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 46.....”

Such notices of the Income-tax Officer are no more than a kind of a garnishee order issued to the person holding money which money is due to an assessee. The Collector of Customs had recovered this money and under the decrees of the Court the Union of India was liable to refund it to the firm. A garnishee order is issued to a debtor not to pay to his own creditor but to some third party who has obtained a final judgment against the creditor. By a parity of reasoning this amount, which was with the Collector of Customs, could be asked to be deposited with the Income-tax Authorities under section 46 (5-A). The argument is extremely technical for that the firm is entitled to get a double benefit of the decree, first by having the decretal amount paid to the benefit of the firm and then to recover it again from the Union of India.

It is contended lastly that the notice of the Income-tax Officer spoke of income-tax and/or penalty whereas the amount was taken towards payment of super-tax due from the firm. It is, however, conceded in the face of authorities cited at the Bar that the super-tax is also a kind of income-tax and, therefore, the notice could issue in the form it did. The leading case on the subject is in *In re Reckitt*¹, and learned Counsel for the respondents did not controvert the proposition laid down there. It is, however, argued on the authority of *Bidhoo Beebee v. Keshub Chunder Baboo and others*² *Mahiganj Loan Office, Ltd. v. Behari Lal Chaki*³ *A.P. Bagchi v. Mrs. F. Morgan*⁴ and *Thomas Skinner v. Ram Rachpal*⁵ that the payment which can be adjusted under Order 21, rule 2, is a voluntary payment by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder and that this is not a case of voluntary payment at all. The rulings which have been cited do not, in our opinion, apply here. This point was not considered in the High Court and seems to have been thought of here. Order 21, rule 2, merely contemplates payment out of Court and says nothing about voluntary payment. A garnishee order can never by its nature lead to a voluntary payment and it is not to be thought that a garnishee order does not lead to the adjustment of the decree sufficient for being certified by the Court. Payment by virtue of section 46 (5-A), as we have stated before, is in the nature of a garnishee payment and must, therefore, be subject to the same rule.

5. (1938) All I.J. 59 : I.L.R. (1938) All. 294 : A.I.R. 1938 All. 141.

The rulings themselves do not control the present matter. In *Bidhoo Beebee v. Keshub Chumder Baboo case*¹, the payment was not under a garnishee order but under the process of the Court issued in execution by arrest of the judgment-debtor. Contrasting what had happened in the case with the words of the second rule of Order 21 (then section 206 of the Code of 1859) the learned Judges observed that section 206 covers cases of voluntary payment. The debtor was protected by treating the payment as being made through the Court. The exact point we are dealing with was not before the Court. In *Mahiganj Loan Office Ltd. v. Behari Lal Chaki's case*², there was a scheme framed by the depositors of a banking company for return of their deposits in spite of opposition from decree-holder depositor of the company. The scheme was sanctioned by the Court. The scheme was binding on the decree-holder but it was not treated as an adjustment within Order 21, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The reason given was that the adjustment must be to the satisfaction of the decree-holder and must be with the consent of both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and not one which is made binding by operation of law. It is to be noticed that that was a payment to which the judgment-debtor had objected although it was binding on him. We see no reason for making a distinction between a voluntary payment out of Court and a payment out of Court which the law regards as valid. No reasons are given in the judgment why such a distinction should be made. In *Thomas Skinner v. Ram Rachpal's case*³, the payment was made in Court and not outside Court. This is the nearest case to the present one and but for his difference, it is reasonable to think that the learned Judges would have taken the same view of the matter as we have taken. The reason given by the learned Judges brings out the real object of the rule:

"Where a judgment-debtor makes payment outside the Court, the Court knows nothing about the payment and therefore rule 2, Order 21, ordains that the parties should inform the Court about the payment."

This object in our opinion is fully achieved when there is payment under a garnishee order outside the Court. In the case cited the Court knew of the payment and could give protection in other ways. In *A.P. Bagchi v. Mrs. P. Morgan's case*⁴, the payment was again without the consent of the judgment-debtor either in fact or in law. Too much emphasis appears to have been placed upon mutual understanding and too little on payment out of Court which is the essence of the rule. The case turned on whether there was any understanding between the parties that sums spent by the judgment-debtor on repairs would be set off against the decretal amount and therefore Order 21, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, was held inapplicable.

In none of the cases the point of a garnishee order was considered. In our opinion, a case of a garnishee payment or one made under section 46 (5-A) of the Income-tax Act of 1922 stands on a different footing and if the payment has been legally made out of Court in full and final discharge of the liability under a decree, there is no reason why the judgment-debtor cannot move the Court for getting the adjustment or payment certified. The payment was required to be certified under Order 21, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the order that it be so certified.

The appeals are accordingly allowed with costs here and in the High Court.

The State of Madhya Pradesh and others

Madhya Pradesh Municipal Corporation Act (XXIII of 1956), section 430 (3)—Scope—Cancellation of the confirmation of the bye-laws made by Municipal Committee for inspection and regulation of slaughter—Houses if infringes fundamental right under Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 19 (1)—Interpretation—entrustment of power to an administrative agency to grant or withhold a permit or licence in its uncontrolled discretion—Prohibition of fundamental right Article 19 (1)—Law, if ex facie violates Article 19 (1)—Burden of proof.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 19 (1) (g)—Interpretation—Fundamental right to carry on business—Prohibition of—Prohibition not in the interest of the general public, but merely to respect the susceptibilities and sentiments of a section of the people, if justified.

The bye-laws of the Jabalpur Municipality permitted slaughter of bulls and bullocks. A licence had to be obtained for that purpose. Slaughter of animals in places outside the premises fixed by the Municipality was prohibited by section 257 (3) of the M. P. Municipal Corporation Act, and sale of meat within the area of the Municipality of the animals not slaughtered in the premises fixed by the Municipality was also prohibited. Under the notification by which the bye-laws were issued in 1948, bulls and bullocks could be slaughtered in premises fixed for that purpose. But by the notification dated 12th January, 1967, confirmation of the bye-laws insofar as they related to bulls and bullocks was cancelled. The effect of that notification was to prohibit the slaughter of bulls and bullocks within the Municipality of Jabalpur. This cancellation of the confirmation of Bye-laws imposed a direct restriction upon the fundamental right of the petitioner under Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution.

When the validity of a law placing restriction upon the exercise of fundamental rights in Article 19 (1) is challenged, the onus of proving to the satisfaction of the Court that the restriction is reasonable lies upon the State. A law requiring that an act which is inherently dangerous, noxious or injurious to public interest, health or safety or is likely to prove a nuisance to the community, shall be done under a permit or licence of an executive authority, it is not per se unreasonable and no person may claim a licence or permit to do that act as of right. Where the law providing for grant of a licence or a permit confers a discretion upon an administrative authority regulated by the rules of principles expressed or implied, and exercisable in consonance with rules of natural justice, it will be presumed to impose a reasonable restriction. Where, however, power is entrusted to an administrative agency to grant or withhold a permit or licence in its uncontrolled discretion, the law ex facie infringes the fundamental right under Article 19 (1). Imposition of restriction on the exercise of a fundamental right may be in the form of control or prohibition, but when the exercise of a fundamental right is prohibited, the burden of proving that a total ban on the exercise of the right alone may ensure the maintenance of the general public interest lies heavily upon the State.

The impugned notification, though within the competence of the State Government, directly infringes the fundamental right of the petitioner guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g), and may be upheld only if it be established that it seeks to impose reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public and a less drastic restriction will not ensure the interest of the general public. The Court must in considering the validity of the impugned law imposing a prohibition on the carrying on of a business or profession, attempt an evaluation of its direct and immediate impact upon the fundamental rights of the citizens effected thereby and the larger public interest sought to be ensured in the light of the object sought to be achieved, the necessity to restrict the citizen's freedom, the inherent pernicious nature of the act prohibited or its capacity or tendency to be harmful to the general public, the possibility of achieving the object by imposing a less drastic restraint, and in the absence of exceptional situations such as the prevalence of a state of emergency national or local or the necessity to maintain essential supplies, or the necessity to stop activities inherently dangerous, the existence of a machinery to satisfy the administrative authority that no case for imposing the restriction is made out or that a less drastic restriction may ensure the object intended to be achieved.

The sentiments of a section of the people may be hurt by permitting slaughter of bulls and bullocks in premises maintained by a local authority. But a prohibition imposed on the exercise of a fundamental right to carry on an occupation, trade or business will not be regarded as reasonable. If it is imposed, not in the interest of the general public, but merely to respect the susceptibilities and sentiments of a section of the people whose way of life, belief or thought is not the same as that of the claimant.

The notification issued by the State Government must, therefore, be declared ultra vires as infringing Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—The petitioner Mohd. Faruk who carries on the vocation of slaughtering bulls and bullocks at the Madar Tekdi Slaughter-House at Jabalpur claims a declaration that the notification dated 12th January, 1967, issued by the Governor of Madhya Pradesh in exercise of the powers conferred under sub-section (3) of section 430 of the Madhya Pradesh Municipal Corporation Act (XXIII of 1956), "cancelling confirmation of the bye-laws" made by the Jabalpur Municipal Committee for inspection and regulation of slaughter-houses "in so far as the bye-laws relate to slaughter of bulls and bullocks" infringes the fundamental freedoms guaranteed under Articles 14 and 19 of the Constitution.

Section 5(37) of the Madhya Pradesh Municipal Corporation Act (XXIII of 1956) defines "municipal slaughter-house". By section 66 (m) it is made obligatory upon the Corporation to make adequate provision for the construction, maintenance and regulation of a slaughter-house. By sub-section (1) of section 257 of the Act the Corporation may and when required by the Government shall fix places for the slaughter of animals for sale, and may with the like approval grant and withdraw licences for the use of such premises. By sub-section (3) it is enacted that when premises have been fixed under sub-section (1) no person shall slaughter any such animal for sale within the city at any other place. By sub-section (4) bringing into the city for sale, flesh of any animal intended for human consumption, which has been slaughtered at any slaughter-house or place not maintained or licensed under the Act, without the written permission of the Commissioner, is prohibited. Section 427 authorises the Corporation, with the sanction of the Government, to make bye-laws consistent with the provisions of the Act and the rules made thereunder for carrying out "the provisions and intentions" of the Act. The bye-laws may, inter alia, relate to the management of municipal markets and the supervision of the manufacture, storage and sale of food, and for that purpose may regulate the sanitary conditions in municipal slaughter-houses. By section 430 it is provided that no bye-law made by the Corporation under the Act shall have any validity until it is confirmed by the Government. Power is conferred upon the Government by section 432 to modify or repeal either wholly or in part any bye-laws in consultation with the Corporation.

In exercise of the power conferred by section 178 (3) of the C. P. and Berar Municipalities Act II of 1922, bye-laws were made by the Jabalpur Municipality in January 1948. Those bye-laws continued to remain in force under the Madhya Pradesh Municipal Corporation Act (XXIII of 1956). The bye-laws controlled and regulated the conditions under which animals may be slaughtered in the premises fixed for that purpose and provided for inspection and for ensuring adequate precaution in respect of sanitation and for slaughter of animals certified by competent authorities as fit for slaughtering. By the notification issued by the Jabalpur Municipality a slaughter-house at a place called "Madar Tekdi" was fixed as premises for slaughtering animals. Under that notification bulls and bullocks were permitted to be slaughtered along with other animals like buffaloes, sheep, goats and pigs. But on 12th January, 1967, the State Government issued a notification "cancelling the confirmation of the bye-laws" insofar as they related to slaughter of bulls and bullocks at Madar Tekdi Slaughter-House. That notification places restrictions upon the right of the petitioner to carry on his hereditary vocation.

The question of permitting slaughter of cows, bulls and bullocks has, for a long time, generated violent sentimental differences between sections of the people in our country. After the enactment of the Constitution the controversy relating to the limits within which restrictions may be placed upon the slaughter of cows, bulls and bullocks was agitated before this Court in *Mohd. Hanif Quareshi and Others v. The State of Bihar*¹. In that case the validity of provisions made in three State Acts which imposed a total ban upon slaughter of all categories of "animals of the species of bovine cattle" was challenged. These Acts were the Bihar Preservation and Improvement of Animals Act, 1955, the U. P. Prevention of Cow Slaughter Act, 1955, and the C. P. and Berar Animals Preservation Act, 1949. The petitioners who followed the occupation of butchers and of dealings in the by-products of slaughter-houses challenged the validity of the three Acts on the plea that the Acts, infringed their fundamental rights under Articles 14, 19 (1) (g) and 25 of the Constitution. This Court held—(i) that a total ban on the slaughter of cows of all ages and calves of cows and of she-buffaloes, male and female, was reasonable and valid ; (ii) that a total ban on the slaughter of she-buffaloes or breeding bulls or working bullocks (cattle as well as buffaloes), so long as they were capable of being used as milch or draught cattle, was also reasonable and valid ; and (iii) that a total ban on the slaughter of she-buffaloes, bulls and bullocks (cattle or buffalo) after they ceased to be capable of yielding milk or of breeding or working as draught animals was not in the interests of the general public and was invalid.

Attempts were made from time to time to circumvent the judgment of this Court in *Mohd. Hanif Quareshi's case*¹. After that judgment, Legislatures of the State of Bihar, U.P. and Madhya Pradesh enacted the minimum age of animals to be slaughtered. The Bihar Act prohibited slaughter of a bull, bullock or she-buffalo unless the animal was over 25 years of age and had become useless. Under the U.P. Act slaughter of a bull or bullock was permitted only if it was over 20 years of age and was permanently unfit. Under the Madhya Pradesh Act slaughter of a bull, bullock or buffalo, except upon a certificate issued by the competent authority, was prohibited. The certificate could not be issued unless the animal was over 20 years of age and was unfit for work or breeding. This Court held in *Abdul Hakim Quaraishi and others v. The State of Bihar*², that the ban on the slaughter of bulls, bullocks and she-buffaloes below the age of 20 or 25 years was not a reasonable restriction in the interests of the general public and was void. The Court observed that a bull, bullock or buffalo did not remain useful after it was 15 years old, and whatever little use it may then have been greatly offset by the economic disadvantages of feeding and maintaining unserviceable cattle. This Court also held that the additional condition that the animal must, apart from being above 20 or 25 years of age, be unfit was a further unreasonable restriction. On that ground the relevant provisions in the Bihar, U.P. and Madhya Pradesh Acts were declared invalid.

The present case is apparently another attempt, though on a restricted scale, to circumvent the judgment of this Court in *Mohd. Hanif Quareshi's case*¹. The bye-laws of the Jabalpur Municipality permitted slaughter of bulls and bullocks. A licence had to be obtained for that purpose. Slaughter of animals in places outside the premises fixed by the Municipality was prohibited by section 257 (3) of the Act, and sale of meat within the area of the Municipality of the animals not slaughtered in the premises fixed by the Municipality was also prohibited. Under the notification by which the bye-laws were issued in 1948, bulls and bullocks could be slaughtered in premises fixed for that purpose. But by the notification dated 12th January, 1967, confirmation of the bye-laws insofar as they related to bulls and bullocks was cancelled. The effect of that notification was to prohibit the slaughter of bulls and bullocks within the Municipality of Jabalpur. This cancellation of the confirmation of Bye-laws imposed a direct restriction upon the fundamental right of the petitioner under Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution.

In the affidavit filed on behalf of the State of Madhya Pradesh two principal contentions were raised :—(1) the power to rescind confirmation of the bye-laws cannot be challenged by reference to Article 14 or Article 19 of the Constitution, because the power vested in the Government to confirm the bye-laws carries with it the power to rescind such confirmation ; and (2) that since every person desiring to use a slaughter-house had to apply for and obtain a licence, which may be refused and if given was liable to be withdrawn, no person may insist that he shall be given a licence to slaughter animals in a slaughter-house.

The power to issue bye-laws indisputably includes the power to cancel or withdraw the bye-laws but the validity of the exercise of the power to issue and to cancel or withdraw the bye-laws must be adjudged in the light of its impact upon the fundamental rights of persons affected thereby. When the validity of a law placing restriction upon the exercise of fundamental rights in Article 19 (1) is challenged the onus of proving to the satisfaction of the Court that the restriction is reasonable lies upon the State. A law requiring that an act which is inherently dangerous, noxious or injurious to public interest, health or safety or is likely to prove a nuisance to the community, shall be done under a permit or licence of an executive authority, it is not per se unreasonable and no person may claim a licence or permit to do that act as of right. Where the law providing for grant of a licence or a permit confers a discretion upon an administrative authority regulated by rules or principles expressed or implied, and exercisable in consonance with rules of natural justice, it will be presumed to impose a reasonable restriction. Where, however, power is entrusted to an administrative agency to grant or withhold a permit or licence in its uncontrolled discretion, the law ex facie infringes the fundamental right under Article 19 (1). Imposition of restriction on the exercise of a fundamental right may be in the form of control or prohibition, but when the exercise of a fundamental right is prohibited, the burden of proving that a total ban on the exercise of the right alone may ensure the maintenance of the general public interest lies heavily upon the State.

This Court in *Narendra Kumar and others v. The Union of India and others*², held that the word "restriction" in Articles 19 (5) and 19 (6) of the Constitution includes cases of "prohibition" also ; that where a restriction reaches the stage of total restraint of rights special care has to be taken by the Court to see that the test of reasonableness is satisfied by considering the question in the background of the facts and circumstances under which the order was made, taking into account the nature of the evil that was sought to be remedied by such law, the harm caused to individual citizens by the proposed remedy, the beneficial effect reasonably expected to result to the general public, and whether the restraint caused by the law was more than what was necessary in the interests of the general public.

The impugned notification, though technically within the competence of the State Government, directly infringes the fundamental right of the petitioner guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g), and may be upheld only if it be established that it seeks to impose reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public and a less drastic restriction will not ensure the interest of the general public. The Court must in considering the validity of the impugned law imposing a prohibition on the carrying on of a business or profession, attempt an evaluation of its direct and immediate impact upon the fundamental rights of the citizens affected thereby and the larger public interest sought to be ensured in the light of the object sought to be achieved, the necessity to restrict the citizen's freedom, the inherent pernicious nature of the act prohibited or its capacity or tendency to be harmful to the general public, the possibility of achieving the object by imposing a less drastic restraint, and in the absence of exceptional situations such as the prevalence of a state of emergency—national or local—or the necessity to maintain essential supplies, or the necessity to stop activities inherently dangerous, the existence of a machinery to satisfy the administrative authority that no case for imposing the restriction is made out or that a less drastic restriction may ensure the object intended to be achieved.

The sentiments of a section of the people may be hurt by permitting slaughter of bulls and bullocks in premises maintained by a local authority. But a prohibition imposed on the exercise of a fundamental right to carry on an occupation, trade or business will not be regarded as reasonable, if it is imposed not in the interest of the general public, but merely to respect the susceptibilities and sentiments of a section of the people whose way of life, belief or thought is not the same as that of the claimant.

The notification issued by the State Government must, therefore, be declared ultra vires as infringing Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution.

It is unnecessary to consider the validity of section 430 of the Act which was sought to be challenged in the petition or to consider whether there has been any infringement of the guarantee of the equality clause of the Constitution.

The petitioner will be entitled to his costs in this Court.

Essential Commodities Act (X of 1955), sections 2 and 3—Scope—Control of the price of sugarcane, if comes within the ambit of the Act.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 372 and Entry 33 of List III—Scope—Pre-Constitution Act Bihar Sugar Factories Control Act, 1937, if stands altered by sub-rule (3) of rule 3 of Sugar Cane (Control) Order, 1955.

From the scheme of clauses (b) and (c) of section 2 and section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, it is clear that the Parliament intended to bring under control the cultivation and sale of food-crops. In view of these provisions it is idle to contend that sugarcane does not come within the ambit of the Act. The provisions of sections 2 and 3 would certainly bring within the scope of this Act the regulation of the production of sugarcane as also the controlling of the price at which sugarcane may be bought or sold.

* CrI. A. No. 189 of 1966.

25th July, 1969.

Held also that, Sub-rule (3) of rule 3 of Sugar Cane (Control) Order, 1955 specifically provides that unless there is an agreement in writing to the contrary between the parties the purchaser shall pay to the seller the price of the sugarcane purchased within 14 days from the date of the delivery of the sugarcane. This is a specific mandate. If the Bihar Sugar Factories Control Act, 1937 provides anything to the contrary the same must be held to have been altered in view of Article 372 of the Constitution which provides that all laws in force in the territory of India immediately before the commencement of this Constitution shall continue in force therein until altered or repealed or amended by a competent Legislature or other competent authority. The Parliament which altered or amended the Bihar Act, a pre-Constitution Act, under Entry 33 of List III of the Constitution is a competent authority.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 4th July, 1966 of the Patna High Court in Criminal W.J.C. No. 11 of 1966.

B. R. L. Iyengar, Senior Advocate (U. P. Singh, Advocate, with him), for Appellants.

V. A. Seyid Muhammad, Senior Advocate S. P. Nayar, Advocate with him, for Respondent No. 1.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hegde, J.—This appeal against the decision of the High Court of Patna in Criminal W.J.C. No. 11 of 1966 was brought after obtaining Special Leave from this Court. The principal question raised herein is whether the investigation which is being carried on against the appellants under sub-rule (3) of rule 3 of Sugar Cane (Control) Order, 1955 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Order) read with section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) is in accordance with law.

The appellants are office bearers of M/s. S. K. G. Sugar Ltd. (Lauriya). A complaint has been registered against them under sub-rule (3) of rule 3 of the Order read with section 7 of the Act on the ground that they have failed to pay to the sellers the price of the sugar cane purchased by them, within the time prescribed. The said complaint is being investigated. The appellants are objecting to that investigation on various grounds. They unsuccessfully sought the intervention of the High Court of Patna under Article 226 of the Constitution in Criminal W. J. C. No. 11 of 1966. Hence this appeal.

Mr. B. R. L. Iyengar appearing for the appellants challenged the validity of the investigation in question on various grounds. We shall now proceed to deal with each one of those grounds.

The first contention of Mr. Iyengar was that sub-rule (3) of rule 3 could not have been validly issued under section 3 of the Act. According to him the said section 3 cannot be used for controlling the payment of the price of food crops ; it can only deal with food stuffs ; food-crops are outside its scope. This contention has been negatived by the High Court. We agree with the High Court that there is no merit in this contention. Section 2 (a) of the Act defines "essential commodity." Sub-clause (v) of that clause brings food-stuffs within the definition of essential commodity. Clause (b) of section 2 provides that food-crops include sugarcane. The next important provisions in the Act are clauses (b) and (c) of section 3 (1). Section 3 (1) provide: that if the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary or expedient so to do for maintaining or increasing supplies of any essential commodity or for securing their equitable distribution and availability at fair prices, it may, by order, provide for regulating or prohibiting the production, supply and distribution thereof and trade and commerce therein. Sub-section (2) of that section says that without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) and order made thereunder may provide.....

"(b) for bringing under cultivation any waste or arable land, whether appurtenant to a building or not, for the growing thereon of food-crops generally or of specified food-crops, and for otherwise maintaining or increasing the cultivation of food-crops generally, or of specified food-crops;”

Clause (c) provides for controlling the price at which any essential commodity may be bought or sold. From the scheme of clauses (b) and (c) of section 2 and section 3 of the Act, it is clear that the Parliament intended to bring under control the cultivation and sale of food-crops. In view of these provisions it is idle to contend that sugarcane does not come within the ambit of the Act. The question whether the cultivation and sale of sugarcane can be regulated under section 3 of the Act came up for the consideration of this Court in *Ch. Tika Ramji and others, etc. v. The State of U.P. and others*¹. At pages 432 and 433 of the report it is observed :

“Act X of 1955 included within the definition of essential commodity food stuffs which we have seen above would include sugar as well as sugarcane. This Act was enacted by Parliament in exercise of the concurrent legislative power under Entry 33 of List III as amended by the Constitution Third Amendment Act, 1954. Food-crops were there defined as including crops of sugarcane and section 3 (1) gave the Central Government powers to control the production, supply and distribution of essential commodities and trade and commerce therein for maintaining or increasing the supplies thereof or for securing their equitable distribution and availability at fair prices. Section 3 (2) (b) empowered the Central Government to provide inter alia for bringing under cultivation any waste or arable land whether appurtenant to a building or not for growing thereon of food-crops generally or specified food-crops and section 3 (2) (c) gave the Central Government power for controlling the price at which any essential commodity may be bought or sold. These provisions would certainly bring within the scope of Central legislation the regulation of the production of sugarcane as also the controlling of the price at which sugarcane may be bought or sold, and in addition to the Sugar Control Order, 1955 which was issued by the Central Government on 27th August, 1955, it also issued the Sugar Cane Control Order, 1955, on the same date investing it with the power to fix the price of sugarcane and direct payment thereof as also the power to regulate the movement of sugarcane.

Parliament was well within its powers in legislating in regard to sugarcane and the Central Government was also well within its powers in issuing the Sugar-Cane Control Order, 1955, in the manner it did because all this was in exercise of the concurrent power of legislation under Entry 33 of List III.”

It is needless to say anything more on this question.

It was next contended by Mr. Iyengar that the regulation of price of sugarcane is expressly dealt with by the Bihar Sugar Factories Control Act, 1937 and therefore we should not impliedly spell out the same power from the provisions of the Order and the Act. Mr. Iyengar is not right in contending that the power that is sought to be exercised in the instant case is an implied one. Sub-rule (3) of rule 3 specifically provides that unless there is an agreement in writing to the contrary between the parties the purchaser shall pay to the seller the price of the sugarcane purchased within 14 days from the date of the delivery of the sugarcane. This is a specific mandate. If the Bihar Act provides anything to the contrary the same must be held to have been altered in view of Article 372 of the Constitution which provides that all laws in force in the territory of India immediately before the commencement of this Constitution shall continue in force therein until altered or repealed or amended to a competent legislature or other competent authority. Quite clearly the Bihar Act is a pre-Constitution Act and it could have continued to be in force only till it was altered, repealed or amended by a competent legislature or other competent authority. We shall presently see that the authority that altered or amended that law is a competent one.

The next contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants was that the Parliament had no competence to enact any law relating to the control of sugarcane as that subject is within the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the State, the same being a part of agriculture. This contention is again unsustainable in view of Entry 33 of List III of the Constitution which empowers the Parliament to legislate in respect of production, supply and distribution of foodstuffs. It is not disputed that the Parliament had declared by law that it is expedient in public interest that it should exercise control over food stuffs. That being so it was well within the competence of Parliament to enact the Act and hence the power conferred on the Government under section 3 of the Act cannot be challenged as invalid.

There is no substance in the contention that the impugned order contravenes the fundamental right guaranteed to the citizens under Article 19 (1). No fundamental right is conferred on a buyer not to pay the price of the goods purchased by him or to pay the same whenever he pleases.

The contention that in view of section 11 of the Act, no cognizance could have been taken of the offence alleged is premature. This question does not arise in this case. No Court has yet taken cognizance of the case. That stage has still to come.

There is no substance in the contention that the complaint made before the police does not disclose a cognizable offence and as such the police could not have taken up the investigation of that complaint. The offence complained of is punishable with three years' imprisonment and as such it falls within the 2nd Schedule of the Criminal Procedure Code, and consequently the same is a cognizable offence as defined in section 4 (1) (f) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Hence it was open to the police to investigate the same.

For the reasons mentioned above we are unable to accept any of the contentions advanced on behalf of the appellants. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed.

... Respondents.

Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (XXXVII of 1954), section 20—Scope—Prosecution for an offence under the Act—Requirement of written consent of the Government or local authority—Complaint by the Food Inspector—Accused not questioning the maintainability of the complaint during the trial as well as in appeal—Accused if could be permitted to raise the contention after the disposal of the appeal.

Section 20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 prescribes that no prosecution for an offence under that Act should be instituted except by or with the written consent of, the Central Government or the State Government or a local authority or a person authorised in this behalf, by general or special order, by the Central Government or the State Government or a local authority. There is no dispute that the Municipal Board is a local authority. Hence it was competent to file a complaint or authorise some one else to file complaint on its behalf. In the present case, the question whether the Food Inspector was authorised by the Municipal Board to file the complaint was never put into issue. Both the parties to the complaint proceeded on the basis that it was a validly instituted complaint. It was never the case of the accused that the complaint was invalid. If the complaint had been filed by the Food Inspector on the authority of the local board, the complaint must be held to have been instituted by the local board itself. The question whether he had authority to file the complaint on behalf of the local board is a question of fact. Official acts must be deemed to have been done according to law. If the accused had challenged the authority of the Food Inspector to file the complaint, the trial Court would have gone into that question. The accused cannot be permitted to take up that contention for the first time after the disposal of the appeal.

Held also that, under section 20 of the Act, no question of applying one's mind to the facts of the case before the institution of the complaint arises as the authority to be conferred under that provision can be conferred long before a particular offence has taken place.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 18th April, 1966 of the Allahabad High Court in Criminal Appeal No. 1642 of 1964.

R. K. Garg and S. C. Agarwal Advocates of M/s. Ramanurthi & Co., and Sumitra Chakravarty and Uma Dutt Advocates, for Appellant.

O. P. Rana, Advocate, for Respondent. No. 2.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hegde J.—Two contentions advanced in this appeal by Special Leave are (1) that the appeal filed by the Municipal Board, Saharanpur before the High Court of Allahabad under section 417 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code was not maintainable in law and (2) the accused could not have been convicted on the strength of the certificate of the Public Analyst annexed to the complaint. The High Court rejected both these contentions.

The material facts relating to this appeal are these : The accused in this case is the proprietor of Khalsa Tea Stall situated in Court Road, Saharanpur. Among other things he was selling coloured sweets. On suspicion that the sweets sold by him were adulterated, the Food Inspector, Municipal Board, Saharanpur purchased from the accused for examination some coloured sweets under a Yaddasht on 31st May, 1963, and sent a portion of the same to the Public Analyst of the Government of U.P. for examination. The Public Analyst submitted his report on 24th June, 1963. It reads :

“ See Rule 7 (3)

REPORT BY THE PUBLIC ANALYST.

Report No. 11652.

I hereby certify that I, Dr. R.S. Srivastava, Public Analyst for Uttar Pradesh, duly appointed under the provisions of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, received on the 4th day of June, 1963, from the Food Inspector C/o Medical Officer of Health, Municipal Board, Saharanpur a sample of coloured sweets (Patisa) prepared in Vanaspati No. 264 for analysis, properly sealed and fastened and that I found the seal intact and unbroken.

I, further certify that I have caused to be analysed the aforementioned sample and declare the result of the analysis to be as follows :—

Test for the presence of coal-tar dye: Positive.

Coal-tar dye identified :—Metanil yellow. (Colour Index No. 138).

ANALYTICAL DATA IN RESPECT OF FAT OR OIL USED IN THE PREPARATION OF THE SAMPLE

1. Bityro—refractometer reading at 40 C :—50.5.

2. Melting point :—33.8 C.

3. Baudouin's test for the presence of Til oil :—Positive.

4. Tintometer reading on Lovibond Scale 4.0 Red Units plus 0.1 yellow unit coloured with a coal-tar dye namely, Metanil Yellow (Colour Index No. 138) which is not one of the coal-tar dyes permitted for use in foodstuffs under rule No. 28 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955.

No change had taken place in the constituents of the sample which would have interfered with analysis.

Sender's address :

The Food Inspector, C/o Medical Officer of Health, Municipal Board, Saharanpur."

On the basis of that certificate, a complaint was filed in the Court of City Magistrate, Saharanpur under section 7 read with section 16 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954. It is purported to have been filed by the Municipal Board, Saharanpur but it was signed by its Food Inspector. The accused pleaded not guilty. Various contentions were taken by the accused in support of his defence. The trial Court acquitted him taking the view that as the report of the analyst did not contain any data, no conviction could be founded on its basis and as the Yaddashit relating to the sale had not been attested as required by law, the seizure in question must be held to be invalid. As against that decision, the Municipal Board of Saharanpur went up in appeal to the High Court under section 417 (3), Criminal Procedure Code. The High Court allowed the appeal disagreeing with the trial Court on both the questions of law referred to earlier. It came to the conclusion that the analyst had given the necessary data and hence his report afforded sufficient basis for conviction. It further opined that the fact that the Yaddashit had not been attested by the witnesses of the locality, did not vitiate the seizure made. At the hearing of the appeal, no objection about the maintainability of the appeal was taken. The judgment of the High Court was rendered on 18th April, 1966. The High Court convicted the appellant and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months and to pay a fine of Rs. 100, in default to undergo further imprisonment for a period of one month. On 28th April, 1966, the accused filed an application for certificate under Article 134 of the Constitution. On 4th May, 1966, when the application filed under Article 134 of the Constitution for certificate was still pending, the accused moved the High Court under section 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code, for reviewing its judgment of dated 18th April, 1966, principally on the ground that the appeal filed by the Municipal Board was not maintainable under section 417 (3), Criminal Procedure Code as the complaint had been instituted by the Food Inspector and not by the Municipal Board. The application under section 561 (A) was dismissed by the High Court as per its order of 16th March, 1967 repelling the contention of the accused that the complaint had not been instituted by the Municipal Board. It further came to the conclusion that it had no power to review its own judgment. The certificate prayed for under Article 134 of the Constitution was also refused by a separate order of the same date. Thereafter this appeal was brought after obtaining Special Leave.

Mr. Garg, learned Counsel for the appellant strenuously contended that the appeal filed by the Municipal Board of Saharanpur before the High Court under section 417(3), Criminal Procedure Code, was not maintainable as the complaint from which that appeal had arisen had been instituted by the Food Inspector. Section 417(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, provides that if an order of acquittal is passed in any case instituted upon complaint, the High Court may grant to the complainant Special Leave to appeal against the order of acquittal. It is clear from that section that Special Leave under that provision can only be granted to the complainant and to no one else. It may be noted that in this case no appeal against acquittal had been filed by the State. Hence the essential question for consideration is whether the complainant before the Magistrate was the Municipal Board of Saharanpur? The complainant shown in the complaint is the Municipal Board of Saharanpur but the complaint was signed by the Food Inspector. Section 20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 prescribes that no prosecution for an offence under that Act should be instituted except by, or with the written consent of, the Central Government or the State Government or a local authority or a person authorised in this behalf, by general or special order, by the Central Government or the State Government or a local authority. There is no dispute that the Municipal Board is a local authority. Hence it was competent to file a complaint. It was also competent for that board to authorise someone else to file complaints under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act on its behalf. As seen earlier, the complaint purports to have been filed by the Municipal Board. That board could have authorised its Food Inspector to file the complaint on its behalf. Neither in the trial Court, nor in the High Court at the stage of hearing of the appeal, any objection was taken by the accused as to the maintainability either of the complaint or of the appeal. Both these Courts and the parties before it proceeded on the basis that the Municipal Board, Saharanpur was the complainant and its Food Inspector had filed the complaint on its behalf. It is only after the disposal of the appeal, the accused for the first time took up the contention that the Municipal Board was not the real complainant.

It is true that the complaint was signed by the Food Inspector. As seen earlier it was competent for the Municipal Board to authorise him to file the complaint. The question whether he was authorised by the Municipal Board to file the complaint was never put into issue. Both the parties to the complaint proceeded on the basis that it was a validly instituted complaint. If the Municipal Board had not authorised him to file the complaint then the complaint itself was not maintainable. If that is so, no question of the invalidity of the appeal arises for consideration. It was never the case of the accused that the complaint was invalid. In *K.C. Aggarwal v. Delhi Administration*¹, this Court has held that a complaint filed by one of the officers of a local authority at the instance of that authority is in law a complaint instituted by that local authority. Therefore if the complaint with which we are concerned in this case had been filed by the Food Inspector on the authority of local board, the complaint must be held to have been instituted by the local board itself. The question whether the Food Inspector had authority to file the complaint on behalf of the local board is a question of fact. Official acts must be deemed to have been done according to law. If the accused had challenged the authority of the Food Inspector to file the complaint, the trial Court would have gone into that question. The accused cannot be permitted to take up that contention for the first time after the disposal of the appeal. This Court refused to entertain for the first time an objection as regards the validity of a sanction granted in *Mangaldas Raghavji and another v. State of Maharashtra and another*². Mr. Garg, learned Counsel for the accused urged that a permission under section 20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 to file a complaint is a condition precedent for validly instituting a complaint under the provisions of that Act. The fulfilment of that condition must be satisfactorily proved by the complainant before a Court can entertain the complaint. Without such a proof, the Court will have no jurisdiction to try the case. In support of that contention of his he sought to take assistance from the decision of the Judicial Committee in *Gokulchand Dwarkadas Morarka v. The King*³ and *Madan Mohan Singh v. The State of U.P.*⁴. Both those decisions deal with the question of the validity of sanctions given for the institution of certain criminal proceedings. The provisions under which sanction was sought in those cases required the sanctioning authority to apply its mind and find out whether there was any justification for instituting the prosecutions. The Judicial Committee as well as this Court has laid down that in such cases, the Court must be satisfied either from the order of sanction or from the other evidence that all the relevant facts had been placed before the sanctioning authority and that authority had granted the sanction after applying its mind to those facts. The ratio of those decisions has no bearing on the facts of this case. Under section 20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, no question of applying one's mind to the facts of the case before the institution of the complaint arises as the authority to be conferred under that provision can be conferred long before a particular offence has taken place. It is a conferment of an authority to institute a particular case or even a class of cases. That section merely prescribed that person or authorities designated in that section are alone competent to file complaints under the statute in question.

For the reasons mentioned above, we are unable to accept the contention of the accused that the Municipal Board of Saharanpur was not competent to file the appeal.

The only other question canvassed before us is that the report of the analyst could not have afforded a valid basis for founding the conviction as the data on the basis of which the analyst had reached his conclusion is not found in that report or otherwise made available to the Court. We are unable to accept this contention as well. It is not correct to say that the report does not contain the data on the basis of which the analyst came to his conclusion. The relevant data is given in the report. A report somewhat similar to the one before us was held by this Court to contain sufficient data in *Mangaldas's case*¹ referred to earlier. The correct view of the law on the subject is as stated in the decision of the Allahabad High Court in *Nagar Mahapalika of Kanpur v. Sri Ram*², wherein it is observed :

"That the report of the public analyst under section 13 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, need not contain the mode or particulars of analysis nor the test applied but should contain the result of analysis namely, data from which it can be inferred whether the article of food was or was not adulterated as defined in section 2 (1) of the Act."

In the result the appeal fails and the same is dismissed. The appellant is on bail. He should surrender to his bail and serve the sentence imposed on him.

The first group of persons for whom seats have been reserved are the sons and daughters of residents of Union territories other than Delhi. These areas are well known to be comparatively backward and the exception of Himachal Pradesh they do not have any Medical College of their own. It was necessary that persons desirous of receiving medical education from these areas should be provided some facility for doing so. As regards the sons and daughters of Central Government servants posted in Indian Missions abroad it is equally well known that due to exigencies of their service these persons are faced with lot of difficulties in the matter of education. Apart from the problems of language, it is not easy or always possible to get admission into institution imparting medical education

A STUDY OF ' ERROR OF LAW APPARENT ON THE FACE OF THE RECORD '.

By

A superior Court can review the decision of a tribunal if there is an error of law apparent on the face of the record. A tribunal may commit an error of fact or an error of law within its jurisdiction. A superior Court cannot however correct the errors because if the superior Court interferes then the case could be decided de novo; the superior Court cannot assume functions of an Appellate Court. The superior Court can interfere only if the error is patent on record and no arguments are required to establish it. The error of law apparent on the face of the record is always self evident and demonstrable. It means that the supervising Court cannot weigh the evidence or cannot interfere with the findings of fact of the inferior tribunal. "An error in the decision or determination itself may also be amenable to a writ of certiorari but it must be a manifest error apparent on the face of the proceedings e.g., when it is based on clear ignorance or disregard of the provisions of law. In other words, it is only a patent error which can be corrected by certiorari, but not a mere wrong". A wrong decision cannot be reviewed by the Superior Court and the reason is that if a tribunal has jurisdiction to decide then it includes jurisdiction to decide rightly as well as wrongly. If the tribunal has given a wrong decision then it can be corrected by way of appeal, if provided in the statute. A wrong finding of fact cannot be interfered with by reviewing Court unless the fact is a jurisdictional fact. If the reviewing Court interferes with the erroneous finding of fact then the reviewing Court would convert itself into a Court of appeal which is not permissible by the law. "The Court issuing a writ of certiorari acts in exercise of a supervisory and not appellate jurisdiction. One consequence of this is that the Court will not review findings of fact reached by the inferior Court or tribunal even if they be erroneous."²

Similar views were expressed by Morris, L.J. in R. v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal Exp. Shaw, L.R. (1952) 1 K.B. 338 at page 357. The Lord Justice said, 'It is plain that certiorari will not issue as the cloak of an appeal in disguise. It does not lie in order to bring up an order or decision for rehearing of the issue raised in the proceedings. It exists to correct error of law when revealed on the face of an order or decision or irregularity or absence of or excess of jurisdiction when shown.'

Gajendragadkar, J. in Sri Ambika Mills Co. v. S.B. Bhatt, (1961) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 198: (1961) 1 An. W.R. (S.C.) 198: (1961) 1 S.C.J. 643: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 970 at 973., observed, 'There is no doubt that it is only errors of law which are apparent on the face of the record that can be corrected, and errors of fact though they may be apparent on the face of the record cannot be corrected.'

What is error of law apparent on the face of the record.

Now it is evident that the Superior Courts would interfere if there is an error of law apparent on the face of the record. But what is error of law apparent on the face of the record? No error could be said to be apparent on the face of the record if it was not self evident and if it required an examination or argument to establish it³. The same view was also expressed by Gajendragadkar, J., as difficulty however, arises when it is attempted to lay down tests for determining when an error of law can be said to be an error apparent on the face of the record. Sometimes it is said that it is only errors which are self evident, that is to say, which are evident without any elaborate examination of the merits that can be corrected and not those which can be discovered only after the elaborate argument⁴. But an error of law may be self-evident to a particular judge and not to another because judicial opinions may differ⁵. In such situations it is very difficult to define what is an error apparent on the face of the record. The fact is that what is an error apparent on the face of the record cannot be defined precisely or exhaustively, there being an element of indefiniteness inherent in its very nature and it must be left to be determined judicially on the facts of each case⁶. Similarly, a finding based on no evidence is an error of law apparent on the face of the record. But errors in appreciation of documentary evidence or errors in drawing inferences are not errors of law and can be corrected only by way of appeal⁷. If a statutory provision is capable reasonably of two constructions and one construction has been adopted by the inferior Court then it cannot be said that the construction so made constitutes an error of law apparent on the record⁸. When an error of law apparent on the face of the record is found and a writ of certiorari is issued the usual course to adopt is to correct the error and send the case back to the inferior Court or tribunal for its decision in accordance with law. In such cases the reviewing Court cannot consider the evidence itself and reach its own conclusions in the dispute involved therein⁹. In *Champsay Bhara & Co. v. Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co.*¹⁰, Lord Dunedin said that an error on the face of an award means that the Court must find whether there is any legal proposition which is the basis of such an award. His Lordship also observed that where an award is challenged upon such a ground it is not possible to read words into it or to draw inferences and the award or the order must be taken as it stands¹¹. Two learned English writers, Griffith and Street, have observed. 'There may be an error of law on the face of the record either because the facts, being fully stated on the record, are plainly inconsistent in law with the decision reached or because a wrong proposition of law has been relied on in the record'¹². But the formula given by the learned writers is not always applicable and does not cover all the cases of error of law apparent on the face of the record. It appears that it is impossible to define error of law apparent on the face of the record. Whether or not an impugned error is an error of law which is apparent on the face of the record must always depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case and upon the nature and scope of the legal provision alleged to have been misconstrued or contravened.¹³

In England, the first case where a writ of certiorari was issued against a decision of an Administrative Tribunal, on the ground of error apparent on the face of the record, was *R. v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal Exp. Shaw*¹⁴. In that case, due to the National Health Service Act, 1946, the applicant lost his service, in a Hospital Board. Some Compensation was awarded by the Compensation Authority to him according to the provisions of the Act, Aggrieved by the amount awarded he took the matter to the tribunal. The Tribunal calculated the duration of the applicant's services without taking into account the service of the applicant with the local Government Board. The Tribunal rejected the appeal of the applicant. The applicant applied to the Divisional Court for an order of certiorari to quash the order of the Tribunal. Before the divisional Court, it was admitted by the counsel for the Tribunal that there was an error on the face of the order made by the Tribunal but contended that no certiorari could be issued against a statutory tribunal on the ground of error of law on the face of the record. But the Divisional Court granted the order for certiorari. The Tribunal appealed. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal and held that there was an error of law on the face of the record. The Tribunal gave a "speaking order" where the Tribunal considered the services of the applicant to the Hospital Board only and did not consider the service of the applicant with the Local Government Board. Morris L. J., said 'it is plain that certiorari will not issue as the cloak of an appeal in disguise. It does not lie in order to bring an order or decision for rehearing of the issue raised in the proceedings. It exists to correct error of law where revealed on the face of an order or decision, or irregularity or absence of or excess of jurisdiction where shown.'

11. This dictum was followed in M/s. Bharat Barrel and Drum Mfg. Co. v. L.K. Bose and others, (1967) 1 S.C.R. 739 : (1968) 1 S.C.J. 199 : A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 361.

13. Per Gajendragadkar, J. in Syed Yakob v. K.S. Radhakrishnan, (1964) 5 S.C.R. 64 : A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 477, 480.

14. L.R. (1952) 1 Q.B. 338.

The first Indian case where a writ of certiorari was issued against the decision of administrative tribunal on the ground of error of law apparent on the face of record was *Hari Vishnu Kamath v. Syed Ahmed Ishaque*¹⁵. Writ of certiorari was issued on the ground of the error of law apparent on the face of the record when votes were counted¹⁶ against the provisions of rule 47 (c) of the rules made under the Representation of the People Act, 1951 ; when a person was dismissed¹⁷ from service on the charge of having political leaning but not as having had any objectionable activity amounting to misconduct. Certiorari was not issued on the ground of erroneous finding of facts because whether petitioner had a workshop or not at terminus of a route was a pure question of fact¹⁸ and the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the finding recorded by the appellate Tribunal and the High Court cannot seek to correct it by issuing a writ of certiorari.

What is Record.

A record comprises the document in which determinations of a decision are recorded. It also comprises the document which initiates the proceedings, the pleadings if any and the adjudication¹⁹. A statement of reasons given²⁰ by the Tribunal is deemed to be part of the record. If the record is incomplete the Superior Court can ask the inferior Court or tribunal to complete it. Error of law will, not usually be disclosed unless the Tribunal has given reasons for its decision. But an error of law may sometimes be held to be apparent on the face of the record even though the Tribunal has not set out or has not fully set out its process of legal reasoning²¹.

Speaking Order.

A speaking order is an order where reasons for the decision are set out. If in the decision reasons are not given then it would be very difficult for the reviewing Court to issue a writ of certiorari. It seems that it would be correct to say that where the impugned decision does not give any reasons whatsoever, so that evidence has to be taken in order to discover the erroneous reasons, the Court will not do so, in the exercise of its power to issue certiorari; if the impugned order is a 'speaking order' i.e., the reasons for the decision are set out therein, the Court will issue certiorari.

The word speaking order can be traced from *Walsall Overseers v. London and North Western Ry. Co.*²², where, Lord Carns said: All that was necessary was that the Court of Quarter Sessions, in making its order, should not make it an unspeaking or unintelligible order, but should in some way, state upon the face of the order the elements which had led to the decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions, stated upon the face of the order, by way of recital, that the facts were so and so, and the grounds of its decision were such as were so stated ; then the order became upon the face of it a speaking order ; and if that which was stated upon the face of the order, in the opinion of any party, was not such as to warrant the order, then that party might go to the Court of Queen's Bench and point to the order as one which told its own story, and ask the Court of Queen's Bench to remove it by certiorari, and when so removed to pass judgment upon it, whether it should or should not be quashed²³. In this case Lord Cairns distinguished an 'unspeaking order' from a 'speaking order.' Later this dictum of Lord Cairns was followed in *R. v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, Exp Shaw*²⁴, where Lord Goddard said 'Similarly anything that is stated in the order which an inferior Court has made and which has been brought up into this Court can be examined by the Court, if it be a speaking order, that is to say, an order which sets out the grounds of the decision²⁵. The *Northumberland case*²⁴ was followed in *Hari Vishnu Kamath v. Syed Ahmed Ishaque*¹.

When an administrative authority is inflicting punishment upon a person, the order of punishment must contain reasons for the decision because the authority acts in a quasi-judicial manner in inflicting the punishment. So where punishing administrative authority passed an order without assigning any reason for the removal of an employee for his unsatisfactory conduct, it was held that the omission to give reasons made the order of removal illegal². Hence the order of the Tribunal must ex facie disclose the reasons³, which persuaded the Tribunals to give such decision. The statement of reasons in a decision of lower Court or authority is not only relevant in case of judicial review but it is also relevant in case of an appeal because in the absence of reasons it is impossible for the Courts exercising appellate powers, or powers of superintendence, to see whether or not the authority was influenced by any extraneous considerations⁴. The Supreme Court of India has very recently said⁵ that an order of an administrative authority should contain reasons for it. Hidayatullah, J., observed. The next question is whether government was justified in making the order of 26th April, 1955? That order gives no reasons at all. The Act lays upon the Government a duty which obviously must be performed in a judicial manner. The appellants do not seem to have been heard at all. The Act bars a suit and there is all the more reason that Government must deal with such cases in a quasi judicial manner giving an opportunity to the claimants to state their case in the light of the report of the Deputy Commissioner. The appellants were also entitled to know their reason why their claim for the grant of money or a pension was rejected by Government and how they were considered as not falling within the class of persons who it was clearly intended by the Act, it to be compensated in this manner⁶. This statement clearly shows as to what should be done by an administrative authority while pronouncing a decision. It is clear now on these discussed authorities that an administrative authority should pronounce its decisions with reasons.

OMBUDSMEN IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

By

JOSEPH MINATTUR*

Ombudsman is defined as "a legislative commissioner for the investigation of citizens' complaints of bureaucratic abuse."¹

In an attempt at describing him and his office, the Thirty-second American Assembly stated that he is "an independent, high-level officer who receives complaints, who pursues inquiries into matters involved, and who makes recommendations for suitable action. He may also investigate on his own motion. He makes periodic public reports. His remedial weapons are persuasion, criticism and publicity. He cannot as a matter of law reverse administrative action."²

It is common knowledge that the institution of Ombudsman originated in Sweden. Provision was made for it in the Swedish Constitution of 1809. Finland adopted the institution in 1919, and Denmark made provision for it in the Constitution of 1953. In 1962 Norway appointed an Ombudsman for Civil Affairs. The same year witnessed a country in the Commonwealth—New Zealand—adopting the institution.

From the time Professor Stephan Hurwitz, the Danish Ombudsman, who took office in 1955, began propagating the Ombudsman idea, enthusiasm was evinced for it in many parts of the world. We have seen that New Zealand adopted the institution in 1952. A few years later a Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration was appointed in the United Kingdom. Two provinces of Canada, Alberta and New Brunswick, as well as the State of Hawaii in the United States appointed their Ombudsmen. Northern Ireland may appoint one very soon. One hears in England talk of an Ombudsman for hospitals. A London borough council announced the appointment of an unofficial Ombudsman.³ An American University, it is reported, has appointed an Ombudsman to deal with student grievances; even department stores in the United States have not been slow to jump on the Ombudswaggon; one of them in San Francisco has appointed an Ombudsman to deal with customer's complaints.⁴

Two developing countries of the Commonwealth, Guyana and Mauritius, recently adopted the institution. India contemplates adopting it at two levels;

He says that the Ombudsman "is an independent, politically neutral officer of the legislature, usually provided for in the constitution, who receives and investigates complaints from the public against administrative action, and who has the power to criticize and publicize, but not to reverse such action." ("The Spread of the Ombudsman Idea" in S.V. Anderson (ed) Ombudsman for American Government ? p. 36.

one Ombudsman for investigating complaints against ministers and secretaries to government, and a number of others to investigate administrative acts of other public authorities at the Centre and in the States. In Singapore, the Constitutional Commission recommended the adoption of constitutional provisions for an Ombudsman similar to those in Guyana and Mauritius.

When there is so much 'Ombudsmania' it may be worthwhile to look at the institution as adopted in two Commonwealth countries. Guyana and Mauritius have been selected for this purpose, in view of the fact that they may provide the necessary guidelines for other developing countries of the Commonwealth where the adoption of the institution is contemplated.

In Guyana

A separate part of Chapter V dealing with the Executive in the Constitution of Guyana is devoted to the office of the Ombudsman. This part deals with his appointment, his jurisdiction, his function on concluding an investigation and his annual report to the National Assembly.

The Ombudsman in Guyana is to be appointed by the Governor-General on the recommendation of the Prime Minister after consulting with the Leader of the Opposition.⁵ He is precluded from performing the functions of any other public office, and also from holding any other office of profit except with the approval of the Prime Minister in each particular case, and from engaging in any other occupation for reward.⁶ The appointment is for a term of four years. He may be removed for inability to discharge the functions of his office or for misbehaviour if a tribunal to which the question of removing him from office has been referred recommends such removal.⁷ The Governor-General appoints the tribunal on the advice of the Prime Minister and it will consist of a Chairman and at least two members selected by the Prime Minister, after consultation with the Judicial Service Commission.⁸

The Ombudsman may investigate any administrative action taken by any department of government or by any other authority or by Ministers⁹, officers or members of such department or authority on or after Independence day¹⁰

He may investigate any such action.

(i) if a complaint made made to him by any person alleging that the complainant has sustained injustice on account of a fault in administration.

(ii) if a Minister or a Member of the National Assembly requests the Ombudsman to conduct an investigation on the ground that some person has or may have sustained such injustice.

9. In Denmark, Finland and Norway, the Ombudsman has jurisdiction to investigate the administrative actions of Ministers. In Sweden, where his powers of investigation do not extend to the Ministers, the administrative departments are independent of the Ministers. They have no political responsibility for the measures decided upon by subordinate, but independent officials. (See Rowat : The Ombudsman : Citizen's Defender, p. 26).:

10. that is, 26th May, 1966.

(iii) on his own motion when he considers that some person has or may have sustained such injustice.¹¹

The complaint may be made by the aggrieved person himself or by his representative in cases where he is unable to act for himself.¹²

He is precluded from investigating an action (or inaction) when the complainant has a remedy in Court, or a right of appeal, review or reference before any other independent tribunal. He may, however, conduct an investigation if he is satisfied that in the particular circumstances it is not reasonable to expect the complainant to take or to have taken proceedings in a Court.¹³ Further, he is not precluded from investigating an action on the ground that the complainant can apply to the High Court for redress in cases where contravention of his fundamental rights is alleged.

A schedule annexed to the Constitution lists a number of matters exempted from the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman. They are:

(i) matters certified by a Minister to affect relations between Guyana and other States or international organisations,

(ii) action taken for protecting the security of the State or investigating crime, including action taken in regard to passports for any of these purposes.

(iii) proceedings in a Court,

(iv) appointments to offices under the Crown, appointments made by or with the approval of the Governor-General or any Minister, action taken in relation to any present or former holder of any such office or employment,

(v) action taken in respect of orders or directions to naval, military,¹⁴ air or police force or prison service,

(vi) the exercise of the prerogative of mercy.

(vii) the grant of honors, awards and privileges,

(viii) action taken in matters relating to contractual or other commercial dealings with the members of the public other than action by any authority empowered to determine the persons with whom any contract shall be made by the government and any authority specified by Parliament.

(ix) action taken in any country outside Guyana by or on behalf of a representative of the government of Guyana or any officer of that government.

(x) any action which under the terms of the Constitution is precluded from inquiry by a Court.

Action taken by the Judicial Service Commission is also exempted from his jurisdiction.¹⁵ But authorities empowered to determine with whom the government is to enter into contracts as well as any other authorities specified by Parliament are subject to his investigatory powers.¹⁶

16. Article 53 (5)

The Ombudsman can, in general, act in his individual judgment in deciding whether to initiate, continue or discontinue an investigation.¹⁹ When he decides not to initiate or to discontinue an investigation, he is required to report the matter to the person who made the complaint or the request to investigate.²⁰ He may refuse to initiate or may discontinue an investigation if it appears to him that

(i) the complaint is in relation to an action of which the complainant had knowledge for more than twelve months,

(ii) the subject matter is trivial,

(iii) the complaint is frivolous or vexatious or not made in good faith,

(iv) the complainant has no sufficient interest in the subject matter of the complaint.²¹

After conducting an investigation he should report to the department or authority concerned the results of his investigation and in cases where he is of the opinion that a person or body of persons has sustained an injustice on account of a fault in administration, he should communicate his reasons for the opinion to the department or authority and make suitable recommendations to rectify the fault.²² He should also inform the complainant or the Minister or the member of the legislature who made the request for investigation of the nature of the injustice when he is of the opinion that a person or body of persons has sustained injustice.²³ When he is of the opinion that no injustice has been sustained, he should inform the person concerned of the opinion and give him the reason for it.²⁴ If no action has been taken within a reasonable time by the department or authority on the basis of his recommendation where an injustice has been sustained, he may make a special report to the National Assembly²⁵. He is also required to make an annual general report to the Assembly¹. Parliament may make such supplementary and ancillary provisions as appear necessary and expedient for the procedure to be followed by the Ombudsman in his investigations, for the manner in which complaints and requests are to be made, for the payment of a fee in respect of any complaint or investigation, and also for the powers, duties and privileges of the Ombudsman or of other persons or authorities in obtaining or disclosing information for the purpose of investigation or report by the Ombudsman².

The Constitution defines fault in administration to include contravention of the constitutional provision prohibiting discrimination on grounds of race, place of origin, political opinion, colour, or creed.³ It may also be mentioned that a reference to an action by the administration includes its failure to act.⁴

In Mauritius

Before attempting to appraise the system in Guyana, it may be useful to look at the institution as established in Mauritius, so that comparisons may be drawn easily and more intelligibly.

The Constitution in Mauritius has a whole chapter devoted to the Ombudsman⁵. In a number of matters, the provisions are not dissimilar to those in the Constitution of Guyana. But there are also differences and some of them appear to be important. It may therefore be advisable, at the risk of some repetition, to summarise the main provisions so that a complete picture can be presented without the aid of a multitude of cross-references.

In Mauritius the Ombudsman is not empowered to investigate administrative action (or inaction) of Ministers. But this exemption from jurisdiction appears to have been envisaged as a temporary and transitional measure. The Constitutional Commissioner for Mauritius reported in 1964:

"I found that there are differences of opinion over the question whether he should be empowered to investigate the acts and decisions of Ministers themselves. In view of the conflict it might be better to exclude the personal acts and decisions of Ministers from his purview in the first instance"⁶.

This recommendation for exclusion of Ministers in the first instance was on the basis of a compromise to accommodate conflicting views rather than on any concept of ministerial responsibility. For the Commissioner made it very clear that "Far from weakening the principle of ministerial responsibility he (the Ombudsman) could make it more efficacious".⁷

In Mauritius the Ombudsman's powers of investigation extend to all departments of Government, the Police Force, the Prison Service and any other service maintained and controlled by the Government or any officer or authority of any such service, and any authority empowered to invite tenders for Government contracts⁸.

The following officers and authorities are excluded from his jurisdiction:

- (i) The Governor-General and his personal staff;
- (ii) the Chief Justice;
- (iii) any Commission established by the Constitution and their staff;
- (iv) the Director of Public Prosecution and any persons acting under or in accordance with his instructions;

In New Zealand where the Ombudsman's jurisdiction does not extend to inquiring into the decisions of the Ministers, any recommendation made to a Minister by a department or agency, even if the Minister has already acted upon it, may be inquired into and, if necessary, reported upon by the Ombudsman. In the light of the Ombudsman's findings the Minister would eventually be called upon to justify his action in Parliament and thus he would be obliged to account for his administrative acts. And the New Zealand Ombudsman reports that "so far there is no cause to feel that the parliamentary principles of ministerial responsibility are likely to stand in the way of the effective operation of the Ombudsman, or themselves to suffer by reason of his activities." (Sir Guy Powles, "The Office of Ombudsman in New Zealand", Journal of Administration Overseas (1968) 287 at 288.

8. Constitution of Mauritius, section 97 (1).

(v) any person exercising powers delegated to him by the Public Service Commission or the Police Service Commission.⁹

In cases where the Premier gives a written notice to the effect that the action complained of was taken by a Minister or a Parliamentary Secretary in person in the exercise of his own deliberate judgment, the Ombudsman is precluded from conducting an investigation of the action in question.¹⁰ This appears to be a provision fraught with serious peril for the citizen. When Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries are made immune from investigation, the Ombudsman's function may prove ineffective in many cases, as Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries can insulate any matter from the Ombudsman's authority by either making a decision or giving an order personally or claiming that they have personally made the decision or given the order.

The Ombudsman in Mauritius is to be appointed by the Governor-General after consultation with the Premier, the Leader of the Opposition and such other persons as appear to the Governor-General, acting in his own deliberate judgment, to be leaders of parties in the Legislative Assembly.¹¹ These consultations emphasise the representative character of the Ombudsman. But he shall not be a member of the Legislative Assembly or any local authority or a local Government officer, nor shall he perform the functions of any other public office.¹²

The Ombudsman is empowered to investigate any action taken by any officer or authority, barring the exceptions already mentioned, in the exercise of administrative functions, in any case in which a member of the public claims, or appears to the Ombudsman, to have sustained injustice in consequence of maladministration in connection with the action.¹³ He may make the investigation upon complaint from the aggrieved person, or when invited to do so by any Minister or other member of the Legislative Assembly or on his own initiative.¹⁴ A complaint may be made by any individual or body of persons except certain publicly elected or appointed authorities.¹⁵ It should be made by the aggrieved person himself or in certain circumstances (as when he is dead or unable to act for himself) by his personal representative or some other individual who is suitable to represent him.¹⁶ Legislative provisions may be made requiring, among other things, that complaints should be transmitted through a member of the Legislative Assembly.¹⁷

He is generally precluded from conducting an investigation when the aggrieved person has or had a right of appeal to a tribunal or a remedy in a Court of law. Nevertheless he may conduct an investigation if he is satisfied that in the particular circumstances it is not reasonable to expect the aggrieved person to avail himself of that right or remedy.¹⁸ Further, he is not precluded from conducting an investigation as to whether any of the provisions relating to fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual has been contravened.¹⁹ This is complementary to the provision which enshrines a person's right to apply for redress to the Supreme Court if any of the fundamental rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution has been, is being, or is likely to be contravened in relation to him.²⁰

He is precluded from investigating a matter if he is given notice by the Prime Minister that the investigation of that matter would not be in the interests of the security of the State²¹. He shall not make any investigation when it appears to him that the complaint is vexatious or frivolous, that the subject matter of the complaint is trivial, that the complainant has no sufficient interest in the subject matter, or that the complaint has been unreasonably delayed for more than twelve months.²²

The investigation is expected to be informal, and is to be conducted in private. The Ombudsman may obtain his information in any manner he thinks fit and may decide whether any person should be represented by Counsel in the investigation.²³ He is, however, required to afford an opportunity to the principal officer of the department or authority concerned and to any other person who is alleged to have taken or authorised the action in question to comment on the allegation in a complaint.²⁴

The State is not entitled to claim any privilege in relation to the production of documents or the giving of evidence as is allowed in legal proceedings,²⁵ but information and documents relating to the proceedings of the Cabinet or any Committee of the Cabinet are privileged.¹ When the Attorney-General gives notice that in his opinion the disclosure of any document or information specified in the notice would be against public interest in relation to defence, external relations or internal security, the Ombudsman and the members of his staff are not permitted to communicate to any person the specific document or information.^{1-a}

When the Ombudsman is of the opinion that the action which is the subject matter of the investigation was

- (i) contrary to law,
- (ii) based wholly or partly on a mistake of law or fact,
- (iii) unreasonably delayed,
- (iv) otherwise unjust or manifestly unreasonable,
- (a) that the matter should be given further consideration,

he is to report his opinion, giving reasons, to the principal officer of the department or authority concerned, together with his recommendations and request the official to notify him of the steps which it is proposed to take to give effect to the recommendations. He shall also send a copy of the report and recommendations to the Prime-Minister and the Minister concerned.² If no adequate or appropriate action is taken by the department or authority within a reasonable time, he may send a copy of the report and recommendations to the Prime Minister and the Minister concerned.³ Further he may make such reports to the Legislative Assembly on the matter as he thinks fit.⁴ He is required to make an annual report to the Governor-General concerning the discharge of his functions and it will be laid before the Assembly.⁵

In the performance of his duties, the Ombudsman is not subject to the direction or control of any authority and his proceedings are not to be called in question in any Court of law.⁶ But provision will be made defining offences in connection with the functions of the Ombudsman and his staff and prescribing the method of trial and penalties for such offences.⁷ Supplementary and ancillary provisions which may appear necessary and expedient are to be prescribed and they may include, among others, provisions for the procedure to be followed by the Ombudsman in the performance of his duties⁸.

Both Guyana and Mauritius have a multi-racial population and the presence of an Ombudsman may prove valuable in protecting the rights and interests of the minorities from discrimination by administrative agencies. In Guyana the Ombudsman received about 150 complaints during his first year in office; it is gratifying to note that only one of them alleged racial discrimination.⁹ It appears that the people in Guyana appreciate the necessity for his office and the value of his services. No appraisal of the work of the Ombudsman can be made about Mauritius as no one has yet been appointed to the office, though a few months have passed since provisions was made for the institution.

Commission of Enquiry in Tanzania

In a number of developing countries where corruption based on bribery or nepotism appears to assume the character of an inalienable right of the administrator the question may be posed: who will guard the Guardian Angel?¹⁰ The fact that the Ombudsman is a parliamentary delegate and not an administrator may not allay the fears of the ordinary citizen who associates most officials and employees of the State with an inveterate weakness for corrupt practices. A helpful method to resolve his suspicions may be to adopt a collegiate character for the institution.¹¹ This has been done in Tanzania, though Tanzania's Permanent Commission of Enquiry would hardly qualify for ombudsmanship,¹² as it is not a delegate of the legislature. But then Tanzania is a one-party State with a presidential regime. The Commission, however, purports to serve the same purpose as the Ombudsman does in parliamentary regimes, where he is a representative of the legislature and is sometimes styled Parliamentary Commissioner as in the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Denmark (Folketing Ombudsmand) and Norway (Stortingets Ombudsmann).

The Interim Constitution of Tanzania provides for a Permanent Commission of Enquiry which has jurisdiction to inquire into the official conduct of any person in the service of the United Republic, persons holding office in the party, members and persons in the service of a local Government authority and members and persons in the service of such commissions, public corporations, public authorities or bodies as may be specified by Act of Parliament¹³. The President and the Head of the Executive for Zanzibar are exempt from its jurisdiction. It shall conduct an inquiry when directed by the President to do so; it may make an inquiry, unless the President directs otherwise, in cases where it considers that an allegation of misconduct or abuse of authority or office ought to be investigated¹⁴. It has no power to question or review any decision made by a Court or a tribunal in the exercise of its judicial functions¹⁵. It reports its finding and recommendations to the President¹⁶.

The Permanent Commission consists of a chairman and two other members. They are appointed by the President and may be removed from office by him for inability to discharge their official functions or for misbehaviour¹⁷. A member holds office for two years; he is not qualified for reappointment within two years after vacating his office¹⁸.

Under the Permanent Commission of Enquiry Act, 1966, the Commission may hear or obtain information from such persons or carry out such investigation as it thinks fit. It is not obliged to hold any hearing, nor is any person entitled, as of right, to be heard. If, however, its report or recommendation might adversely

"(1) The Ombudsman is an independent and non-partisan officer of the legislature, usually provided for in the Constitution, who supervises the administration;

(2) he deals with specific complaints from the public against administrative injustice and maladministration; and

(3) he has the power to investigate, criticize and publicize, but not to reverse, administrative action." (Rowat, The Ombudsman: Citizen's Defender; 2nd Edn. 1967, p. 24.)

affect a person or department or organisation it should give such person, department or organisation an opportunity to be heard ; further, no adverse comment may be made in the report, unless the person, department or organisation against which the comment is made has been given an opportunity to be heard¹⁹. The Commission can require any person who is able to give information relating to the subject of the inquiry to furnish it with such information and to produce papers or documents or to attend before the Commission at a specific time and place²⁰. It may after notifying the appropriate authority, enter any premises of any department or organisation and carry out investigations there²¹. The President may, however, exempt certain premises from this general rule regarding entry and investigation, if he is satisfied that such entry and investigation might prejudice the security, defence or international relations of Tanzania, including Tanzanias' relations with the Government of any other country or with any international organisation²².

Except on a trial for perjury and similar offences or for an offence against the Official Secrets Ordinance, no statement made to the Commission by any person in the course of an inquiry will be admissible in evidence against any person in any Court²³.

The State may claim privilege in regard to giving information or producing documents in cases where the President certifies that it might prejudice the security defence or international relations of Tanzania, or the investigation or detection of offences, or might involve the disclosure of deliberations of the Cabinet, or the disclosure of the proceedings of the Cabinet or any of its Committees relating to matters of a secret or confidential nature, and would therefore be injurious to public interest²⁴.

The Commission's powers of investigation are not restricted by any privative clause in any legislation²⁵.

The framers of the Constitution of Tanzania, it would appear, felt that the principle of check should not be abandoned at the threshold of the Commission's office. That is probably the reason why, while adopting a number of provisions from the (New Zealand) Parliamentary Commissioner (Ombudsman) Act, 1962, Tanzania has departed from it in providing for a three member permanent Commission rather than a solitary Commissioner.

Concluding Comments.

(i) Jurisdiction.—A word may be said about Ombudsman's jurisdiction. We have seen that in some of the Commonwealth countries Ministers are kept insulated from his investigations. This does not appear to be due to any serious apprehension regarding ministerial responsibility; we have indicated that his work may help to strengthen this responsibility.¹

Ministers may not be regarded as being devoid of an instinct for self-preservation when they try to influence Parliamentary voting in regard to limiting his jurisdiction.

It would appear that in Guyana a wide variety of public authorities are exempt from his jurisdiction. It is not uncommon to keep the armed forces out of his purview. In Sweden and Norway there is a separate Ombudsman—a Military Commissioner—for these forces.² Where the Chief Justice is excluded from his jurisdiction in Mauritius, in “Guyana” the commencement or conduct of civil or criminal proceedings in any Court” is placed beyond his investigatory powers. There is much to be said in favour of keeping the Courts outside his domain. In fact Deputy Judges in Denmark were under his jurisdiction in the first instance; later on when this was found to be inexpedient they, as well as other Judges, were excluded from his jurisdiction by an amendment of the Ombudsman Act in 1959. In Sweden and Finland the judges are not beyond the reach of his supervisory powers. The Constitution of Sweden states that as a representative of Parliament and pursuant to its instructions, he should supervise the observance of laws and statutes as they are applied by the Courts and by public officials and employees³. As has been made clear by Parliament’s instructions, ‘supervision’ in this context does not include power to control but it does include power to commence prosecution or disciplinary proceedings. In Finland where the Constitution stresses that “The judicial power shall be exercised by independent tribunals. . . .”⁴ both the Ombudsman and the Chancellor of Justice are empowered to concern themselves with Judges and other law administrators. They are not expected to interfere with the judiciary in their official duties, but only to supervise them. As a result of this supervision, prosecutions of Judges are not rare in Finland though they are usually for minor offences⁵.

In countries where the official conduct of the lower judiciary wears in fact a thick and not very temporary veneer of scathing critical whispers, it may be a matter of doubtful wisdom to exempt them from the Ombudsman’s investigation. It may not be a bad idea to give him jurisdiction over them with a direction that he need not investigate any of their official actions except when such action appears to betray manifest injustice.

The same may be said about his jurisdiction over certain authorities who make appointments to public service. It is one thing to exclude the members of the Public

Most of the prosecutions are for offences under 40-21 of the Penal Code: “An official who commits an error in office through carelessness, omission, imprudence, lack of understanding, or lack of skill shall be sentenced to a fine or suspension from duty unless the error be so minor that a reminder be deemed the appropriate sanction: if the circumstances warrant, he may be removed from office.” See W. Gellhorn, Ombudsman and others, p. 59.

Service Commission or the Police Service Commission ; it is quite another to grant exemption from his purview, as is done in Guyana, to any " action taken in respect of appointments to offices or other employment in the service of the Crown or appointments made by or with the approval of the Governor-General or any Minister, and action taken in relation to any person as the holder or former holder of any such office, employment or appointment ". When, as in Mauritius, provision may be made for the definition and trial of offences connected with the function of the Ombudsman and his staff and the imposition of penalties for such offences there is no good reason why the staffs of Commissions established by the Constitution or persons exercising powers delegated to them by the Public Service Commission or the Police Service Commission should be placed beyond the reach of the Ombudsman's investigatory powers. If they are brought under his jurisdiction, the members of the Commissions themselves may tend to be more careful and scrupulous in the exercise of their powers, especially their supervisory powers, since an allegation of misconduct on the part of a subordinate may not reflect very happily on them.

It is refreshing to note that in the Constitution of Guyana acts of discrimination on grounds of race, place of origin, political opinion, colour or creed, are specially mentioned as constituting a fault in administration entailing the invocation of the Ombudsman's investigatory powers, though it is already provided that he is not precluded from conducting an investigation as to whether any of the provisions of the Constitution relating to the protection of fundamental rights and freedoms has been contravened with regard to the complainant. This attempt at reinforcement in the matter of enforcing this fundamental right regarding protection from discrimination is doubly salutary in countries where people tend to create divisions among themselves on account of race, colour, creed, language, place of origin, or political opinion.

If and when Ombudsmanship is contemplated for a developing country, it is advisable to invest the officer with jurisdiction in the whole field of public administration. When exceptions are made, they should assume and retain the character of an exception. They may not be permitted to cover large areas of administration or a large number of authorities. It has been said that,

" Injury of the citizen's interest by unjust or arbitrary conduct of the administration can be brought about by any part of the public service and a limitation of the Commissioner's competence on this point will lead to an ill-balanced system that will satisfy no one. Every citizen that feels himself injured, either by delay of a decision, unsatisfactory grounds for a decision, wrong application of the law, excess of competence, or by an unjust or unreasonable decision, must be given access to the Parliamentary Commissioner ⁶."

Alfred Bexelius, the Swedish Ombudsman, said that in Sweden the matters which the Ombudsman has to deal with concern everything that can happen to a citizen in his dealings with the authorities⁷.

(ii) Removal from Office.

The Guyanese provision for the removal of the Ombudsman from office on the recommendation of a Tribunal appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister does not appear to go a long way to fortify his independence. As he is a representative of the Legislature, the powers of removal may best be left with that body, even if his appointment was not made or formally approved by the Legislature. The recommendation of the Tribunal may be reported to the Legislature, and if the Legislature by a two-thirds majority of its membership approves the recommendation, he may be removed from office. The Model Ombudsman Statute prepared for American States provides for appointment of the Ombudsman by the Chief Executive of the State,⁸ subject to confirmation by two-thirds of the members of the Legislature present and voting and for his removal by vote of two thirds of the members of the Legislature upon "their determining that he has become incapacitated or has been guilty of neglect of duty or misconduct."⁹ In Sweden it is only Parliament which can remove the Ombudsman from office during his term. In Denmark he may be dismissed from office whenever he no longer has the confidence of Parliament. While in Finland he is irremovable during his term of office which is four years, in Norway his removal requires the vote of two thirds of the members of the Storting (Parliament).

(iii) Consultation with the Administrative Agency.

The Mauritian provision that the Ombudsman should afford an opportunity to the principal officer of the department or authority concerned and to any other person who is alleged to have taken or authorised the action in question to comment on the allegation in a complaint, though very fair to the administrative agency, appears to be fraught with some danger to the proper conduct of the investigation. The department or authority concerned should be given a hearing, but the question is when should it be. If an announcement of the allegation is made beforehand, it is not improbable that in an agency riddled with corruption papers from the files in question might disappear and communications never sent may be hatched in white heat and placed in them. Again the provision in the Model Statute appears; to some extent, to meet this difficulty. It provides:

"Before announcing a conclusion or recommendation that criticizes an administrative agency or any person, the Ombudsman shall consult with that agency or person."

The weakness about this scheme is that when once the Ombudsman has made up his mind regarding the allegations on the basis of his investigation, it would require very good contrary grounds to persuade him to change his mind, and very good grounds there may not be; persuasive evidence may be all that is available. It seems hard to be fair in an unfair world.¹⁰

8. Hawaii's Ombudsman Act provides: The Legislature, by a majority vote of each house in joint session, shall appoint an Ombudsman.

9. S.V. Anderson Ombudsman for American Government ? p. 162.

10. Sir Ronald Algie said of the Ombudsman in New Zealand:

"The Ombudsman system probably would not work well everywhere. It works well in New Zealand because we have a fine public service. Corruption is so rare as to be deemed virtually non-existent.

.... Our Ombudsman may stimulate officials to be even a little bit better than they have been. But the Ombudsman system is succeeding here precisely because, really, there is n't a staggering lot to do." Does this mean that where there is a lot to do, the system would collapse ?

(iv) Other Matters of Interest.

The Ombudsman may receive a complaint from any source concerning an administrative act.¹¹ If he believes that the complainant has no sufficient interest in the subject-matter he may refuse to investigate. It may happen that a conscientious person, impelled by public spirit, reports to the Ombudsman some unfair administrative act with a view to getting it rectified. When there is a provision made that the Ombudsman may conduct an investigation on his own initiative, there seems to be no good reason why the submission of complaints should be restricted to the aggrieved person or his representative in the Legislature.

A provision in the Model Statute which is absent from the Constitutions of Guyana and Mauritius may be mentioned. This relates to the Ombudsman's recommending disciplinary action against public officials and employees.

The Model Statute provides:

If the Ombudsman has reason to believe that any public official, employee or other person has acted in a manner warranting criminal or disciplinary proceedings he shall refer the matter to the appropriate authority.¹²

This provision will be of special interest and benefit in countries where the Ombudsman, as instituted, is considered emasculated. Where nagging fails, biting may succeed.

Another point which appears to deserve repetition is the collegiate principle which may be usefully ascribed to Ombudsmanship. Three or five heads will be fairer than one, especially where blondness is not in evidence.¹³

11. This is how it is ordered in Denmark.

12. In Denmark, Finland, and Sweden, the Ombudsman is empowered to initiate prosecutions or disciplinary proceedings against public officials. In Norway he may recommend such proceedings.

INDIAN OXYGEN LTD. v. THEIR WORKMEN¹.

By

SRI. GOPALAKRISHNA SASTRI,

(Reader Faculty of Law, Visakhapatnam-4, Andhra University.)

Although facts giving rise to the case are easy to understand, the law according to which persons are to be bound by the decision is not clear. The Indian Oxygen Co., was the employer and in its employment at Jamshedpur there were 352 workmen who were organised into Indoxco Labour Union. There were other industrial units of the employer with employments similar to those of the employees in question in other parts of Bihar. But with them or their Unions no difference or dispute was known to exist. Industrial dispute arose between the employer and 352 workmen in the Jamshedpur Unit. Joint application for reference to the Industrial Tribunal on five agreed questions was made by the employer and 352 employees. Accordingly, the Bihar Government made a reference to the Industrial Tribunal under section 10 (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act for adjudication on the agreed questions between the Indian Oxygen Company and their workmen represented by the Indoxco Labour Union. In the statement signed by the parties it was mentioned that 352 workmen were affected by the dispute.

The Union claimed that even prior to the dispute it changed its name to Indian Oxygen Workers Union and expanded its scope of membership to include all workmen of the establishments of the employer in Bihar.² The Tribunal in making the award held that it should be effective in respect of all workmen of the employer in Bihar and that its operation could not be restricted to the employees in Jamshedpur unit. It was of the view that the dispute between the Company and the Indoxco Labour Union did not materially affect the position that the dispute was in respect of the employees of the Company wherever stationed.

An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court by the employer contending that the Tribunal exceeded its jurisdiction in making the award applicable not only to the employees who signed the agreement for reference, but to all employees under the employer wherever stationed. The Supreme Court upheld the contention of the employer making the award operative only to the employees who were members of the Indoxco Labour Union and signatories to the agreement.

The Supreme Court did not think it necessary to disturb the decision of the Tribunal on the questions referred to it. But the persons on whom the award would be binding was the subject of difference of opinion between the Supreme Court and the Tribunal. The Tribunal thought that after the amendment of the constitution of the Union, the statement in the reference that the dispute was one between the employer and Indoxco Labour Union might well be taken to mean that it was a dispute between the employer and employees wherever stationed.

1. A I R. 1969 S C. 306 : (1969) 2 S C J. 235 : (1969) 35 F J R. 106.

2. Joint application to the Government was dated 7th September, 1963. On 6th January, 1963, in its general meeting Indoxco Labour Union changed its constitution. By a letter dated 21st January 1963, the Secretary of the Union informed the District Manager of the Company at Jamshedpur of the fact of amendment. Notification of reference to the Tribunal was made on 23rd October, 1963.

The Trade Unions Act requires that a registered Trade Union should have rules in regard to membership³. Regulations made by the Government under the Act may add to the provisions of the Act.⁴ Those regulations have effect as if enacted in the Act.⁵ Rules of a Trade Union may be amended only in the manner provided in its rules.⁶ Amendments of the rules have to be communicated to the Registrar within 15 days from the amendment.⁷ If the Registrar is satisfied that the rules have been amended in the manner provided, he should make an entry in the Register prescribed for the purpose and inform the fact to the Secretary of the Trade Union.⁸ The Supreme Court held that the amendment of the rules did not become effective until the Registrar notified the fact of registration to the Union's Secretary. The correctness of the observation of the Supreme Court is questionable. Neither the Act nor the Central Trade Union Regulations provide that the amendment of the rules made by the Trade Union becomes effective on the Registrar's intimation to the Secretary of the Union. The Act specifically, on the other hand, laid down that amendment to the rules involving change of name⁹ or amalgamation¹⁰ of two or more Unions has effect from the date of registration. Both the Act and the Regulations are silent as to the date on which the amendments to the rules become effective. Silence may be taken even to mean that the rules become effective on amendment and that registration is only evidentiary. Section 9 (1) of the Central Regulations says:

"On receiving a copy of an alteration made in the rules of a Trade Union under section 28 (3), the Registrar, unless he has reason to believe that the alteration has not been made in the manner provided by the rules of the Registered Trade Union, shall register the alteration in a register to be maintained for the purpose and shall notify the fact that he has done so to the Secretary of the Trade Union."

Thus a valid amendment to the rules has necessarily to be registered and the Registrar has no choice in the matter but to register. Citrine says:¹¹

"In the case of registered trade unions, any alteration of rules must be registered with the Registrar of Friendly Societies for the country in which the registered office of the union is situate. Except as to other countries, however, the alteration if valid takes effect independently of registration as from the date agreed upon by the members, i.e., the date of the resolution or such other date, if any, as is specified in it."

In any event, it is difficult to construe silence in the Act and Regulations as tantamount to a provision that amendment becomes effective on the date of the Registrar's intimation to the Secretary.

It does not appear to have been suggested by the Supreme Court that by amendment of the rules, the Union has become a new Union. If it has assumed the character of a new Union, without registration, it is not entitled to represent all its members. What all is said by the Supreme Court is that without communication to the Registrar of the amendment of the rules, and without communication of the fact of registration by the Registrar to the Secretary of the Union, the amended rules did not become effective. As there was no evidence in this case that the rules were communicated and registered, they did not become effective according to the Supreme Court. In the result, the old Union and not the new one, was legally existent.

Although the correctness of the decision of the Supreme Court on the ground that it was only the Indoxco Union and not the Union with expanded membership was deemed to be in existence is questionable, it is supportable on other grounds.

When parties make an application to the Government for reference to the Tribunal the Government 'shall' make a reference, if it is satisfied that the persons making the application represent the majority of each party¹². At the time of reference, it was fairly clear that the parties were the employer and the employees of the Jamshedpur Unit. The notification made by the Bihar Government read:

"Whereas the Governor of Bihar is of the opinion that an industrial dispute exists or is apprehended between the management of the Indian Oxygen Limited, Jamshedpur-7, and their workmen represented by Indoxco Labour Union, Jamshedpur, regarding the matters specified in their joint applications dated 7th September, 1963, annexed hereto....."

The award of the Tribunal could not be made binding on parties who were not contemplated by the reference. If the employees in other units in Bihar desired to be parties to the dispute in the reference, the proper course would have been to apply to the Government to refer their dispute also to the Tribunal. The Government might at any time after reference and before the award was made include other establishments likely to be affected by the award in the reference.¹³ This was not done in the case under consideration. Nor is there any evidence to show that employees in other units under the employer were represented before the Tribunal. In that case also the award would be binding on them.¹⁴

By amendment of the rules which in substance means an agreement between the members¹⁵, neither the scope of the reference nor that of the award might be enlarged. In other words, agreement of one of the parties cannot confer jurisdiction on the Tribunal. Thus the decision of the Supreme Court is unassailable on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the Tribunal.

It is interesting to find that the Indoxco Labour Union, despite change in its name and expansion of membership by amendment of the rules, represented in the application to the Government and allowed itself to be referred in its old name in the reference. The amendment of the rules, perhaps, was not meant in earnestness. Although the membership was expanded, it was not in evidence that the employees in other units of the employer joined the Union. Going behind the rules and considering the substance, what was bargained for was achieved by the decision of the Supreme Court.

C.A. Nos. 2468 and 2470-2479 of 1966.

Saurashtra Barkhali Abolition Act (XXVI of 1951), sections 18 and 19—Saurashtra Land Reforms Act (XXV of 1951) and Bombay Land Revenue Code (V of 1879), section 52—Payment of compensation—Mamlatdar determining assessment as per section 19—Initial payment on the basis of such assessment—Collector fixing assessment under section 52 of the Code—Payment of compensation on the basis of Collector's assessment, instead of on the basis of Mamlatdar's assessment—Validity of.

At the time when the Saurashtra Barkhali Abolition Act (XXVI of 1951) was passed, the only manner of survey which was laid down by any law applicable in the State of Saurashtra was that contained in Chapter VIII of the Code and the only manner of settlement was that contained in Chapter VIII-A. There was at the same time provision contained in section 52 of the Code for assessment of the amount to be paid as land revenue on all lands ; but in that section, neither the word "survey" nor "settlement" or any of their derivatives was used. In the circumstances, the submission made by counsel for appellants that the words "surveyed and settled" used in section 19 of the Act were intended to refer to the survey and settlement under Chapter VIII and VIII-A of the Code has great force. If the Legislature had intended that the Mamlatdar's assessment made by the summary manner laid down in section 19 itself be superseded by any assessment made under the Code, including an assessment by the Collector under section 52 of the Code, the language used in section 19 would certainly have been different. Instead of saying that the assessment made by the Mamlatdar under section 19 is to be effective until the village in which such land is situate is surveyed and settled, the Legislature could have easily laid down that the assessment shall remain effective until an assessment is made under the Code. The requirement prescribed by the Legislature was that the assessment by the Mamlatdar was to continue in force until the village is surveyed and settled and not merely until an assessment of revenue payable in respect of the land is determined either under section 52 of the Code or Chapter VIII-A of the Code. Under section 19 of the Act, the assessment made by the Mamlatdar under that section itself must continue in force until there is a survey and settlement in accordance with Chapter VIII and VIII-A of the Code. Even under section 52 of the Code and rule 17 of the Rules made thereunder, there is, in fact, no survey at all.

The Saurashtra Legislature, in passing the Act, for the temporary period until there could be a regular survey and settlement, created a machinery by granting power to the Mamlatdar to make a summary assessment and that was clearly intended not to be superseded by another summary fixation of assessment by the Collector under section 52 of the Code.

Held, there having been no survey and settlement of the village, the assessment made by the Mamlatdar continued to be assessment for purpose of the Act and the Government was, therefore, not justified in varying the payment of annuity under section 18 of the Act which should have been continued to be paid in accordance with that assessment.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922)—Joint Hindu family—Levy of estate duty by Revenue Authorities in Ceylon consequent on death of two members—Later, levy set aside—Deposit of duty levied with interest in 1957—Partition settlement in the family in February, 1947—Interest accrued prior to February, 1947 on refunded estate duty, whether capital or revenue—Taxability of.

After the death of A Senior the property was held by the three widows as members of the Hindu undivided family. Under the Hindu law it is not predicted of a Hindu joint family that there must be a male member, so long as the property which was originally of the joint Hindu family remains in the hands of the widows of the members of the family and is not divided among them, the joint family continues. Payment of the estate duty was doubtless made out of the joint family fund and the interest which accrued due, also acquired the character of joint family property when received. The joint family status came to an end only on 17th February, 1947. On the severance of the joint status the assessee became entitled to a share in the family estate. The amount of interest on the estate duty accrued as income to the joint family but it was income of the joint family and not of the individual members. But when a share out of the estate which included the interest on estate duty was received by the assessee it had not the character of income. Once the income was received by the joint family, the amount lost its character of income. It became merged (in) the joint family assets and became the capital of the share received by the assessee was therefore a share in the capital of the family.

Held, the share in the joint family property which included interest on the estate duty which accrued prior to 17th February, 1947 was rightly held by the High Court to be not of the nature of revenue and accordingly not taxable.

(No opinion was expressed on the correctness of the finding of the High Court that interest accrued due after February, 1947, must be regarded as income to the extent of the share of each of the members of the family.)

Preventive Detention Act (IV of 1950), section 3 (2)—Power of detention under the Act—An exceptional power—Detention for maintenance of "public order"—When justified—"Law and order" distinguished from "public order."

The freedom of the individual is of utmost importance in any civilised society. It is a human right. Under our Constitution it is a guaranteed right. It can be deprived of only by due process of law. The power to detain is an exceptional power to be used under exceptional circumstances. It is wrong to consider the same, as the executive appears to have done in the present case, that it is a convenient substitute for the ordinary process of law.

The three incidents mentioned in the grounds in the present case are stray incidents spread over a period of one year and four months. These incidents cannot be said to be inter-linked. They could not have prejudiced the maintenance of 'public order' nor can they be held to be subversive of 'public order.' They were at best, prejudicial to "law and order", being mere breaches of law.

Disturbance of "public order" is to be distinguished from acts directed against individuals which do not disturb the society to the extent of causing a general disturbance of public tranquillity. It is the degree of disturbance and its effect upon the life of the community in a locality which determines whether the disturbance amounts only to a breach of "Law and order."

A.K. Roy.

C.A. No. 2127 of 1969.

Industrial Disputes—Wrongful termination of service—Relief to be awarded—Reinstatement or compensation—Discretion of Tribunal—How to be exercised—Interference with the discretion exercised, by High Court in writ petition—Scope.

There can be no doubt that the right of an employer to discharge or dismiss an employee is no longer absolute as it is subjected to severe restrictions. In cases of both termination of service and dismissal, industrial adjudication is competent to grant relief, in the former case on the ground that the exercise of the power was mala fide or colourable and in the latter case if it amounts to victimisation or unfair labour practice or is in violation of the principles of natural justice or is otherwise not legal or justified. In such cases, a tribunal can award by way of relief to the concerned employee either reinstatement or compensation.

In the earlier stages the question whether one or the other of the two reliefs should be granted was held to be a matter of discretion for the tribunal. Later on, however, the earlier flexibility appears to have been abandoned and it was ruled that although no hard and fast rule can be laid down, the normal rule in such cases should be reinstatement.

As exceptions to the general rule of reinstatement, there have been cases where reinstatement has not been considered as either desirable or expedient. These were the cases where there had been strained relations between the employer and the employee, where the post held by the aggrieved employee had been one of trust and confidence or where, though dismissal or discharge was unsustainable owing to some infirmity in the impugned order, the employee was found to have been guilty of an activity subversive of or prejudicial to the interests of the industry. These are, however, illustrative cases and no hard and fast rule as to which circumstances would in a given case constitute an exception to the general rule can possibly be laid down as the tribunal in each case, keeping the objectives of the industrial adjudication in mind, must in a spirit of fairness and justice confront the question whether the circumstances of the case require that an exception should be made and compensation would meet the ends of justice.

The tribunal, therefore, has to exercise its discretion judicially and in accordance with well recognised principles in that regard and has to examine carefully the circumstances of each case and decide whether such a case is one of those exceptions to the general rule. If the tribunal were to exercise its discretion in disregard of such circumstances or the principles laid down by the Supreme Court it would be a case either of non-exercise of discretion or of one not legally exercised. In either case, the High Court in exercise of its writ jurisdiction, can interfere and cannot be content by simply saying that since the tribunal has exercised its discretion it will not examine the circumstances of the case to ascertain whether or not such exercise was properly and in accordance with the well settled principles, made,

There is ample authority to the effect that if a statutory tribunal exercises its discretion on the basis of irrelevant consideration or without regard to relevant considerations, certiorari may properly issue to quash its order.

On a consideration of all the circumstances of the present case, it must be held that it was one of those exceptional cases where compensation and not reinstatement should have been ordered.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 217 (2) (b)—Appointment as a High Court Judge—Qualification required—“Has at least ten years been an advocate of a High Court”—Meaning of.

The expression “an advocate of a High Court” in its ordinary plain meaning must mean a person who has by enrolling himself under the relevant provisions of law become an advocate of a High Court. If it was intended that the qualification under Article 217 (2) (b) should be that a person appointed to the office of a Judge of a High Court should have practised in a High Court and that practising in a Court or Courts subordinate to it would not answer the qualification, the language used in Article 217 (2) (b) would have been different.

The distinction, if any, between the words “an advocate” in Article 233 (2) and the words “an advocate of a High Court” in Article 217 (2) (b) has no significance, in any event, after the coming into force of the Advocates Act, 1961, as by virtue of section 16 of that Act there are now only two classes of persons entitled to practice, namely, senior advocates and other advocates.

The protection under Article 311 of the Constitution of India is available to (i) persons who are members of (a) a Civil Service of the Union, or (b) an All India Service or (c) a Civil Service of a State, or (ii) to persons who held a civil post under the Union or a State Categories (a), (b) and (c) mentioned above refer the standing to services which have been created in the Union and the States and which are permanently maintained in strength. In addition to the standing services there are certain posts which are outside the permanent services. The last category in Article 311 therefore speaks of such posts on the civil side as opposed to the military side. Incumbents of such posts also receive protection.

The Hindustan Steel Limited is not a department of the Government nor are the servants of it holding posts under the State. It has its independent existence and by law relating to corporations it is distinct even from its members. In these circumstances, the appellant, who was employed as a doctor by the Hindustan Steel Limited, does not answer the description of a holder of a civil post under the Union as stated in Article 311. He was not entitled to the protection of Article 311. The High Court was therefore right in not affording him the protection.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 136—Decree passed in second appeal by High Court—Interference with by Supreme Court under Article 136—Scope.

Article 136 of the Constitution of India does not give a right to a party to appeal to the Supreme Court. Normally the Supreme Court will entertain an appeal against a decree passed in second appeal if a substantial question of law of general or public importance arises which may not only determine the dispute between the parties but will be a precedent for guidance for determination of similar disputes in other cases. The Court, may, if it appears that substantial injustice has resulted or that there had been no proper trial of the case or other similar reason interfere with the order or the decree passed by the High Court in second appeals. But the right to appeal is not as of right and the mere fact that some question of law arises out of the decision of the High Court will not enable a party to claim a right to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Western India Watch Co., Ltd. v.
The Western India Watch Co., Workers Union.
C.A. No. 1914 of 1968.

U. P. Industrial Disputes Act (XXVIII of 1947), section 2 (1) and 4 (k)—Individual dispute—Conversion into industrial dispute by espousal by a union—Conditions precedent—Concerned workmen if should have been a member when the cause of action accrued—Power of Government “at any time” to refer a dispute for adjudication under section 4 (k)—Scope—“At any time” meaning of Government refusing to refer a dispute—If can reconsider its decision—Time limit.

For an individual dispute being converted into an industrial dispute as a result of its being espoused by a union, it is not necessary that the concerned workman should have been a member of such union at the time when the cause of such dispute arose. If it is insisted that the concerned workman must be a member of the union at the date of his dismissal, the result would be that if at that period of time there is no union in that particular industry and it comes into existence later on, then the dismissal of such a workman can never be an industrial dispute although the other workman have a community of interest in the matter of his dismissal. The only condition for an individual dispute turning into an industrial dispute as laid down in the case at Dimakuchi Tea Estate 1958 S.C.R. 115, is the necessity of a community of interest and not whether the concerned workman was or was not a member of the union at the time of his dismissal. The parties to the reference being the employer and his employees, the test must necessarily be whether the dispute referred to adjudication is one in which the workmen or a substantial section of them have a direct and substantial interest even though such a dispute relates to a single workman. It must follow that the existence of such an interest, evidenced by the espousal by them of the cause, must be at the date when the reference is made and not necessarily at the date when the cause occurs.

The argument, therefore that the reference in the present case was not competent on the ground that the concerned workman was not a member of the union at the date when the cause giving rise to the dispute arose, and that therefore, the union could not have espoused the dispute to convert it into an industrial dispute is not correct and cannot be upheld.

From the words used in section 4 (k) of the U. P. Industrial Disputes Act there can be no doubt that the Legislature has left the question of making or refusing to make a reference for adjudication to the discretion of the Government. But the discretion is neither unfettered or arbitrary for the section clearly provides that there must exist an industrial dispute as defined by the Act or such a dispute must be apprehended when the Government decides to refer it for adjudication. No reference can thus be made unless at the time when the Government decides to make it an industrial dispute between the employer and his employees either exists or is apprehended. Therefore, the expression "at any time" in section 4 (k) though seemingly without any limits, is governed by the context in which it appears. Ordinarily, the question of making a reference would arise after conciliation proceedings have been gone through. But the Government need not wait until such a procedure has been completed in an urgent case.

There is a considerable body of judicial opinion according to which so long as an industrial dispute exists or is apprehended and the Government is of the opinion that it is so, the fact that it had earlier refused to exercise its power does not preclude it from exercising it at a later stage. In this view, the mere fact that there has been a lapse of time or that a party to the dispute was, by the earlier refusal, led to believe that there would be no reference and acts upon such belief does not affect the jurisdiction of the Government to make the reference.

It is true that where a Government reconsiders its previous decision and decides to make the reference such a decision might cause inconvenience to the employer because the employer in the meantime might have acted on the belief that there would be no proceedings by way of adjudication of the dispute. Such a consideration would be taken into account by the Government whenever, in exercise of its discretion, it decides to reopen its previous decision as also the time which elapsed between its earlier decision and the date when it decides to reconsider it. These are matters which the Government would have to take into account while deciding whether it should reopen its former decision in the interest of justice and industrial peace but have nothing to do with the jurisdiction under section 4 (k). Whether the intervening period may be short or long would necessarily depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case and therefore, in construing the expression at any time, in section 4 (k) it would be impossible to lay down any limits to it.

In the present case though nearly four years had gone by since the earlier decision not to make the reference if the Government was satisfied that its earlier decision had been arrived at on a misapprehension of facts and therefore, required reconsideration, neither its decision to do so nor its determination to make the reference can be challenged on the ground of want of power.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 70—Person delivering goods under an unenforceable contract—If can claim compensation.

It cannot be held that the provisions of sections 73 and 74 and the relevant rules in Chapter V of the Schedule to the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act, 1949 did not apply before the election of Councillors to the Corporation were held and the statutory committees were constituted. There is nothing in the transitory provisions which excludes the operation of section 74 (2) till the elections of the Councillors. Granting that it is not possible to comply with the rules, until the elections are held, there is no warrant for holding that the provisions of section 74 (2) will not apply and the Commissioner or the Transport Manager may enter into contracts without seal which are enforceable at law, notwithstanding the absolute terms of the Act.

Under section 70 of the Contract Act, a person lawfully delivering goods to another and not intending to do so gratuitously is entitled to demand that the goods delivered shall be returned or that compensation for the goods shall be made. Compensation would normally be the market price of the goods. By refusing to return the goods, the person to whom the goods have been delivered cannot improve his position and seek to pay less than the market value of the goods. Thus, a person without an enforceable contract in his favour supplying goods is entitled to money equivalent of the goods delivered, assessed at the market rate prevailing on the date on which the supplies were made.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 226—Unlawful action of public authorities infringing contractual rights—Writ, if maintainable —Administrative order—Applicability of rules of natural justice.

It cannot be held that merely because the source of the right which the respondent claims was initially in a contract, for obtaining relief against any arbitrary and unlawful action on the part of a public authority he must resort to a suit and not to a petition by way of a writ. In view of the judgment of the Supreme Court in K. N. Guruswamy's case, (1955) 1 S.C.R. 305, there can be no doubt that a writ is maintainable, even if the right to relief arose out of an alleged breach of contract, where the action challenged is of a public authority invested with statutory power.

Granting that the impugned order was administrative and not quasi-judicial, the order had still to be made in a manner consonant with the rules of natural justice when it affected the respondent's rights to property.

Coal Bearing Areas (Acquisition and Development) Act (XX of 1957) as amended by Act (LI of 1957) and Act (XXIII of 1969), sections 3-A and 28 (3)—Effect of the amendments—Validity.

“It is obvious that now under the scheme of Act XX of 1957, as amended by Act LI of 1957 and Act XXIII of 1969 a notification under section 4 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 is by fiction a notification under section 4 of Act XX of 1957; an objection under section 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 is deemed to be an objection under section 8 of Act XX of 1957. It is also provided that if no objection had been preferred under section 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 within the period specified in that Act, then it shall be deemed that a notification has been issued under section 7 of this Act in respect of the land and further that no objection to the acquisition of the land or any rights in or over that land has been preferred under section 8 of the Act and accordingly the Central Government may at any time make a declaration under section 9 of Act XX of 1957 in respect of that land. By section 3 the effect of a decision of a Court is removed as if the provisions of section 28 of Act XX of 1957, as amended by Act XXIII of 1969 were in force at all material times.

Learned Counsel for the respondent could not point to anything by which the amending Act could be called in question. It was conceded that it was within the competence of Parliament to create the fictions it has created in the original Act XX, of 1957 and again by the amending Act XXIII of 1969. Learned Counsel, however said that we must take a humane view of the position of a person like the respondent who would lose his all by the acquisition and that too through legislation which makes the provisions fictional rather than real. As to the first part we can only say that if the law allows it, the Court must award it and as to the second part we say that this kind of legislation by making obligatory notifications fictional does not accord with our sense of propriety but we cannot say anything against it since Parliament undoubtedly possesses the power to make such fictions.”

The Twyford Tea Co., Ltd. v.
The State of Kerala.
W.P. Nos. 135-137 of 1969.

Kerala Plantation (Additional Tax) Act (XVII of 1960) as amended by Kerala Plantation (Additional Tax) Amendment Act (XIX of 1967)—Constitutionally valid—Not hit by Article 14 of the Constitution of India.

By majority (M. Hidayatullah, C. J. and C. A. Vaidialingam and A. N. Ray, JJ.) with J. M. Shelat and A. N. Grover, JJ. dissenting: The Kerala Plantation (Additional Tax) Act, 1960, as amended by Kerala Plantation (Additional Tax) Amendment Act, 1967, (hereinafter referred to as the Act) no doubt deals with seven different kinds of plantations and imposes a uniform rate of Rs. 50 per hectare but it lays down principles on which equal treatment is ensured. In the case of coconut, arccanut, rubber, coffee and pepper plantations, plants capable of yielding produce are to be counted and then the hectares are determined by dividing the total number of plants by a certain figure. This is intended to equalise the different plantations for purposes of taxability. In the remaining two cases, viz., tea and cardemom, the extent of land yielding crop is itself taken as the measure for the tax because it is considered fair and just to treat one actual hectare of crop yielding plantation as equal to the other areas converted into hectares on the basis of the number of plants or trees. It is obvious that the Legislature has made an attempt at equalisation of tax burden for different plantations. This is not a case where barren lands have been subjected to equal tax with productive lands. The tax is only levied on crop yielding land. In some cases where the crop may be scattered over a wide area, there is an elaborate mechanism to determine the extent of the crop yielding plantation. The Court cannot regard the law to be discriminatory.

The burden of proving discrimination is always heavy and heavier still when a taxing statute is under attack. The burden is, proving not possible 'inequality' but hostile "unequal" treatment. This is more so when uniform taxes are levied.

What is meant by the power to classify without unreasonably discriminating between persons similarly situated, has been stated in several decisions. The same applies when the Legislature reasonably applies a uniform rate after equalising matters between diversely situated persons. Simply stated the law is this. Differences in treatment must be capable of being reasonably explained in the light of the object for which the particular legislation is undertaken. This must be based on some reasonable distinction between the cases differentially treated. When differential treatment is not reasonably explained and justified the treatment is discriminatory. If different subjects are equally treated there must be some basis on which the differences have been equalised otherwise discrimination will be found. To be able to succeed in the charge of discrimination, a person must establish conclusively that persons equally circumstanced have been treated unequally and vice versa.

Taking these principles into consideration it cannot be said that the Act singles out any particular plantation for hostile or unequal treatment. As between different tea gardens, it is not possible to say that the difference in the yield is entirely due to natural circumstances and not other causes. It is, therefore not possible to say that there is discrimination notwithstanding the uniform rate for each plantation based on the actual crop yielding area.

Per Shelat and Grover, JJ. (dissenting): The fact that a person holds a large area of land and is taxed according to the area he holds cannot by itself mean that in taxing him he is meted out equal treatment as compared to a person who holds a lesser quantity of land but of a better and more productive quality, merely on the ground that both hold land and are taxed according to the quantity each of them holds. A uniform tax without consideration of its incidence, when actually implemented must result in inequality of treatment amongst persons similarly situated, and therefore, would be violative of Article 14 of the Constitution of India.

The tax under the Kerala Act XVII of 1960, as amended by Act XIX of 1967, is imposed in respect of lands as an ad hoc uniform tax irrespective of the kind of their soil or their capacity, etc. and only for the reason of their particular user. Prima facie, the incidence of such a tax by reason of its uniformity is bound to be unequal on persons similarly situated and would, therefore, be hit by the equality clause in Article 14. Imposing a uniform rate of tax in respect of lands without classifying them on the basis of their productivity, actual or potential, and without differentiating the inferior from the superior kind of soil or without taking into consideration the fact of some of those lands being situated in more advantageous position than the rest, must inevitably result in unequal incidence of the tax on those who hold those lands. Hence the present case is one where inequality emerges as a result of imposing an ad hoc tax, uniformly levied without making any rational or intelligible classification.

Even amongst the selected plantations inequality as a result of uniformity of tax must result because it is possible that the user of the land for one specified purpose may give a better and more valuable yield than the user of another land though situated in the same area for another specified purpose.

Gottipulla Venkata Siva Subramanyam v.
The State of Andhra Pradesh.

Crl.A. No. 75 of 1967.

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), sections 96 to 106—Right of private defence—Nature and extent—Accused pleading alibi and not right of private defence—Court if precluded from giving benefit of right of private defence.

The right of private defence of person and property is recognised in all free, civilised, democratic societies within certain reasonable limits. Those limits are dictated by two considerations: (1) that the same right is claimed by all other members of the society and (2) that it is the State which generally undertakes the responsibility for the maintenance of law and order. The citizens, as a general rule, are neither expected to run away for safety when faced with grave and imminent danger to their person or property as a result of unlawful aggression, nor are they expected, by use of force, to right the wrongs done to them or to punish the wrongdoer for commission of offences. The right of private defence serves a social purpose and as observed by the Supreme Court more than once, there is nothing more degrading to the human spirit than to run away in face of peril. But this right is basically preventive and not punitive.

(Provisions of sections 96 to 106 of Penal Code summarised).

On the fact and circumstances of this case the use of his gun by the accused was justified. In a situation like this it is not possible for an average person whose mental excitement can be better imagined than described, to weigh the position in golden scales and it was well-nigh impossible for the person placed in the position of the accused to take a calm and objective view expected in the detached atmosphere of a Court and calculate with arithmetical precision as to how much force would effectively serve the purpose of self-defence and when to stop.

The fact that the plea of self defence was not raised by the accused and that he had on the contrary pleaded alibi does not preclude the Court from giving to him the benefit of the right of private defence, if, on proper appraisal of the evidence and other relevant material on the record, the Court concludes that the circumstances in which he found himself at the relevant time gave him the right to use his gun in exercise of this right. When there is evidence proving that a person accused of killing or injuring another acted in the exercise of the right of private defence, the Court would not be justified in ignoring that evidence and convicting the accused merely because the latter has set up a defence of alibi and set forth a plea different from the right of private defence. The analogy of estoppel or of the technical rules of civil pleadings is, in cases like the present, inappropriate and the Courts are expected to administer the law of private defence in a practical way with reasonable liberality so as to effectuate its underlying object, bearing in mind that the essential basic character of this right is preventive and not retributive.

in foreign countries. The cultural Colombo Plan and Thailand scholars are given admission in medical institutions in this country by reason of reciprocal arrangements of educational and cultural nature. Regarding Jammu and Kashmir scholars it must be remembered that the problems relating to them are of peculiar nature and there do not exist adequate arrangements for medical education in the State itself for its residents. The classification in all these cases is based on intelligible differentia which distinguishes them from the group to which the appellants belong.

The Government cannot be denied the right to decide from what sources the admission will be made. That essentially is a question of policy and depends inter alia on an overall assessment and survey of the requirements of residents of particular territories and other categories of persons for whom it is essential to provide facilities for medical education. If the sources are properly classified whether on territorial, geographical or other reasonable basis it is not for the Courts to interfere with the manner and method of making the classification.

The main purpose of admission to a medical college is to impart education in the theory and practice of medicine. The sources from which students have to be drawn are primarily determined by the authorities who maintain and run the institution, e.g., the Central Government in the present case. In (Minor) *P. Rajendran v. State of Madras*¹ it has been stated that the object of selection for admission is to secure the best possible material. This can surely be achieved by making proper rules in the matter of selection but there can be no doubt that such selection has to be confined to the sources that are intended to supply the material. If the sources have been classified in the manner done in the present case it is difficult to see how that classification has no rational nexus with the object of imparting medical education and also of selection for the purpose.

Held also that, the appellants do not have any right to challenge the nominations made by the Central Government. They do not compete for the reserved seats and have no locus standi in the matter of nomination to such seats. The assumption that if nominations to reserved seats are not in accordance with the rules all such seats as have not been properly filled up would be thrown open to the general pool is wholly unfounded.

Appeal from the Judgment and Order, dated the 3rd December, 1968 of the Delhi High Court in Civil Writ Petition No. 817 of 1968.

B. C. Mishra, Senior Advocate, (M. V. Goswami, Advocate, with him), for Appellants.

B. Sen, Senior Advocate, (S. P. Nayar, Advocate, with him), for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 4.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is an appeal by certificate from a judgment of the Delhi High Court dismissing a petition filed by the appellants under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution in the matter of their admission to the Maulana Azad Medical College, New Delhi, hereinafter called the "Medical College."

The appellants are residents of Delhi. They passed the pre-medical examination of the Delhi University held in April 1968 and obtained 62.5 per cent marks. In June 1968 they applied for admission to the first year M.B.B.S. class at the Lady Hardinge Medical College, New Delhi but they were not admitted. Thereafter they applied for admission to the Maulana Azad Medical College. This college, which is a constituent of the University of Delhi, was established by the Government of India in June 1958. According to the college prospectus, 125 students are admitted annually; 15 per cent. seats are reserved for scheduled caste candidates and 5 per cent. for scheduled tribes candidates; 25 per cent. of these seats (excluding the seats reserved for Government of India nominees) are reserved for girl students who are taken on the basis of merit. The following categories of students only are eligible for admission:

(a) Residents of Delhi.....

(b) (i) Sons/daughters of Central Government servants posted in Delhi at the time of the admission.

(ii) Candidate whose father is dead and is wholly dependent on brother/sister who is a Central Government servant posted in Delhi at the time of the admission.

(c) Sons/daughters of residents of Union territories specified below including displaced persons registered therein and sponsored by their respective Administration of Territory :—

(i) Himachal Pradesh (ii) Tripura (iii) Manipura (iv) Naga Hills
(v) N.E.F.A. (iv) Andaman.

(d) Sons/daughters of Central Government servants posted in Indian Missions abroad.

(e) Cultural scholars.

(f) Colombo Plan scholars.

(g) Thailand scholars.

(h) Jammu and Kashmir State scholars.

According to the note 23 seats are reserved for categories (c) to (h) above. The minimum percentage of marks which a candidate seeking admission must have obtained in the aggregate of compulsory subjects is 55.

Now the appellants had obtained 62.5 per cent marks and were domiciled in Delhi. According to them they were entitled to admission and would have been admitted but for the reservation of the seats which were filled by nominations by the Central Government. In the year 1968 when the appellants sought admission 9 students had been nominated by the Central Government out of the 23 seats which had been reserved for categories (c) to (h) mentioned above. These students had obtained less percentage of marks than the appellants. The appellants filed a writ petition in the High Court challenging primarily the power of the Central Government to make the nominations. It was prayed that these nominations, be struck down and the respondents (Union of India, Medical College, University of Delhi, etc.) be directed to admit the appellants and all other students who were eligible strictly in the order of merit. The writ petition was disposed of by a Division Bench of the High Court. The authority of the Central Government to select candidates for the reserved seats was upheld. It was however, found that among the nine seats filled in the Medical College by the Government, two nominations had been made contrary to the admission rules. The High Court was of the view that these two seats would also become a part of the general pool for admission of candidates on merit. The order was, therefore, made in the following terms :

“ We, therefore, direct the respondents 1 to 4 as follows : two seats shall be filled immediately for admission to the first year M.B.B.S. Course of the College from the merits list in which petitioner No. 1 is number 4 and petitioner No. 2 is number 9. The respondents 1 to 4 shall immediately enquire from the candidates who are above the petitioners in order of merit whether they want the admissions and on their failure to reply in a short time or on their refusal to accept the offer, the admission shall be made either of the petitioners or of other candidates who are above them in the merits list within one week from today.”

In December 1968, the appellants filed a petition under section 114 and Order 47, rule 1 read with section 141, Civil Procedure Code seeking a review of the judgment and order dated 3rd December 1968. This petition was dismissed by the High Court by a detailed order dated 27th January 1969. On 1st February 1969, a petition was filed under Articles 133 (1) (c) and 132 (1) of the Constitution for leave to appeal to this Court. In the prayer Leave was sought against the judgment dismissing the writ petition as also the order by which the review petition was disposed of. In the certificate, however, in the heading only the judgment dated 3rd December 1968 is mentioned. It would appear that the certificate was limited to the appeal against the writ petition. This would be so because under Order 47, rule 7 the order of the Court rejecting the application for review is not appealable. If the appellants desired to challenge that order it could have been done only by asking for leave of this Court under Article 136 which was never done. In these circumstances the arguments of Mr. B. C. Misra for the appellants were confined to the matters decided by the judgment dated 3rd December, 1968.

It is common ground that the University of Delhi is a statutory body incorporated by the Delhi University Act of 1922 as amended from time to time. Under section 30 of that Act Ordinances can be made providing for various matters which include the admission of students to the University and their enrolment as such. Ordinance II provides that there shall be a Medical Courses Admission Committee. It is this committee which finalises the cases of admission except those which are to be referred to the Standing Committee on account of any special features. The Medical Courses Admission Committee at its meeting held on 5th November, 1965, recognised that 23 seats in the Medical College shall be reserved for certain categories for nomination. This reservation was approved by the Standing Committee of the Academic Council of the Delhi University and finally by the Academic Council itself by means of a resolution dated 3rd March, 1966. In the High Court and before us both sides argued on the footing that the rules set out in the prospectus of the Medical College relating to admission have statutory sanction and are not of a purely administrative nature.

Before the High Court only two questions were raised. The first was whether the provision for reservation for seats was unconstitutional. The second was whether the nominations to the reserved seats had been made contrary to the rules. Mr. Misra has amplified the first submission by urging that the reservation of seats for admission to the Medical College was not based on any reasonable classification and suffered from the vice of discrimination. According to him such reservation was hit by Article 14 read with clauses (1) and (4) of Article 15 and clause (2) of Article 29 of the Constitution. In addition the system of nominations being made by the Government and not by the Admission Committee was per se discriminatory.

Article 29 (2) may be read first. It says, no citizen shall be denied admission into any educational institution maintained by the State or receiving aid out of State funds on grounds only of religion, race, caste, language or any of them. Under clause (1) of Article 15 the State cannot discriminate against any citizen on grounds only of religion, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them. Clause (4), however, provides that nothing in the Article shall prevent the State from making any special provision for the advancement of any socially and educationally backward classes of citizens or for the scheduled castes and tribes. According to Mr. Misra the categories (c) to (h) contained in rule 4 relating to eligibility for admission for whom seats are reserved do not fall within the exception contained in clause 4 of Article 15. The persons in these categories, it is said, cannot be regarded as socially and educationally backward classes of citizens nor can it be supposed that all of them must belong to scheduled castes and tribes.

We are unable to see how Article 15 (1) can be invoked in the present case. The rules do not discriminate between any citizen on grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them. Nor is Article 29 (2) of any assistance to the appellants. They are not being denied admission into the Medical College on grounds only of religion, race, caste, language or any of them. This brings us to Article 14. It is claimed that merit should be the sole criterion and as soon as other factors like those mentioned in clauses (c) to (h) to rule 4 are introduced, discrimination becomes apparent.

As laid down in *Shri Ram Krishna Dalmia v. Shri Justice S. R. Tendolkar and others*¹, Article 14 forbids class legislation; it does not forbid reasonable classification. In other to pass the test of permissible classification two conditions must be fulfilled: (i) that the classification is founded on intelligible differential which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group and, (ii) that differential must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved. The first group of persons for whom seats have been reserved are the sons and daughters of residents of Union territories other than Delhi. These areas are well known to be comparatively backward and with the exception of Himachal Pradesh they do not have any Medical College of their own. It was necessary that persons desirous of receiving medical education from these areas should be provided some facility for doing so. As regards the sons and daughters of Central Government servants posted in Indian Missions abroad it is equally well known that due to exigencies of their service these persons are faced with lot of difficulties in the matter of education. Apart from the problems of language, it is not easy or always possible to get admission into institutions imparting medical education in foreign countries. The cultural, Colombo Plan and Thailand scholars are given admission in medical institutions in this country by reason of reciprocal arrangements of educational and cultural nature. Regarding Jammu and Kashmir scholars it must be remembered that the problems relating to them are of a peculiar nature and there do not exist adequate arrangements for medical education in the State itself for its residents. The classification in all these cases is based on intelligible differential which distinguishes them from the group to which the appellants belong.

It is the Central Government which bears the financial burden of running the medical college. It is for it to lay down the criteria for eligibility. From the very nature of things it is not possible to throw the admission open to students from all over the country. The Government cannot be denied the right to decide from what sources the admission will be made. That essentially is a question of policy and depends inter alia on an overall assessment and survey of the requirements of residents of particular territories and other categories of persons for whom it is essential to provide facilities for medical education. If the sources are properly classified whether on territorial, geographical or other reasonable basis it is not for the Courts to interfere with the manner and method of making the classification.

The next question that has to be determined is whether the differential on which classification has been made has rational relation with the object to be achieved. The main purpose of admission to a medical college is to impart education in the theory and practice of medicine. As noticed before the sources from which students have to be drawn are primarily determined by the authorities who maintain and run the institution, e.g., the Central Government in the present case. In (Minor) *P. Rajendran v. State of Madras*¹, it has been stated that the object of selection for admission is to secure the best possible material. This can surely be achieved by making proper rules in the matter of selection but there can be no doubt that such selection has to be confined to the sources that are intended to supply the material. If the sources have been classified in the manner done in the present case it is difficult to see how that classification has no rational nexus with the object of imparting medical education and also of selection for the purpose.

The case of (Minor) *P. Rajendran*¹ is clearly distinguishable because there the classification had been made districtwise which was considered to have no reasonable relation with the object sought to be achieved. Nor can the decision of a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in *Umesh Ch. Sinha v. V. N. Singh, Principal, P.M.C. and Hospital and others*², be of any avail to the appellants. In that case preferential treatment had been given to the children of the employees of the Patna University in the matter of admission to the Patna Medical College. It was held that there was no reasonable nexus between the principle governing admission to the college on the one hand and the pecuniary difficulties or the meritorious services reserved seats cannot be considered to be preferential treatment of any kind. Preferential treatment to the children of these employees would amount to favouritism and patronage. There is no question of any preferential treatment being accorded to any particular category or class of persons desirous of receiving medical education in the present case. The mere fact that the Central Government has to make the nominations with regard to the reserved seats cannot be considered to be preferential treatment of any kind. As the candidate for the reserved seats have to be drawn from different sources it would be difficult to have uniformity in the matter of selection from amongst them. The High Court was right in saying that the standards of the examination passed by them, the subjects studied by them and the educational background of each of them would be different and divergent and therefore the Central Government was the appropriate authority which could make a proper selection out of those categories. Moreover this is being done with the tacit approval and consent of the Medical Courses Admission Committee. It appears that the Central Government has been acting in a very reasonable way inasmuch as when nominations were made only to nine seats the rest were thrown open to the general pool.

The other question which was canvassed before the High Court and which has been pressed before us relates to the merits of the nomination made to the reserved seats. It seems to us that the appellants do not have any right to challenge the nominations made by the Central Government. They do not compete for the reserved seats and have no locus standi in the matter of nomination to such seats. The assumption that if nominations to reserved seats are not in accordance with the rules all such seats as have not been properly filled up would be thrown open to the general pool is wholly unfounded. The Central Government is under no obligation to release those seat to the general pool. It may in the larger interest of giving maximum benefit to candidates belonging to the non-reserved seats release them but it cannot be compelled to do so at the instance of students who have applied for admission from out of the categories for whom seats have not been reserved. In our opinion the High Court was in error in going into the question and holding that out of the nine seats filled by nomination two had been filled contrary to the admission rules and these would be converted into the general pool. Since no appeal has been filed against that part of the order we refrain from making any further observations in the matter.

Finally Mr. Misra attempted to agitate the question of some of the nominations being illegal as the candidate who had been nominated had not applied in time—the prescribed date being 1st August, 1968. This contention cannot be entertained for two reasons. The first is that no such point appears to have been raised before the High Court when the writ petition was disposed of on 3rd December, 1968. It is only at the stage of review that this matter seems to have been pressed. Secondly it has been held by us that the appellants had no right to challenge the nominations which had been made by the Central Government. It was not therefore, open to them to assail any of the nominations which had been made.

The appeal fails and it is dismissed with no order as to costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction)

PRESENT :—M. HIDAYATULLAH, Chief Justice AND G. K. MITTER, J.

Shaikh Mahamad Umarsaheb

v.

Kadalaskar Hasham Karimsab and others

.. Respondents.

Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 [XL of 1965], section 7—Scope—Election petition—Reception of evidence of two witnesses called as Court witnesses, if vitiates the whole trial—Order 16, rule 14, Civil Procedure Code.

The case of the election petitioner was that the appellant was guilty of publication of two pamphlets which cast serious aspersions on his character and conduct and prejudiced him materially in the eyes of the voters as a result whereof he lost the election and that the first of these also aroused the religious sentiments of Muslim voters to his detriment. The appellant was found guilty of publication of the first pamphlet only. This was signed by six persons. There was no evidence as to where it was printed or who got it printed. The evidence adduced by the election petitioner was that the appellant had published all the pamphlets mentioned in the petition and distributed the same amongst the voters and the petitioner had come across the first pamphlet during the process of distribution. There can be no two opinions about the contents of the pamphlet being defamatory of the election petitioner's character. It may be that in the instant case, if the two persons had not been examined, the Judge might well have decided the issue the other way. But the Act certainly gave him the power to do so and no exception can be taken to the course adopted by the Judge although it must be recorded that his earlier order refusing to issue summons to them in the first instance when asked to do so on the 21st August was hardly justifiable. Probably the learned Judge realised that his order of the 21st August, needed recalling. The appellant would have had a real cause for grievance if he had asked for an opportunity to rebut the evidence of these two witnesses and had been denied the same but this has nowhere been alleged. On the evidence no exception can be taken to the course adopted by the Judge in deciding the issue against the appellant on the facts and circumstance of this case. It may be that the evidence which was adduced was not so immaculate that another learned Judge deciding the petition might not have taken a different view. But it cannot be said that there was no evidence on which the Judge could have come to the conclusion he did.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Order dated the 4th October, 1968 of the Bombay High Court in Special Civil Application No. 2053 of 1968.

N. N. Keswani, for Appellant.

M/s. R. B. Datar and S. N. Prasad, for Respondent No. 1.

S. P. Nayar, for Respondents Nos. 2 to 4.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal by Special Leave from an order of the Bombay High Court dismissing in limine an application under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution and refusing to quash the judgment and order of the Assistant Judge at Sangli rendered in Election Petition No. 10 of 1967. The facts are as follows :

On 3rd June, 1967 election of councillors to the Sangli City Municipality was held under the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 (hereinafter referred to as the 'Act'). The counting of votes took place with regard to Ward No. 25 on 4th June, 1967. According to the election petition, the results were published in the Official Gazette on 15th June, 1967 and the petition was filed on 24th June, 1967. The petitioner who was himself a candidate for election from the said ward challenged the election of the appellant before us on several grounds set forth in paragraph 3 of the petition. The first of these was to the effect that the appellant had, with the help of his supporters, published an undated pamphlet and circulated the same on a large scale among the voters in Ward No. 25 and that the said pamphlet contained untrue, false and defamatory statements about the petitioner thereby prejudicing the voters generally against him and in particular instigating the Muslim voters to vote against him by arousing their religious sentiments. Another similar ground based on a defamatory pamphlet dated 30th May, 1967 was urged in the petition. Charges of terrorising voters and securing votes by false personation were also levelled therein. Statements were made in the petition that the appellant's name as councillor had been declared in the Official Gazette on 15th June, 1967 and the petitioner's cause of action had arisen on that date. The first of these was expressly accepted as correct in the written statement of the appellant and the second remained unchallenged. The appellant however repelled the charges mentioned above and denied that he was responsible for the publication of any of the impugned pamphlets.

Of the four issues framed at the hearing of the petition, the first was :

“Whether the petitioner proved that opponent No.1 who was elected as Municipal Councillor for Ward No. 25 had used malpractices at the time of the election by arousing religious sentiments of the voters and making defamatory statements against the petitioner by publishing pamphlets ?”

The petitioner gave evidence himself about the allegations in the petition to substantiate the charges raised by him. The appellant examined himself to contradict the said evidence. It appears that the petitioner had in the list of witnesses filed by him, mentioned the names of two persons, Hakim Abdul Razhiman Shaikh and Gopal Chintaman Ghugare and that these two persons had attended the Court on certain days when they were not examined. On 21st August, 1968 the petitioner made an application before the Judge for issuing summons on these two persons as his witnesses but the learned Judge rejected that application. The appellant's case was closed on the same day and the arguments started on 22nd August, 1968. On that date the Court adjourned the hearing of the case to 24th August, 1968 for recording the evidence of these two witnesses in respect of whom an application had been made by the election petitioner on the previous day. The order Exhibit 36, dated 22nd August, 1968 tends to show that the learned Judge was persuaded to do so by the mere fact that they were Government servants. He however recorded that the ends of justice required that these witnesses should be examined. He fixed 24th August, 1968 for further hearing of the matter and directed the issue of summonses to these two persons. These two persons were examined on the 24th August as Court witnesses and thereafter the argument of Counsel was resumed and concluded. By judgment delivered on 30th August, 1968, the learned Judge allowed the election petition holding in favour of the petitioner on the first issue. The appellant before us presented an application to the High Court under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution for quashing the order of the Judge; but the High Court dismissed the writ petition in limine on 4th October, 1968 and the appellant has now come up before this Court by Special Leave.

Learned Counsel for the appellant raised five points before us. The first point was that the procedure adopted by the trial Court was wrong in that the two witnesses who were examined as Court witnesses had been cited by the election petitioner earlier and the learned Judge had in the exercise of jurisdiction vested in him refused to issue summonses to them when he was asked to do so on 21st August, 1968. It was urged that having rejected this application, it was not open to the Judge to examine these two persons as Court witnesses and this was a serious irregularity which the High Court should have set right by quashing the order of the Judge based on the evidence of these witnesses. The second point was that the election petition was filed beyond the period prescribed by the Act and as such it was not maintainable. The third point was that the first issue which was decided against the appellant was so confusing and misleading that there was no fair trial of the petition to the prejudice of the appellant. The fourth point was that in any event there was no evidence of corrupt practice of which the appellant could be found guilty. The fifth point was that the order of the Judge disqualifying the appellant for a period of five years was unduly harsh and ought to be set aside.

With regard to the first point it is to be noted that the case of the election petitioner was that the appellant was guilty of publication of two pamphlets which cast serious aspersions on his character and conduct and prejudiced him materially in the eyes of the voters as a result whereof he lost the election and that the first of these also aroused the religious sentiments of the Muslim voters to his detriment. The appellants was found guilty of publication of the first pamphlet only. This was signed by six persons. There was no evidence as to where it was printed or who got it printed. The evidence adduced by the election petitioner was that the appellant had published all the pamphlets mentioned in the petition and distributed the same amongst the voters and the petitioner had come across the first pamphlet during the process of distribution. There can be no two opinions about the contents of the pamphlet being defamatory of the election petitioner's character. The pamphlet read :

"H. K. Kadlaskar, who contests the election from Ward No. 25 is an independent candidate, has been ostracized from the Muslim community and he has no support of the Muslim community and therefore nobody should vote for him."

While Kadlaskar was in charge of the management of the Kabarasthan, he was extracting Rs. 12 for allowing the members of Muslim community to bury their dead and had prohibited the burial of the dead bodies of dancing girls and had extracted hundreds of rupees from the persons whose dead were buried there. He turned the Kabarasthan into a brothel and was trading in illicit liquor for which he was convicted. Recently he got published a pamphlet in the name of his mistress Noorjahan Bapulal Kavathekar to defame Mohamad Umar Shaikh and he is making some imputations against the private character of Mohamad Umar and Moulana hannan and nobody should vote for this mean-minded and anti-social person.

In a meeting of the Muslim workers held on 29th April, 1967 in the Madina Masjid Hall under the presidentship of M.G. Shaik it was resolved unanimously that in the place of Shaikh Usman Abdul Bidiwale the Congress ticket should be given to Umar Shaikh, who had the backing of Muslim community and that he did great public service in the past. So all the voters should cast vote in favour of Mohamad Umar Shaikh whose symbol is a pair of bullocks.

(1) Ramjan Mohiddin Jamadar (Hundekari), Chairman Idgah Committee. (2) Shaik Abdul Sattur Rahimanbhai Bidiwale, Treasurer, Idgah Fund Committee. (3) Moulana Hannan, manager of Madarsa-e-Hidayatul Islam, and member of Madina Masjid. (4) Kamalsaheb Babasaheb Shiledar, Chairman of Madina Masjid and member of Idgah Committee. (5) Sayyed Amin, member of Madarsac-Hidayatul Islam and Idgah Committee. (6) Jalaluddin Allabux Sayyad, B-A., Ll. B., member of Madarsa-e-Hidayatul Islam."

The appellant who led evidence on his own behalf denied the publication of the pamphlet and the distribution of it by him as alleged by the petitioner. Nothing came out in cross-examination of the appellant to substantiate the election petitioner's averment that he was responsible for its distribution. Of the two witnesses who were examined as Court witnesses by the Judge, the witness Gopal Chintaman Ghugare did not say anything material on the point of distribution by the appellant. He merely said that he had seen people reading the pamphlet but he did not know who had distributed it. The other witness Hakim Abdul Rahiman Shaik stated categorically that he had received a copy of the pamphlet on the day previous to the municipal election, that is to say, on 2nd June 1967 and he gave full particulars as to how he came to receive it. He stated that he had attended a prayer meeting at a mosque on the 2nd June and after the Namaj was over the appellant had read over the pamphlet and one Moulana Hannan lent support to the appellant. In cross-examination it was elicited from him that although he had occasion to see the distribution of other pamphlets, he could give no details thereof, i.e., either about the person who distributed them on the dates when that was done. In cross-examination of this witness serious accusations were made against his character and probably no exception could have been taken if the Judge hearing the matter had refused to believe him. However that may be, the learned Judge accepted his testimony and came to the conclusion that the appellant had been personally responsible for the distribution of the first pamphlet and as such found him guilty of a corrupt practice and made an order disqualifying him under the Act from taking part in municipal elections for the next five years.

It was strenuously argued by learned Counsel for the appellant that the reception of evidence of the two witnesses called as Court witnesses vitiated the whole trial and therefore the High Court was not right in refusing to quash the order. Our attention was drawn to the provisions of Order XVI rule 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure and particularly to the conditions under which the Court may examine any person other than a party to the suit and not called as a witness by a party to the suit but of its own motion to give evidence therein. It was argued that after having turned down the application of the election petitioner on the 21st August for issue of summons to these two persons, the learned Judge clearly went wrong in allowing them to be called as Court witnesses. In this connection we may note the provisions of section 21, sub-section 7 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. It provides as follows :—

(7) For the trial of such petition, the Judge shall have all the powers of a civil Court including power in respect of the following matters:—

(a) discovery and inspection ;

(b) enforcing the attendance of witnesses and requiring the deposit of their expenses ;

(c) compelling the production of documents :

(d) examining witnesses on oath ;

(e) granting adjournments ;

(f) reception of evidence on affidavit ; and

(g) issuing commissions for the examination of witnesses ; and the Judge may summon suo motu any person whose evidence appears to him to be material. The Judge shall be deemed to be a civil Court, within the meaning of sections 480 and 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.”

It appears that under this section, the Judge is given powers wider than those given by the Code of Civil Procedure under Order 16 rule 14 inasmuch as the section does not prescribe any prerequisite to the examination of a person as Court witness as envisaged by the Code of Civil Procedure. In our view, the learned Judge had jurisdiction to call these two persons as witness under the provisions of the Act. We may note that even under the Representation of the People Act, 1951 which does not contain a similar provision it has been held by this Court that “although the trial Court should be at arms length and the Court should not really enter into the dispute as a third party, but it is not to be understood that the Court never has the power to summon a witness or to call for a document which would throw light upon the matter, particularly of corrupt practice which is alleged and is being sought to be proved. If the Court was satisfied that a corrupt practice has in fact been perpetrated, may be by one side or the other, it was absolutely necessary to find out who was the author of that corrupt practice.” [See R.M. Seshadri v. G. Vasanta Pai]¹.

In that case, the corrupt practice with which the appellant was charged was having used a large number of motor vehicles for the free conveyance of voters at an election. The trial Judge examined two witnesses as Court witnesses and it is quite clear that but for the evidence of these two persons, it would have been very difficult, if not impossible, for the Judge to have come to the conclusion he did and find the appellant guilty of corrupt practice. Although one of the two witnesses so examined had been cited earlier as a witness by one of the parties, he was not examined but during the course of the evidence led before the trial Court, it became quite clear that the two persons who were called as Court witnesses were fully conversant with the engagement of the motor vehicles and the Court therefore examined them as Court witnesses and on the basis of their evidence, found the appellant guilty of a corrupt practice. There this Court had to deal with the provisions of Order 16, rule 14 and the quotation from that judgment shows that the powers of the Court in this respect are of wide amplitude, specially when investigation is being made into allegations about the commission of a corrupt practice. It may be that in the instant case, if the two persons had not been examined, the Judge might well have decided the issue the other way.

1. (1969) 2 S.C.J. 208 : (1969) 2 M.L.J. 1969 S.C. 692.

But the Act certainly gave him the power to do so and no exception can be taken to the course adopted by the Judge although it must be recorded that his earlier order refusing to issue summons to them in the first instance when asked to do so on the 21st August was hardly justifiable. Probably the learned Judge realised that his order of the 21st August needed recalling. The appellant would have had a real cause for grievance if he had asked for an opportunity to rebut the evidence of these two witnesses and had been denied the same but this has nowhere been alleged. On the evidence no exception can be taken to the course adopted by the Judge in deciding the issue against the appellant on the facts and circumstances of this case. It may be that the evidence which was adduced was not so immaculate that another learned Judge deciding the petition might not have taken a different view. But it cannot be said that there was no evidence on which the Judge could have come to the conclusion he did. The first point therefore fails.

With regard to the second point, the learned Counsel argued by reference to two publications in the Maharashtra Gazette, the one of 8th June, 1967 and the other of 15th June, 1967 that the first publication having taken place on the 8th June the time-limit of ten days fixed under section 21, sub-section (1) of the Act began to run from that date and the petition which was filed on the 24th June was beyond time and should not have been entertained. It is difficult for us to see why two Gazette notifications had become necessary. One seems to be the verbatim reprint of the other. The first publication dated 8th June is headed "Maharashtra Government Gazette—Extraordinary—Official publication" while the other is headed "Maharashtra Government Gazette—Official Publication". The first bears the date 8th June and the second bears the date 15th June and both start with the sentence, "in accordance with section 19 (1) of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 it is declared that in respect of the Sangli Municipal Council General Elections held on 3rd June 1967, the below mentioned candidates are elected from the below mentioned wards for the seats mentioned as against their names".

As a matter of fact, it does not appear that there is any difference between the two Gazettes with regard to the names of the successful councillors. The appellant might have, if so minded, set up the first Gazette publication as the one fixing the period of limitation in which case the trial Judge would have been required to go into the matter. But the appellant precluded himself from doing so by his unconditional acceptance of the statements in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the petition. If the point had been canvassed before the learned trial Judge he would certainly have gone into the matter and found out why there were two Gazette publications and which was the publication to be taken into account for computation of the period of limitation prescribed by section 21 (1) of the Act. There was no error apparent on the face of the record before the High Court and consequently the jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution could not have been exercised on the facts of the case by the issue of a writ of certiorari. Neither could the High Court have set aside the order of the trial Court under Article 227 of the Constitution under which the High Court's power of superintendence is confined to seeing that the trial Court had not transgressed the limits imposed by the Act. On the facts of the case the High Court was not called upon to go into this question.

There is certainly some substance in the grievance raised on behalf of the appellant that the first issue was rather confusing and misleading. Instead of framing a separate issue with regard to each charge of corrupt practice raised in the petition, the learned Judge framed the issue in a manner which leaves much to be desired. For instance he should have framed separate issue with regard to each of the pamphlets. The issues should further have specified the different heads of corrupt practice committed in respect of each of the pamphlets. We cannot, however, come to the conclusion that because of the unsatisfactory nature of the issues framed, the whole trial is vitiated. The appellant knew exactly what points he had to meet. Evidence was adduced about the publication and distribution of the pamphlets by the election petitioner and contradicted by the appellant. As we have already stated, although the evidence about the distribution of the pamphlet was meagre and not beyond reproach, it was not for the High Court to take the view that the order ought to be quashed on the ground that there was no evidence. It was urged by learned Counsel for the appellant that there was enough material for the Court to come to the conclusion that Hakim Abdul Rahiman Shaik was not a person whose veracity could not be depended upon. There is much that can be said against him but this does not mean that everything deposed to by him should be rejected and when the trial Judge accepted the evidence with regard to the distribution of the pamphlet by the appellant the High Court which was not hearing an appeal could not be expected to take a different view in exercising jurisdiction under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution and for ourselves, we see no reason to interfere with the order of the High Court.

The fourth point too is not one of substance. If the distribution of the pamphlet be accepted, there can be no doubt that the appellant was guilty of trying to arouse religious sentiments of the voters of the particular ward a majority of whom were Muslims. The pamphlet starts off by describing the election petitioner as a person ostracised from the Muslim community. If this statement was true, naturally any right thinking Muslim would think twice before casting his vote in favour of such person. There was also a charge in that pamphlet that he had turned the Kabaraasthan into a brothel and was trading in illicit liquor for which he was alleged to have been convicted. In our view, there is no merit in this point raised by the learned Counsel.

As regards the last point, it was for the learned Judge to have come to his own conclusion as to the period of disqualification. The maximum penalty which the Act allowed him to impose was disqualification for six years and we see no reason to take any exception to the disqualification actually imposed. As noted above, the allegations of corrupt practice were of a serious nature and if the appellant was found guilty of the commission thereof, the period of five years' disqualification would certainly not be inappropriate.

In the result, therefore, the appeal fails ; but in the circumstances of this case we make no order as to costs.

The State of Gujarat

v.

Patel Raghav Natha and others

.. Respondents.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (V of 1879), sections 65 and 211—Interpretation—Order of the Collector—Revisional powers—Exercise of—No stipulation of time—Commissioner to exercise his powers within reasonable time.

The question arises whether the Commissioner can revise an order made under section 65 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879 at any time. It is true that there is no period of limitation prescribed under section 211, but it seems plain that this power must be exercised in reasonable time and the length of the reasonable time must be determined by the facts of the case and the nature of the order which is being revised. Section 65 itself indicates the length of the reasonable time within which the Commissioner must act under section 211. Under section 65 of the Code if the Collector does not inform the applicant of his decision on the application within a period of three months the permission applied for shall be deemed to have been granted. This section shows that a period of three months is considered ample for the Collector to make up his mind and beyond that the Legislature thinks that the matter is so urgent that permission shall be deemed to have been granted. Reading sections 211 and 65 together it seems to us that the Commissioner must exercise his revisional powers within a few months of the order of the Collector. This is reasonable time because after the grant of the permission for building purposes the occupant is likely to spend money on starting building operations at least within a few months from the date of the permission. In this case the Commissioner set aside the order of the Collector on 12th October, 1961, i.e., more than a year after the order, and it seems that this order was passed too late. The order of the Commissioner should be quashed on the ground that he did not give any reasons for his conclusions.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 25th/27th July, 1964 of the Gujarat High Court in Special Civil Application No. 31 of 1962.

R. H. Dhrbar, Urmila Kapoor and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Appellant.

Purshottam Trikamdas, Senior Advocate, (I. N. Shroff, Advocate, with him), for Respondent No. 1.

N. S. Bindra, Senior Advocate, (K. L. Hathi, Advocate of M/s. Hathi & Co., with him), for Respondent No. 3.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sikri, J.—This appeal by Special Leave is directed against the judgment of the High Court of Gujarat (Vakil, J.) allowing the application filed by Patel Raghav Natha, respondent before us and hereinafter referred to as the petitioner, and quashing the order, dated 12th October, 1961, passed by the Commissioner Rajkot Division. The Commissioner by this order had set aside the order of the Collector, dated 2nd July, 1960, granting permission to the petitioner to use some land in Survey No. 417 for non-agricultural purposes.

In order to appreciate the contentions raised before us it is necessary to set out a few facts. The petitioner was a resident of the State of Rajkot and at an auction effected by the State he acquired on or about 22nd September, 1938, agricultural land bearing survey No. 417 which in all measured about 12 acres and 12 ganthas. After some acquisitions by the State out of this survey number he was left with 2 acres and 10 ganthas of agricultural land. On 20th October, 1958, the petitioner applied to the Collector for permission to convert this land to non-agricultural use, under section 65 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, hereinafter referred to as the Code. This petition was first rejected by the Collector, but the Divisional Commissioner remanded the matter to the Collector. On remand, the then Collector of Rajkot, after holding an enquiry, granted permission to the petitioner to use the land for non-agricultural use by his order dated 2nd July 1960. Pursuant to this order a sanad was issued by the Collector to the petitioner on 27th July 1960. It appears that the sanad was amended on 3rd November, 1960 and 1st December, 1960. The sanad was in form M-1 and a number of conditions were appended to the sanad. Condition 6 of the main sanad provided that "save as herein provided, the grant shall be subject to the provisions of the said code." The special conditions originally included a condition that the land shall be used exclusively for constructing residential houses (condition 5) but this condition was altered in November, 1960.

It appears that the Municipal Committee of Rajkot had objected to the grant of permission before the Collector when a sketch of the land was sent to the Municipality. The objections as they appear from the order of the Collector granting the sanad were directed against the accuracy of the sketch, showing the northern and the western corners of the Ramkrishna Ashram, and regarding the boundaries and situation of the roads in survey Nos. 417 and 418. The Collector had overruled these objections.

The Municipal Committee approached the Commissioner to exercise powers under section 211 of the Code. The Commissioner noted the objections of the Municipality and after reciting the objections and the arguments of the learned Counsel for the petitioner and after inspecting the site, observed :

“ From this inspection the contentions of the Municipality as to the existence of various roads as well as the nature of the Kharaba land has been proved beyond doubt.

In light of the above arguments as well as the site inspection and the papers of the case, I set aside the order of the Collector granting N.A. Permission. I consider, on weighing all evidence cited above, that the land does not belong to Shri Raghav Natha.”

It is this order which has been quashed by the High Court.

The following grounds were urged before the learned Judge :

(1) The Commissioner or the State Government had no authority under section 211 of the Code to revise the order of the Collector so as to affect the agreement or sanad granted to him.

(2) The Commissioner's order is not a speaking order as no reasons are given by him for setting aside the Collector's order and, therefore, it should be quashed.

(3) The question of title to the land was not in controversy at all before the Collector and, therefore, it was not open to the Commissioner to permit the Municipality to agitate that question and the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to decide that question.

(4) In case the above points are not accepted, the order of the Commissioner is bad even on merits as the Commissioner had erred in law in allowing the questions to be agitated before him which were not agitated before the Collector and which involved considerations which were completely foreign to those which were actually before the Collector.

While dealing with ground No. 1 the learned Judge held that the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to pass an order which would nullify the sanad, and that the sanad was binding on both the parties till it was set aside in due course of law. On the second ground he held that there was some force in the submission. But he observed:

“ But at the same time if I had to decide this case on this contention raised. I may not have interfered only on this ground, with the decision of the Commissioner.”

On the third ground he found that it was true that the question of title was agitated by the Municipal Committee for the first time before the Commissioner, though it was primarily for the petitioner to show that he was an occupant within the meaning of section 65 of the Code. But then the learned Judge decided not to enter into the merits of the case as he had come to the clear conclusion that the Commissioner had no authority to pass the order that he did under section 211 of the Code.

The learned Counsel for the State of Gujarat, Mr. Dhebar, challenges the decision of the High Court that the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to pass the order dated 12th October, 1961. The relevant provisions of the Code and the Land Revenue Rules, 1921, hereinafter referred to as the Rules, are as follows :

“ The Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879.

48. (1) The land revenue leviable on any land under the provisions of this Act shall be assessed, or shall be deemed to have been assessed, as the case may be, with reference to the use of the land—

(a) for the purpose of agriculture,

(b) for the purpose of building, and

(c) for a purpose other than agriculture or building.

(2) Where land assessed for use for any purpose is used for any other purpose, the assessment fixed under the provisions of this Act upon such land shall, notwithstanding that the term for which such assessment may have been fixed has not expired, be liable to be altered and fixed at a different rate by such authority and subject to such rules as the State Government may prescribe in this behalf.

(3) Where land held free of assessment on condition of being used for any purpose is used at any time for any other purpose, it shall be liable to assessment.

(4) The Collector or a survey officer may, subject to any rules made in this behalf under section 214, prohibit the use for certain purposes of any unalienated land liable to the payment of land revenue, and may summarily evict any holder who uses or attempts to use the same for any such prohibited purpose.

65. An occupant of land assessed or held for the purpose of agriculture is entitled by himself, his servants, tenants, agents or other legal representatives, to erect farm-buildings, construct wells or tanks, or make any other improvements thereon for the better cultivation of the land, or its more convenient use for the purpose aforesaid.

But, if any occupant wishes to use his holding or any part thereof for any other purpose the Collector's permission shall in the first place be applied for by the occupant.

The Collector, on receipt of such application,

(a) shall send to the applicant a written acknowledgment of its receipt, and

(b) may, after due inquiry, either grant or refuse the permission applied for;

Provided that, where the Collector fails to inform the applicant of his decision on the application within a period of three months, the permission applied for shall be deemed to have been granted; such period shall, if the Collector sends a written acknowledgment within seven days from the date of receipt of the application be reckoned from the date of the acknowledgment, but in any other case it shall be reckoned from the date of receipt of the application.

Unless the Collector shall in particular instances otherwise direct, no such application shall be recognized except it be made by the occupant.

When any such land is thus permitted to be used for any purpose unconnected with agriculture it shall be lawful for the Collector, subject to the general order of the State Government, to require the payment of a fine in addition to any new assessment which may be leviable under the provisions of section 48.

66. If any such land be so used without the permission of the Collector being first obtained, or before the expiry of the period prescribed by section 65, the occupant and any tenant, or other person holding under or through him, shall be liable to be summarily evicted by the Collector from the land so used and from the entire field or survey number of which it may form a part, and the occupant shall also be liable to pay, in addition to the new assessment which may be leviable under the provisions of section 48 for the period during which the said land has been so used, such fine as the Collector may, subject to the general orders of the provincial Government, direct.

Any tenant of any occupant or any other person holding under or through an occupant, who shall without the occupant's consent use any such land for any such purpose, and thereby render the said occupant liable to the penalties aforesaid, shall be responsible to the said occupant in damages.

67. Nothing in the last two preceding sections shall prevent the granting of the permission aforesaid on such terms or conditions as may be prescribed by the Collector, subject to any rules made in this behalf by the Provincial Government."

"Land Revenue Rules, 1921.

87. (a) Revision of non-agricultural assessment—

(b) When land is used for non-agricultural purposes is assessed under the provisions of rules 81 to 85, a sanad shall be granted in the Form M if the land is used for building purposes, in Form NI if the land is used temporarily for N-A purposes other than building in Form N in all other cases.

Provided that if the land to be used for building purposes is situated within the limits of a Municipal Corporation constituted under the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act or the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporation Act, 1949 the sanad shall be granted in Form M-1 ;....."

The relevant extracts from the agreement (sanad) are given below :

"Whereas application has been made to the Collector (hereinafter referred to as "the Collector" which expression shall include any officer whom the Collector shall appoint to exercise and perform his powers and duties under this grant) under section 65 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code 1879 (hereinafter referred to as "the said Code" which expression shall where the context so admits include the rules and orders thereunder) by inhabitant of Madhya Saurashtra being the registered occupant of survey No. 417 in the village of in the Taluka (hereinafter referred to as "the applicant" which expression shall where the context so admits include his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns) for permission to use for building purposes the plot of land (hereinafter referred to as the 'said plot'), described in the first schedule hereto and indicated by the letters.....on the site plan annexed hereto, forming part of survey No. 417 and measuring acres 2 ganthars 17, be the same a little more or less.

When used under rule 51 for land already occupied for agricultural purposes within certain surveyed cities the period for which the assessment is leviable will be ordered to coincide with the expiry of 99 year's period running in that city.

Now this is to certify that permission to use for building purposes, the said plot is hereby granted subject to the provisions of the said code, and on the following conditions, namely :—

(1) Assessment.....

(6) Code provisions applicable:—Save except as herein provided, the grant shall be subject to the provisions of this code :

Signature of Collector

Signature and designations of witnesses.

We declare that who has signed this notice is, to our personal knowledge, the person he represents himself to be, and that he has affixed his signature hereunto in our presence".

It will be noticed that application is made under section 65 of the Code and it is under section 65 that the Collector either grants or refuses the permission applied for. It will be further noticed that if the Collector fails to inform the applicant of his decision on the application within a period of three months the permission applied for shall be deemed to have been granted, but if the Collector sends a written acknowledgment within seven days from the date of receipt of the application then the three months period is reckoned from the date of acknowledgment, and in other cases this period is reckoned from the date of receipt of the application. The Collector having given permission under section 65 he can prescribe conditions under section 67 of the Code. Under section 48 (2) where the land assessed for use, say for agricultural purposes, is used for industrial purposes, the assessment is liable to be altered and fixed at a different rate by such authority and subject to such rules as the State Government may prescribe in this behalf. The rates for non-agricultural assessment are fixed under rules 81, 82, 82-A, 82-AA, 84 and 85 of the Rules. Rule 87 (b) provides that where land is assessed under the provisions of rules 81 to 85, a sanad shall be granted. Under the proviso to rule 87 (b) it is obligatory for the sanad to be granted in form N-1.

Relying on *Shri Mithoo Shahani v. Union of India*¹ the learned Counsel contends that there is a distinction between an order granting permission under section 65 and the agreement contained in the sanad which is issued under rule 87 (b). He urges that even if the sanad may not be revisable under section 211 of the Code, the order granting permission under section 65 is revisable under section 211, and if this order is revised the sanad falls along with the order.

We need not give our views on this alleged distinction for two reasons ; first, that this point was not debated before the High Court in this case or in earlier cases,² and secondly, because we have come to the conclusion that the order of the Commissioner must be quashed on other grounds.

Section 211 reads thus :

“211. The State Government and any revenue officer, not inferior in rank to an Assistant or Deputy Collector or a Superintendent of Survey, in their respective departments, may call for and examine the record of any inquiry or the proceedings of any subordinate revenue officer, for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself, as the case may be, as to the legality or propriety of any decision or order passed, and as to the regularity of the proceedings of such officer.

The following officers may in the same manner call for and examine the proceedings of any officer subordinate to them in any matter in which neither a formal nor a summary inquiry has been held, namely, a Mamlatdar, a Mahalkari, an Assistant Superintendent of Survey and an Assistant Settlement Officer.

If in any case it shall appear to the State Government or to such officer aforesaid that any decision or order or proceedings so called for should be modified, annulled or reversed, it or he may pass such order thereon as it or he deems fit ;

Provided that an Assistant or Deputy Collector shall not himself pass such order in any matter in which a formal inquiry has been held, but shall submit the record with his opinion to the Collector, who shall pass such order thereon as he may deem fit.”

The question arises whether the Commissioner can revise an order made under section 65 at any time. It is true that there is no period of limitation prescribed under section 211, but it seems to us plain that this power must be exercised in reasonable time and the length of the reasonable time must be determined by the facts of the case and the nature of the order which is being revised.

It seems to us that section 65 itself indicates the length of the reasonable time within which the Commissioner must act under section 211. Under section 65 of the Code if the Collector does not inform the applicant of his decision on the application within a period of three months the permission applied for shall be deemed to have been granted. This section shows that a period of three months is considered ample for the Collector to make up his mind and beyond that the Legislature thinks that the matter is so urgent that permission shall be deemed to have been granted. Reading sections 211 and 65 together it seems to us that the Commissioner must exercise his revisional powers within a few months of the order of the Collector. This is reasonable time because after the grant of the permission for building purposes the occupant is likely to spend money on starting building operations at least within a few months from the date of the permission. In this case the Commissioner set aside the order of the Collector on 12th October, 1961, i.e., more than a year after the order, and it seems to us that this order was passed too late.

1. (1964) 7 S.C.R. 103 : (1964) 2 S.C.J. 579.

2. The Government of the Province of Bombay v.

Horruji Marolji, (1940) Letters Patent Appeal No 40, 1938 decided on 8th Aug., 1940.

We are also of the opinion that the order of the Commissioner should be quashed on the ground that he did not give any reasons for his conclusions. We have already extracted the passage above which shows that after reciting the various contentions he baldly stated his conclusions without disclosing his reasons. In a matter of this kind the Commissioner should indicate his reasons, however briefly, so that an aggrieved party may carry the matter further if so advised.

We are also of the opinion that the Commissioner should not have gone into the question of title. It seems to us that when the title of an occupant is disputed by any party before the Collector or the Commissioner and the dispute is serious the appropriate course for the Collector or the Commissioner would be to refer the parties to a competent Court and not to decide the question of title himself against the occupant.

In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—S. M. SIKRI, R. S. BACHAWAT AND V. RAMASWAMI, JJ.

Ram Gopal Chaturvedi

v.

The State of Madhya Pradesh

.. Respondent.

Madhya Pradesh Government Servants (Temporary and Quasi-Permanent Service) Rules (1960) Rule 12 and Constitution of India (1950), Articles 14, 16, 311 and 320 (3) (c)—Temporary Government servant (Civil Judge)—Termination of services—Validity of—Whether violative of Articles 14 and 16 of Constitution of India—Order passed without consulting State Public Service Commission under Article 320 (3) (c)—Effect of—Order not by way of punishment—Article 311 not attracted.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 136—Appeal by Special Leave—Plea raising mixed questions of law and facts not raised below, cannot be permitted for first time.

The appellant was a temporary Government servant and was not in quasi-permanent service. His services could be terminated on one month's notice under rule 12. There was no provision in the order of appointment or in any agreement that his services could not be so terminated. It is immaterial that the advertisement did not specifically mention that the services could be so terminated.

Rule 12 applies to all temporary Government servants who are not in quasi-permanent service. All such Government servants are treated alike. The argument that rule 12 confers an arbitrary and unguided discretion is devoid of any merit. The services of a temporary Government servant may be terminated on one month's notice whenever the Government thinks it necessary or expedient to do so for administrative reasons. It is impossible to define before-hand all the circumstances in which the discretion can be exercised. The discretion was necessarily left to the Government.

The provisions of Article 320 (3) (c) are not mandatory and will not confer any rights on the public servant and the absence of consultation with the State Public Service Commission will not afford him a cause of action.

The order did not cast stigma on the appellant's character or integrity nor did it visit him with any evil consequences. It was not passed by way of punishment and the provisions of Article 311 were not attracted. It was immaterial that the order was preceded by an informal inquiry into the appellant's conduct with a view to ascertain whether he should be retained in service.

On facts held, the impugned order did not involve any element of punishment nor did it deprive the appellant of any vested right to any office.

The High Court is vested with the control over the subordinate judiciary. If the High Court found that the appellant was not a fit person to be retained in service, it could properly ask the Government to terminate his services. Following the advice tendered by the High Court, the Government rightly terminated his services under rule 12.

The contention that rule 12 was unconstitutional as it was framed without consulting the State Public Service Commission and the High Court raises mixed questions of law and fact. As it was not raised in the High Court, the appellant cannot be allowed to raise it in this Court for the first time. Likewise, the contention that the High Court had recommended the appellant's confirmation cannot be allowed to be raised.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Order, dated the 27th July, 1964 of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in Misc. Petition No. 272 of 1964.

S. C. Chaturvedi, Miss. K. Mehta and M. V. Goswami, Advocates, for Appellant.

I. N. Shroff, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bachawat, J.—The appellant was a temporary Civil Judge in Madhya Pradesh. On 14th March, 1961 an order was issued in the name of the Governor of Madhya Pradesh State that the appellant "is appointed temporarily, until further orders, as Civil Judge". Rule 12 of the Madhya Pradesh Government Servants (Temporary and Quasi-permanent Service) Rules, 1960 provided :—

"12 (a) Subject to any provision contained in the order of appointment or in any agreement between the Government and the temporary Government servant, the service of a temporary Government servant who is not in quasi-permanent service shall be liable to termination at any time by notice in writing given either by the Government servant to the appointing authority or by the appointing authority to the Government servant :

Provided that the services of any such Government servant may be terminated forthwith by payment to him of a sum equivalent to the amount of his pay plus allowances for the period of the notice, or as the case may be, for the period by which such notice falls short of one month or any agreed longer period ;

Provided further that the payment of allowances shall be subject to the conditions under which such allowances are admissible.

(b) The periods of such notice shall be one month unless otherwise agreed between the Government and the Government servant."

On 25th March, 1964 an order was issued by and in the name of the Governor terminating the appellant's services. The order stated :—

"The services of Shri Ram Gopal Chaturvedi, temporary Civil Judge, Waidhan, are terminated with effect from the 1st June, 1960, forenoon."

The appellant filed a writ petition in the Madhya Pradesh High Court for quashing the order, dated 25th March, 1964. The High Court summarily dismissed the petition. It held that the impugned order was not by way of punishment and that the appellant's services were liable to be terminated under the aforesaid rule 12 on one month's notice. The appellant has filed the present appeal after obtaining special leave.

The appellant was a temporary Government servant and was not in quasi-permanent service. His services could be terminated on one month's notice under rule 12. There was no provision in the order of appointment or in any agreement that his services could not be so terminated.

Counsel for the appellant submitted that rule 12 was unconstitutional as it was framed without consulting the State Public Service Commission and the High Court. The contention raises mixed questions of law and fact. It was not raised in the High Court, and we indicated in the course of arguments that the appellant could not be allowed to raise it in this Court for the first time.

Counsel next submitted that rule 12 was violative of Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution. There is no merit in this contention. Rule 12 applies to all temporary Government servants who are not in quasi-permanent service. All such Government servants are treated alike. The argument that rule 12 confers an arbitrary and unguided discretion is devoid of any merit. The services of a temporary Government servant may be terminated on one month's notice whenever the Government thinks it necessary or expedient to do so for administrative reasons. It is impossible to define before-hand all the circumstances in which the discretion can be exercised. The discretion was necessarily left to the Government.

It was argued that the appellant's services could not be terminated on one month's notice as (a) his confirmation was recommended by the High Court after the expiry of the probationary period and (v) the advertisement, dated 9th September, 1960 inviting applications for the temporary posts of civil judges did not specifically mention that their services could be so terminated. The point that the High Court had recommended the appellant's confirmation was not raised in the High Court and cannot be allowed to be raised in this Court for the first time. The appellant's services were subject to the relevant rules and could be terminated on one month's notice under rule 12. It is immaterial that the advertisement did not specifically mention that his services could be so terminated.

It was argued that the impugned order was invalid as it was passed without consulting the State Public Service Commission under Article 320 (3) (c) of the Constitution. There is no merit in this contention. The case of *State of U.P. v. M.L. Sriyastava*¹ decided that the provisions of Article 320 (3) (c) were not mandatory and did not confer any rights on the public servant and that the absence of consultation with the State Public Service Commission did not afford him a cause of action.

It was next argued that the impugned order was passed by way of punishment without giving the appellant an opportunity to show cause against the proposed action and was therefore violative of Article 311 of the Constitution. In this connection, Counsel for the appellant drew our attention to the statement of case filed on behalf of the respondent. It appears that there were complaints that the appellant was associating with a young girl named Miss Laxmi Surve against the wishes of her father and other members of her family. The Chief Justice of Madhya Pradesh made inquiries into the matter and on 19th February, 1954 he admonished the appellant for this disreputable conduct. On his return to Jabalpur on 28th February, 1964 the Chief Justice dictated the following note :—

“During my recent visit to Gwalior, I probed into the matter of Shri R. G. Chaturvedi, Special Magistrate (Motor Vehicles) Gwalior, giving shelter to a girl named Kumari Laxmi Surve, the daughter of a Chowkidar employed in the J. C. Mills, Gwalior. Chaturvedi has been associating with this girl for over a year and his relations with her are not at all innocent. He is sheltering and supporting Miss Surve against the wishes of her father and other members of her family. This is evident from the fact that on 14th December, 1963, when the girl was at the residence of Shri Chaturvedi and when her younger brother came to take her back, his house was stormed by a mob of 300 to 400 persons. A report of this incident was also recorded in the Roznamcha-Am of Lashkar Kotwali. The statement published by Miss Surve in some newspapers published from Gwalior explaining her action and her relations with her parents is significant. In that statement Miss Surve gave her address as 'C/o. Shri Chaturvedi'. That the statement is one inspired by Shri Chaturvedi is obvious enough. Shri Chaturvedi is still maintaining the girl. Shri Chaturvedi did not enjoy good reputation at Morena and Kolaras where he was posted before his posting at Gwalior. Shri Bajpai, District Judge, Gwalior also informed me that Shri Chaturvedi was not honest and that in collaboration with the Traffic Inspector he has taken money from accused persons in many cases under the Motor Vehicles Act."

No charge-sheet was served on the appellant nor was any departmental inquiry held against him. On 10th March, 1964 the Madhya Pradesh High Court passed a resolution that the State Government should terminate the appellant's services. Having regard to this resolution the State Government passed the impugned order dated 25th March, 1964. On the face of it, the order did not cast stigma on the appellant's character or integrity nor did it visit him with any evil consequences. It was not passed by way of punishment and the provisions of Article 311 were not attracted.

It was immaterial that the order was preceded by an informal inquiry into the appellant's conduct with a view to ascertain whether he should be retained in service. As was pointed out in the *State of Punjab v. Sukh Raj Bahadur*¹ :—

"An order of termination of service in unexceptionable form preceded by an enquiry launched by the superior authorities only to ascertain whether the public servant should be retained in service, does not attract the operation of Article 311 of the Constitution."

It was next argued that the impugned order was in violation of the principles of natural justice and in this connection reliance was placed on the decision of this Court in *State of Orissa v. Dr. Miss. Binapani Dei and others*² and *Ridge v. Baldwin*³. In *Binapani's case*² the appellant was an assistant surgeon in the Orissa medical service. The State Government accepted the date of birth given by her on joining the service. Later the Government reflexed the date of her birth on ex parte inquiry and passed an order compulsorily retiring her. The Court held that its order was invalid and was liable to be quashed. The appellant as the holder of an office in the medical service had the right to continue in service. According to the rules made under Article 309 she could not be removed from the office before superannuation except for good and sufficient reasons. The ex parte order was in derogation of her vested rights and could not be passed without giving her an opportunity of being heard. In the present case, the impugned order did not deprive the appellant of any vested right. The appellant was a temporary Government servant and had no right to hold the office. The State Government had the right to terminate his services under rule 12 without issuing any notice to the appellant to show cause against the proposed action. In *Ridge v. Baldwin*³ the House of Lords by a majority held that the order of dismissal of a chief constable on the ground of neglect of duty without informing him of the charge made against him and giving him an opportunity of being heard was in contravention of the principles of natural justice and was liable to be quashed. Section 191 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 provided that the watch committee might at any time suspend and dismiss any borough constable whom they thought negligent in the discharge of his duty or otherwise unfit for the same. The chief constable had the right to hold his office and before depriving him of his right the watch committee was required to conform to the principles of natural justice. The order of dismissal visited him with the loss of office and involved an element of punishment for the offences committed. In the present case, the impugned order did not involve any element of punishment nor did it deprive the appellant of any vested right to any office.

It was next argued that the State Government blindly followed the recommendations of the High Court. We find no merit in this argument. The State Government properly followed those recommendations. The High Court is vested with the control over the subordinate judiciary, see: *The State of West Bengal v. N. N. Bagchi*¹. If the High Court found that the appellant was not a fit person to be retained in service, it could properly ask the Government to terminate his services. Following the advice tendered by the High Court, the Government rightly terminated his services under rule 12.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

.. Respondent.

The Hindu Marriage Act (XXV of 1955) S. 12 (1) (a)—Application by husband for annulment of his marriage on ground that his wife is impotent—Burden of proof—Failure to establish entails dismissal of the application.

A party is impotent if his or her mental or physical condition makes consummation of the marriage a practical impossibility. The condition must be one, according to the statute, which existed at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceedings. In order to entitle the appellant to obtain a decree of nullity he will have to establish that his wife, the respondent was impotent at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceedings.

On facts held, that the Courts below have neither ignored nor misconstrued important pieces of evidence when they came to the conclusion that the appellant's case regarding the impotency of the respondent could not be believed. When once the finding has been arrived at that the appellant has not established that the respondent was impotent at the time of marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceeding, the inevitable result is the dismissal of the appellant's application under section 12 (1) (a) of the Act.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 25th August, 1966 of the Punjab High Court (Circuit Bench) Delhi in F.A.O. No. 132-D of 1961.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Vaidialingam, J.—This appeal, by Special Leave, is directed against the judgment, dated 25th August, 1966 of the Circuit Bench of the High Court of Punjab at New Delhi, confirming the judgment of the District Judge, Delhi, dismissing the petition

* C.A. No. 905 of 1968: 1. (1966 2 S.C.J. 59 : (1966) 1 S.C.R. 771.

28th April, 1969. 2nd May, 1969

filed by the appellant under section 12 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 (Act XXV of 1955) (hereinafter called the Act).

At the conclusion of the hearing of this appeal on 28th April, 1969 we had indicated our conclusion that no interference with the judgment of the High Court was called for and that the appeal is dismissed without any order as to costs. The detailed reasons for our decision were to be given later. Accordingly we hereby give our reasons for coming to the said conclusion.

The appellant had married the respondent according to Hindu rites on 20th April 1955. After the marriage the parties lived together for about three years at various places such as Delhi, Alwar, Bombay and Europe and, according to the appellant, during this period the marriage was not consummated. The appellant filed an application before the District Judge at Delhi on 15th March, 1960 under section 12 of the Act praying that the marriage between himself and his wife, the respondent, being voidable, may be annulled by a decree of nullity. In brief, the case of the appellant was that since his marriage he had made frequent attempts to consummate it, but, due to an invincible and persistent repugnance on the part of the respondent to the act of consummation, he had failed to achieve it and, as such, the marriage had remained unconsummated. He further averred that his wife, the respondent, was impotent at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the filing of his petition. According to him the impotency of the respondent was responsible for the non-consummation of the marriage.

The respondent-wife contested the application on various grounds. She emphatically denied that she had shown any repugnance whatsoever to the act of consummation of marriage. She further stated that she had lived with the appellant for about three years and had also accompanied him on his visit to England and the Continent and, during that period she was always ready and prepared to give full access to the petitioner to her person for consummating the marriage. She specifically averred that the consummation could not take place because the appellant was suffering from some physical disability or impotency and that he never made any attempt at consummation. She repudiated the allegation that she was either impotent at the time of the marriage or that she was importent at the time of the institution of the proceedings. She reiterated that the appellant was physically and emotionally unable to consummate the marriage and he had made a false excuse of impotency of the wife as being the cause for non-consummation of the marriage. She further stated, that the appellant was physically and sexually impotent and, consequently, unable to perform the normal sexual functions and, in view of this, he had never expressed his willingness, by his conduct or behaviour, to consummate the marriage, even though the parties lived together for a number of years and had occupied the same bed in the same room.

It will therefore be seen that while the appellant filed the application on the ground that the respondent was impotent, the respondent, in turn, had alleged that it was the appellant who was impotent. The material provision of the Act under which the application was filed by the appellant is section 12 (1) (a) which is as follows:

“12. (1) Any marriage solemnized, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, shall be voidable and may be annulled by a decree of nullity on any of the following grounds, namely :—

(a) that the respondent was impotent at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceeding:

*

*

*

*”

A party is impotent if his or her mental or physical condition makes consummation of the marriage a practical impossibility. The condition must be one, according to the statute, which existed at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceedings. In order to entitle the appellant to obtain a decree of nullity, as prayed for by him, he will have to establish that his wife, the respondent, was impotent at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceedings.

Both the appellant and the respondent have been examined by doctors and their oral evidence and reports are on record. Though the impotency of the appellant does not strictly arise for consideration in a petition filed by him, nevertheless the trial Court framed issues even in that regard. Issues Nos. 1 and 2, which are material, are as follows :

" 1. Whether the respondent was impotent at the time of the marriage and has continued to be so till the filing of the present petition ?

2. Is the petitioner impotent and consequently unable to perform the normal sexual function with the respondent ? If so, what is the effect thereof ?

The learned District Judge, after a consideration of the evidence on record, ultimately held that the appellant had failed to prove that the respondent was at any time impotent and, as such, decided issue No. 1 against the appellant. He further held, on issue no 2 that the facts of the case, on the contrary, showed that because of some physical or psychological cause, it was the appellant who was not able to consummate the marriage with the respondent. In this view the petition filed by the husband-appellant was dismissed.

On appeal by the appellant, the learned Judges of the Circuit Bench of the Punjab High Court differed from the finding of the trial Court on issue No 2. The learned Judges however held that it had not been proved that the appellant was impotent, but, on the material issue regarding the impotency of the respondent-wife, the learned Judges were of the view that there were various factors and circumstances throwing a serious doubt on the allegation made by the appellant. The High Court held that it had not been established by the appellant that non-consummation of the marriage was due to the impotency of the respondent. It further held that on the state of evidence it did not believe that the respondent-wife had been proved to be impotent. The High Court also declined to believe the case of the appellant that the respondent had persisted in her attitude of exhibiting repulsion to the sexual act.

It is not really necessary for us to deal elaborately with the evidence in the case on the basis of which concurrent findings have been recorded by the District Court and the High Court, rejecting the case of the appellant that his wife, the respondent, was impotent at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceedings.

Mr. Shroff, learned Counsel for the appellant, found considerable difficulty in satisfying us that the finding recorded by the two Courts on this aspect was erroneous or not supported by the evidence. No doubt, there was a feeble attempt made by the learned Counsel to urge that the evidence of the respondent that she had always been ready and willing to allow her husband to consummate the marriage should not be believed. When the two Courts have accepted her evidence, it is futile on the part of the appellant to urge this contention.

The reliance placed by Mr. Shroff on the decision of this Court in *Earnest John White v. Kathleen Olive White*¹, is misplaced. In that decision, it has been laid down that though it is not usual for this Court to interfere on questions of fact, nevertheless, if the Courts below ignore or mis-construe important pieces of evidence in arriving at their finding, such finding is liable to be interfered with by this Court. We are satisfied that the Courts below, in the instant case, have neither ignored nor mis-construed important pieces of evidence when they came to the conclusion that the appellant's case, regarding the impotency of the respondent, could not be believed.

On the findings that both the appellant and the respondent were not impotent and the marriage had not been admittedly consummated, Counsel urged that the conclusion to be drawn was that such consummation was not possible because of an invincible repugnance on the part of the wife. Counsel further urged that taking into account the practical impossibility of consummation, the application filed by the appellant should be allowed.

1. (1958) S.C.J. 839 : (1959) 2 An.W.R. M.L.J. (CrI). 631 : (1958) S.C.R. 1410.

So far as the charge of 'invincible repugnance to the sexual act' on the part of the respondent is concerned, it is only necessary to refer to the finding of the High Court that the allegation had not been proved but that on the other hand lack of proper approach by the appellant for consummating the marriage might have been responsible for non-consummation. It is the further view of the High Court that the evidence of the appellant that he went on making attempts on several occasions for consummation of the marriage cannot be believed.

Mr. Shroff referred us to the decision of the House of Lords in *G. v. G*¹. That was an action by a husband against his wife for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotency. It was established that the husband was potent and had made frequent attempts to consummate the marriage; but he could not succeed in owing to the unreasoning resistance of the wife. The wife was declared on medical examination not to suffer from any structural incapacity. Under those circumstances the House of Lords held that the conclusion to be drawn from the evidence was that the wife's refusal was due to an invincible repugnance to the act of consummation, and as such, the husband was entitled to a decree of nullity. This decision does not assist the appellant, as we have already referred to the finding of the High Court disbelieving the evidence of the appellant on this aspect.

Mr. Shroff next relied on the decision in *G. v. G*², holding that a Court would be justified in annulling a marriage if it was found that the marriage had not been and could not be consummated by the parties thereto, though no reason for non-consummation was manifest or apparent. In that decision both the husband and the wife were perfectly normal and each charged the other as being responsible for non-consummation of the marriage. The Court held that without going into the question as to who was the guilty party, it was evident that the marriage had not been consummated and could not be consummated in future also. Accordingly the Court annulled the marriage for the reason that it was satisfied that—

"quoad hunc et quoad hunc, these people cannot consummate the marriage."

The Court further held that the two people should not be tied up together for the rest of their lives in a state of misery. The position in the case before us is entirely different. Neither of the two Courts have found that the marriage cannot be consummated in further (future?) and they have not also accepted the appellant's plea that the respondent had always resisted his attempts to consummate the marriage.

When once the finding has been arrived at that the appellant has not established that the respondent was impotent at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceeding, the inevitable result is the dismissal of the appellant's application under section 12 (1) (a) of the Act. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

PRESENT: M. Hidayatullah, Chief Justice, J. C. SHAN, V. RAMASWAMI, C. K. MITTAL AND A.M. CHOWDHURY, JJ.

The Assistant Commissioner of Urban Land Tax, Madras and others etc.

v.

The Buckingham and Carnatic Co., Ltd., etc.

.. Respondents.

Madras Urban Land Tax Act (XII of 1966), section 6 and Constitution of India (1950), Articles 14 and 19 (1) (8), Schedule VII, List I, Entry 86 and Schedule VII, List II, Entry 49 - Validity of the Act - Whether ultra vires of Articles 14 and 19 (1) Constitution of India - Act whether falls under Schedule VII, List I, Entry 86 or Schedule VII, List II, Entry 49 - Legislative entries to be given liberal interpretation - No overlapping - Retrospective operation of laws - Whether unreasonable.

There is no warrant for the assumption that Entries 86, 88 of List I and Entry 49 of List II form a special group embodying any particular scheme. The directive principle embodied in Article 39 (c) applies both to Parliament and to the State Legislature and it is difficult to conceive how Entries 86 to 88 of List I would exclude any power of the State Legislature to implement the same principle. The Legislative entries must be given a large and liberal interpretation, the reason being that the allocation of the subject to the list is not by way of scientific or logical definition but by way of a mere simplex enumeratio of broad categories. There is no reason for holding that Entries 86 and 87 of List I preclude the State Legislature from taxing capital value of lands and buildings under Entry 49 of List II. There is no conflict between entry 86 of List I and Entry 49 of List II. The basis of taxation under the two entries is quite distinct. As regards Entry 86 of List I the basis of the taxation is the capital value of the asset. It is not a tax directly on the capital value of assets of individuals and companies on the valuation date. The tax is not imposed on the components of the assets of the assessee. The tax under the Entry 86 proceeds on the principle of aggregation and is imposed on the totality of the value of all the assets. It is imposed on the total assets which the assessee owns and in determining the net wealth not only the encumbrances specifically charged against any item of asset, but the general liability of the assessee to pay his debts and to discharge his lawful obligations have to be taken into account. In certain exceptional cases, where a person owns no debts and is under no enforceable obligation to discharge any liability out of his assets it may be possible to break up the tax which is leviable on the total assets into components and attribute a component to lands and buildings owned by an assessee. In such a case the component out of the total tax attributable to lands and buildings may in the matter of computation bear similarity to a tax on lands and buildings levied on the capital or annual value under Entry 49, List II. But in a normal case a tax on capital value of assets bears no definable relation to lands and buildings which may or may not form a component of total assets of the assessee. But Entry 49 of List II contemplates a levy of tax on lands and buildings or both as units. It is not concerned with the division of interest or ownership in the units of lands or buildings which are brought to tax. Tax on lands and buildings is directly imposed on lands and buildings and bears a definite relation to it. Tax on the capital value of assets bears no definable relation to lands and buildings which may form a component of the total assets of the assessee. by legislation in exercise of power under Entry 86, List I tax is contemplated to be levied on the value of the assets. For the purpose of levying tax under Entry 49 List II the State Legislature may adopt for determining the incidence of tax the annual or the capital value of the lands and buildings. But the adoption of the annual or capital value of lands and buildings for determining tax liability will not make the fields of legislation under the two entries overlapping. The two taxes are entirely different in their basic concept and fall on different subject-matter. In pith and substance the new Act in imposing a tax on urban land at a percentage of the market value is entirely within the ambit of Entry 49 of List II and within the competence of the State Legislative and does not in any way trench upon the field of legislation of Entry 86 of List I.

*C.A. Nos. 51 to 53, 56, 57, 175 and

The legislative history of Entry 49, List II does not lend support to the argument that Entry 49, of List II relating to tax on lands and buildings cannot be separated. Entry 49 "Taxes on lands and buildings" should be construed as taxes on lands and taxes on buildings and there is no reason for restricting the amplitude of the language used in the Entry. Having regard to the language and context of section 6 of the new Act the opinion which the Assistant Commissioner has to form under that section is not subjective but should be reached objectively upon the relevant evidence after following the requisite formalities laid down in sections 7 to 11. After considering the relevant sections, it was held that the Act envisages a detailed procedure regarding submission of returns the making of an assessment after hearing objections and a right of appeal to higher authorities and that provisions of section 6 are not violative of Article 14 of the Constitution.

It is not possible to put the test of reasonableness into the straight jacket of a narrow formula. The object to be taxed, the quantum of tax to be levied, the conditions subject to which it is levied and the social and economic policies which a tax is designed to subserve are all matters of political character and these matters have been entrusted to the Legislature and not to the Courts. In applying the test of reasonableness it is also essential to notice that the power of taxation is generally regarded as an essential attribute of sovereignty and constitutional provisions relating to the power of taxation are regarded not as grant of power put as limitation upon the power which would otherwise be practically without limit. As a general rule it may be said that so long as a tax retains its character as a tax and is not confiscatory or extortionate the reasonableness of the tax cannot be questioned.

A tax on land values and a tax on letting value though both are taxes under Entry 49 of List II cannot be clubbed together in order to test the reasonableness of one or the other for the purposes of Article 19 (1). But so far as the new Act is concerned the levy of 0.4 per cent. of the market value of the urban land is by no means confiscatory in effect.

It is not right to say as a general proposition that the imposition of tax with retrospective effect per se renders the law unconstitutional. In applying the test of reasonableness to a taxing statute it is of course a relevant consideration that the tax is being enforced with retrospective effect but that is not conclusive in itself. Held, in view of the legislative background of the present case the imposition of the tax retrospectively from 1st July, 1963 cannot be said to be an unreasonable restriction.

Held Madras Urban Land Tax Act 1966 is constitutionally valid.

Ramaswami, J.—In these appeals which have been heard together a common question of law arises for determination, namely, whether the Madras Urban Land Tax Act, 1966 (XII of 1966) is constitutionally valid.

In 1963 the Madras Legislature enacted the Madras Urban Land Tax Act, 1963 which came into force in the city of Madras on the 1st of July, 1963. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the 1963 Act it was stated that the Taxation Enquiry Commission and the Planning Commission were suggesting the need for imposing a suitable levy on lands put to non-agricultural use in urban areas. The State Government, after examining the report of the Special Officer, decided to levy a tax on urban land on the basis of market value of the land at the rate of 0.4 per cent. on such market value. Section 3 of the Act of 1963 (which will be referred to as the old Act) provided that there shall be levied and collected for every fasli year commencing from the date of the commencement of the Act, a tax on urban land from every owner of urban land at the rate of 0.4 per cent. of the average market value of the urban land in a sub-zone as determined under sub-section (2) of section 6. Section 7 provided for the determination of the highest and lowest market value in a zone. For determining the average market value, the Assistant Commissioner shall have regard to any matters specified in clauses (a) to (e) of sub-section (2) of section 6, namely :

- (a) the locality in which the urban land is situated ;
- (b) the predominant use to which the urban land is put, that is to say, industrial, commercial or residential ;
- (c) accessibility or proximity to market, dispensary, hospital, railway station educational institution, or Government Offices ;
- (d) availability of civil amenities like water supply, drainage and lighting ;
- and
- (e) such other matters as may be prescribed.

The constitutional validity of Act XXXIV of 1963 was challenged and in *Buckingham & Carnatic Co., Ltd. v. State of Madras*¹ a Division Bench of the Madras High Court held that the impugned Act fell under Entry 49, List II of Schedule VII to the Constitution and was within the legislative competence of the State Legislature. But the Act was struck down on the ground that Article 14 of the Constitution was violated, because the charging section of the Act levied the tax on urban land not on the market value of such urban land but on the average value of the lands in the locality known as a sub-zone. The new Act (Act XII of 1966) was passed by the State Legislature after the decision of the Madras High Court. In the new Act provisions relating to fixation of average market value in the sub-zone were omitted. Instead, section 5 of the new Act provides that there shall be levied and collected from every year commencing from the date of the commencement of the Act a tax on each urban land from the owner of such urban land at the rate of 0.4 per cent. of the market value of such urban land. Section 2 (10) defines "owner" as follows :

"Owner" includes—

(i) any person (including a mortgagee in possession) for the time being receiving or entitled to receive, whether on his own account or as agent, trustee, guardian, manager or receiver for another person or for any religious or charitable purposes the rent or profits of the urban land or the building constructed on the urban land in respect of which the word is used ;

(ii) any person who is entitled to the kudiwaram in respect of any inam land ; but does not include—

(a) a shrotriampdar : or

(b) any person who is entitled to the melwaram in respect of any inam land but in respect of which land any other person is entitled to the kudiwaram.

Explanation.—For the purposes of clause (9) and clause (10) inam land includes lakhiraj tenures of land and shrotriamp land.

Section 2 (13) defines 'land' to mean any land which is used or is capable of being used as a building site and includes garden or grounds, if any, appurtenant to a building but does not include any land which is registered as wet in the revenue accounts of the Government and used for the cultivation of wet crops."

Section 6 states : "For the purposes of this Act, the market value of any urban land shall be estimated to be the price which in the opinion of the Assistant Commissioner, or the Tribunal, as the case may be, such urban land would have fetched or fetch, if sold in the open market on the date of the commencement of this Act."

Section 7 provides for the submission of returns by the owner of urban land and reads :

"Every owner of urban land liable to pay urban land tax under this Act shall, within a period of one month from the date of the publication of the Madras Urban Land Tax Ordinance, 1966 (Madras Ordinance III of 1966) in the Fort St. George Gazette, furnish to the Assistant Commissioner having jurisdiction a return in respect of each urban land containing the following particulars, namely :

(a) name of the owner of the urban land,

(b) the extent of the urban land,

(c) the name of the division or ward and the street, survey number and sub-division number of the land and other particulars of such urban land, and

(d) the amount which in the opinion of the owner is the market value of the urban land."

Section 10 deals with the procedure for the determination of the market value by the Assistant Commissioner and states :

"(1) Where a return is furnished under section 7 the Assistant Commissioner shall examine the return and make such enquiry as he deems fit. If the Assistant Commissioner is satisfied that the particulars mentioned therein are correct and complete he shall, by order in writing determine the market value of the urban land and the amount of urban land tax payable in respect of such urban land.

(2) (a) Where on examination of the return and after the enquiry the Assistant Commissioner is not satisfied that the particulars mentioned therein are correct and complete he shall serve a notice on the owner either to attend in person or at his office on a date to be specified in the notice or to produce or cause to be produced on that date any evidence in which the owner may rely in support of his return.

(b) The Assistant Commissioner after hearing such evidence as the owner may produce in pursuance of the notice under clause (a) and such other evidence as the Assistant Commissioner may require on any specified points shall, by order in writing, determine the market value of the urban land and the amount of urban land tax payable in respect of such urban land.

(c) Where the owner has failed to attend or produce evidence in pursuance of the notice under clause (a) the Assistant Commissioner shall, on the basis of the enquiry made under clause (a), by order in writing determine the market value of the urban land and the amount of urban land tax payable in respect of such urban land."

Section 11 enacts :

"(1) Where the owner of urban land has failed to furnish the return under section 7 and the Assistant Commissioner has obtained the necessary information under section 9 he shall serve a notice on the owner in respect of each urban land specifying therein—

(a) the extent of the urban land,

(b) the amount which, in the opinion of the Assistant Commissioner, is the correct market value of the urban land, and direct him either to attend in person at his office on a date to be specified in the notice or to produce or cause to be produced on that date any evidence on which the owner may rely.

(2) After hearing such evidence, as the owner may produce and such other evidence as the Assistant Commissioner may require on any specified points, the Assistant Commissioner shall, by order in writing, determine the market value of the urban land and the amount of urban land tax payable in respect of such urban land.

(3) Where the owner has failed to attend or to produce evidence in pursuance of the notice under sub-section (1) the Assistant Commissioner shall, on the basis of the information obtained by him under section 9, by order in writing, determine the market value of the urban land and the amount of the urban land tax payable in respect of such urban land."

Section 20 provides for an appeal to the Tribunal from the orders of the Assistant Commissioner :

"(1) (a) Any assessee objecting to any order passed by the Assistant Commissioner under section 10 or 11 may appeal to the Tribunal within thirty days from the date of the receipt of the copy of the order.

(b) Any person denying his liability to be assessed under this Act may appeal to the Tribunal within thirty days from the date of the receipt of the notice of demand relating to the assessment :

Provided that no appeal shall lie under clause (a) or clause (b) of this sub-section unless the urban land tax has been paid before the appeal is filed.

(2) The Commissioner may, if he objects to any order passed by the Assistant Commissioner under section 10 or 11, direct the Urban Land Tax Officer concerned to appeal to the Tribunal against such order, and such appeal may be filed within sixty days from the date of the receipt of the copy of the order by the Commissioner.

(3) The Tribunal may admit an appeal after the expiry of the period referred to in clause (a) or clause (b) of sub-section (1) or in sub-section (2), as the case may be, if it is satisfied that there was sufficient cause for not presenting it within that period.

(4) An appeal to the Tribunal under this section shall be in the prescribed form and shall be verified in the prescribed manner and shall be accompanied by such fee as may be prescribed.

(5) The Tribunal may after giving both parties to the appeal an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders thereon, as it thinks fit and shall communicate any such orders to the assessee and to the Commissioner in such manner as may be prescribed."

Section 30 confers power of revision in the Board of Revenue and is to the following effect :

"(1) The Board of Revenue may, either on its own motion or on application made by the assessee in this behalf, call for and examine the records of any proceeding under this Act (not being a proceeding in respect of which an appeal lies to the Tribunal under section 20) to satisfy itself as to the regularity of such proceeding or the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed therein and if, in any case, it appears to the Board of Revenue that any such decision or order should be modified, annulled, reversed or remitted for reconsideration, it may pass orders accordingly :

Provided that the Board of Revenue shall not pass any order under this subsection in any case, where the decision or order is sought to be revised by the Board of Revenue on its own motion, if such decision or order had been made more than three years previously :

Provided further that the Board of Revenue shall not pass any order under this section prejudicial to any party unless he has had a reasonable opportunity of making his representations."

Section 33 states :

"(1) The Tribunal, the Board of Revenue, the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, or the Urban Land Tax Officer or any other officer empowered under this Act shall, for the purposes of this Act, have the same powers as are vested in a Court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Central Act V of 1908), when trying a suit in respect of the following matters, namely :—

- (a) enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath ;
- (b) requiring the discovery and production of documents ;
- (c) receiving evidence on affidavits ;
- (d) issuing commissions for the examination of witnesses ;

and any proceeding before the Tribunal, the Board of Revenue, the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioners the Urban Land Tax Officer or any other officer empowered under this Act shall be deemed to be a judicial proceeding within the meaning of sections 193 and 228 and for the purposes of section 196, of the Indian Penal Code (Central Act XLV of 1860).

(2) In any case in which an order of assessment is passed ex parte under this Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Central Act V of 1908), shall apply in relation to such order as it applies in relation to a decree passed ex parte by a Court."

The validity of the new Act was challenged in a group of writ petitions before the Madras High Court on various constitutional grounds. By a common judgment dated the 10th April, 1968 a Full Bench of five Judges overruled all the contentions of the petitioners with regard to the legislative competence of the Madras Legislature to enact the new Act. However, the Full Bench by a majority of 4 to 1 struck down section 6 of the new Act as being violative of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. The State of Madras and other respondents to the writ petitions (hereinafter called the respondents for the sake of convenience) filed appeals Nos. 21 to 23 of 1969 under a certificate granted by the High Court under Articles 132 and 133 (1) (a), (b) and (c) of the Constitution. The writ petitioners (hereinafter called the petitioners) have filed C.As. Nos. 46, 47, 125 and 274 of 1969 against the same judgment on a certificate granted by the High Court under Article 132 of the Constitution.

The first question to be considered in these appeals is whether the Madras Legislature was competent to enact the legislation under Entry 49 of List II of Schedule VII of the Constitution which reads : "Taxes on lands and buildings". It was argued on behalf of the petitioners that the impugned Act fell under Schedule VII, List I, Entry 86, that is "Taxes on the capital value of the assets, exclusive of agricultural land, of individuals and companies ; taxes on the capital of companies". The argument of Mr. V. K.T. Chari may be summarised as follows :

The impugned Act was, both in form and substance, taxation of capital and was hence beyond the competence of the State Legislature. To tax on the basis of capital or principal value of assets was permissible to Parliament under List I, Entries 86 and 87 and to State under Entry 48 of List II. Taxation of capital was the appropriate method provided for effecting the directive principle under Article 39 of the Constitution, namely, to prevent concentration of wealth. Article 366 (9) contains a definition of 'estate duty' with reference to the principal value. Entry 86 of List I (Taxes on capital value of assets exclusive of agricultural land) and Entry 88 (Duties in respect of succession to such property) form a group of entries the scheme of which is to carry out the directive principle of Article 39 (c). The Constitution indicated that capital value or principal value shall be the basis of taxation under these entries and, therefore, the method of taxation of capital or principal value was prohibited even to Parliament in respect of other taxes and to the State except in respect of Estate Duty on Agricultural land. Such in effect is the argument of Mr. V.K. T. Chari. But in our opinion there is no warrant for the assumption that entries 86, 88 of List I and Entry 48 of List II form a special group embodying any particular scheme. The directive principle embodied in Article 39 (c) applies both to Parliament and to the State Legislature and it is difficult to conceive how entries 86 to 88 of List I would exclude any power of the State Legislature to implement the same principle. The legislative entries must be given a large and liberal interpretation, the reason being that the allocation of the subjects to the lists is not by way of scientific or logical definition but by way of a mere simplex enumeratio of broad categories. We see no reason, therefore, for holding that the entries 86 and 87 of List I preclude the State Legislature from taxing capital value of lands and buildings under Entry 49 of List II. In our opinion there is no conflict between Entry 86 of List I and Entry 49 of List II. The basis of taxation under the two entries is quite distinct. As regards Entry 86 of List I the basis of the taxation is the capital value of the assets. It is not a tax directly on the capital values of assets of individuals and companies on the valuation date. The tax is not imposed on the components of the assets of the assessee. The tax under Entry 86 proceeds on the principle of aggregation and is imposed on the totality of the value of all the assets. It is imposed on the total assets which the assessee owns and in determining the net wealth not only the encumbrances specifically charged against any item of asset, but the general liability of the assessee to pay his debts and to discharge his lawful obligations have to be taken into account. In certain exceptional cases, where a person owes no debts and is under no enforceable obligation to discharge any liability out of his assets it may be possible to break up the tax which is leviable on the total assets into components and attribute a component to lands and buildings owned by an assessee. In such a case, the component out of the total tax attributable to lands and buildings may, in the matter of computation bear similarity to a tax on lands and buildings levied on the capital or annual value under Entry 49, List II. But in a normal case a tax on capital value of assets bears no definable relation to lands and buildings which may or may not form a component of the total assets of the assessee. But Entry 49 of List II, contemplates a levy of tax on lands and buildings or both as units. It is not concerned with the division of interest or ownership in the units of lands or buildings which are brought to tax. Tax on lands and buildings is directly imposed on lands and buildings, and bears a definite relation to it. Tax on the capital value of assets bears no definable relation to lands and buildings which may form a component of the total assets of the assessee. By legislation in exercise of power under Entry 86, List I tax is contemplated to be levied on the value of the assets. For the purpose of levying tax under Entry 49, List II the State Legislature may adopt for determining the incidence of tax the annual or the capital value of the lands and buildings. But the adoption of the annual or capital value of lands and buildings for determining tax liability will not make the fields of legislation under the two entries overlapping. The two taxes are entirely different in their basic concept and fall on different subject-matters.

In *Ralla Ram v. Province of East Punjab*¹, the Federal Court held that the tax levied by section 3 of the Punjab Urban Immovable Property Tax Act, XVII of 1940 on buildings and lands situated in a specified area at such rate not exceeding twenty per cent of the annual value of such buildings and lands, as the Provincial Government may by notification in the official Gazette direct in respect of each such rating area was not a tax on income but was a tax on lands and buildings within the meaning of Item No. 42 of List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1935. In that case it was contended that under the provisions of the Punjab Act the basis of the tax was the annual value of the buildings and since the same basis was used in the Income-tax Act for determining the income from property and generally speaking the annual value is the fairest standard for measuring income and, in many cases, is indistinguishable from it, the tax levied by the impugned Act was in substance a tax on income. The Court pointed out that the annual value is not necessarily actual income, but is only a standard by which income may be measured and merely because the Income-tax Act had adopted the annual value as the standard for determining the income, it did not follow that, if the same standard is employed as a measure for any other tax, that latter tax becomes also a tax on income. It was held by the Court that in substance the property tax levied by section 3, Punjab Urban Immovable Property Tax Act, 1940 fell within item 42 of the Provincial List and was not tax on income falling within item 54 of the Federal List although the basis of the tax was the annual value of the building. The same view has been expressed by this Court in *Sudhir Chandra Nawn v. Wealth-tax Officer*², wherein it was held that the power to levy tax on lands and buildings under Entry 49 of List II did not trench upon the power conferred on Parliament by Entry 88 of List I and, therefore, the enactment of the Wealth-Tax Act by Parliament was not ultra vires.

The problem in this case is the problem of characterisation of the law or classification of the law. In other words the question must be asked: what is the subject-matter of the legislation in its "pith and substance" or in its true nature and character for the purpose of determining whether it is legislation with respect to Entry 49 of List II or Entry 86 of List I. In *Gallagher v. Lynn*³, the principle is stated as follows:

"It is well established that you are to look at the true nature and character of the legislation the pith and substance of the legislation. If on the view of the statute as a whole, you find that the substance of the legislation is within the express powers then it is not invalidated if incidentally it affects matters which are outside the authorised field. The legislation must not under the guise of dealing with one matter in fact encroach upon the forbidden field. Nor are you to look only at the object of the legislator. An Act may have a perfectly lawful object e.g., to promote the health of the inhabitants, but may seek to achieve that object by invalid methods e.g., direct prohibition of any trade with a foreign country. In other words, you may certainly consider the clauses of an Act to see whether they are passed in 'respect of the forbidden subject'."

In the case of *Subrahmanyam Chettiar v. Mutluswami Goundan*⁴, Sir Maurice Gwyer, C.J. said:

"It must inevitably happen from time to time that legislation, though purporting to deal with a subject in one list, touches also on a subject in another list, and the different provisions of the enactment may be so closely intertwined that blind adherence to a strictly verbal interpretation would result in a large number of statutes being declared invalid because the Legislature enacting them may appear to have legislated in a forbidden sphere. Hence the rule which has been evolved by the Judicial Committee whereby the impugned statute is examined to ascertain its 'pith and substance' or its 'true nature and character', for the purpose of determining whether it is legislation with respect to matters in this list or in that : *Citizens Insurance Company of Canada v. Parsons*¹, *Russell v. The Queen*² ; *Union Colliery Co., of British Columbia v. Bryden*³ ; *Att. Gen. for Canada v. Att. Gen., for British Columbia*⁴ ; *Board of Trustees of Lethbridge Irrigation District v. Independent Order of Foresters*⁵. In my opinion this rule of interpretation is equally applicable to the Indian Constitution Act."

For the reasons already expressed we hold that in pith and substance the new Act in imposing a tax on urban land at a percentage of the market value is entirely within the ambit of Entry 49 of List II and within the competence of the State Legislature and does not in any way trench upon the field of legislation of Entry 86 of List I.

It was then said that as Entry 49 of List II provides for taxes on lands and buildings, the impugned Act which imposes tax on lands alone cannot be held to fall under that entry. It was submitted that when the Legislature taxed land deliberately the legislation fell under Entry 45 of List II i.e., "land revenue, including the assessment and collection of revenue, the maintenance of land records, survey for revenue purposes and records of rights and alienation of revenues" and not under Entry 49 of that List. The legislative history of Entry 49 of List II does not however lend any support to this argument. Before the Government of India Act, 1935 lands and buildings were taxed separately and all that was done under the Government of India Act, 1935 and the Constitution was to combine the two entries relating to land and building into a single entry. Section 45-A of the Government of India Act, 1919 provided for making rules under the Act for the devolution of authority in respect of provincial subjects to local Governments, and for the allocation of revenues or other moneys to those Governments. The Government of India by a notification dated 16th December, 1920 made rules under that provision called the "Scheduled Tax Rules". These Rules contained two schedules. The first Schedule contained eight items of tax or fee. The Legislative Council of a Province may without obtaining the previous sanction of the Governor-General make and take into consideration any law imposing for the purposes of the local Government any tax included in Schedule I. Schedule II contained eleven items of tax. In making a law imposing or authorising any local authority to impose for the purposes of such local authority any tax in Schedule II, the Legislative Council required no previous sanction of the Governor General. In Schedule II, item No. 2 was tax on land or land values and item 3 was a tax on buildings. In the Government of India Act, 1935 the two entries were combined and List II, Entry 42 is "Taxes on lands and buildings and hats and Windows". The legislative history of Entry 49, List II does not, therefore, lend any support to the argument that Entry 49 of List II relating to tax on land and buildings cannot be separated. On the other hand we are of opinion that Entry 49 "Taxes on lands and buildings" should be construed as taxes on land and taxes on buildings and there is no reason for restricting the amplitude of the language used in the Entry. This view is also borne out by authorities. In *Raja Jagannath Baksh Singh v. The State of U.P.*⁶, the question at issue was whether the tax imposed by the U.P. Government on land holdings under the U.P. Large Land Holdings Tax Act, 1957 (U.P. Act XXXI of 1957) was constitutionally valid. It was held that the legislation fell under Entry 49 of List II and the tax on land would include agricultural land also. Similarly in *H.R.S. Murthy v. Collector of Chittoor and another*⁷, it was held that the land cess imposed under sections 78 and 79 of the Madras District Boards Act (Mad. Act XIV of 1920) and Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act (LXVII of 1957) was a tax on land falling under Entry 49 of the State List. We are of opinion that the argument of Mr. V.K.T. Chari on this aspect of the case must be rejected.

We proceed to consider the argument that no machinery is provided for determining the market value and the provisions of the new Act, therefore, violate Article 14 of the Constitution. The argument was stressed by Mr. V.K.T. Chari that the guidance given under the 1963 Act has been dispensed with and the Assistant Commissioner is not bound to take into account, among other matters, the sale price of similar sites, the rent fetched for use and occupation of the land, the principles generally adopted in valuing land under the Land Acquisition Act and the compensation awarded in recent land acquisition proceedings. We see no justification for this argument. The procedure for determining the market value and assessment of urban land is described in Chapter III of the new Act. Section 6 provides that the market value of the urban land "shall be estimated to be the price which in the opinion of the Assistant Commissioner, or the Tribunal, as the case may be, such urban land would have fetched or fetch, if sold in the open market on the date of the commencement of this Act." It was said on behalf of the petitioners that the opinion which the Assistant Commissioner has to form is purely subjective and may be arbitrary. We do not think that this contention is correct. Having regard to the language and context of section 6 of the new Act we consider that the opinion which the Assistant Commissioner has to form under that section is not subjective but should be reached objectively upon the relevant evidence after following the requisite formalities laid down in sections 7 to 11 of the new Act. Instead of the Assistant Commissioner classifying the urban land and determining the market value in a zone, the present Act requires a return to be submitted by the owner mentioning the amount which, in the opinion of the owner, is the market value of the urban land. On receipt of the return, if the Assistant Commissioner is satisfied that the particulars mentioned are correct and complete, he may determine the market value as given by the owner of the land. If he is not satisfied with the return, he shall serve a notice on the owner asking him to attend his office with the relevant evidence in support of his return. After hearing the owner and considering the evidence produced, the Assistant Commissioner may determine the market value. In case the owner fails to attend or fails to produce the evidence, the Assistant Commissioner is empowered to assess the market value on the basis of an enquiry made by him. Section 11 prescribes the procedure for determining the market value when the owner fails to furnish a return as required under section 7. The section requires the Assistant Commissioner to serve a notice on the owner specifying amongst other things the amount, which in the opinion of the Assistant Commissioner, is the correct market value and directing the owner to attend in person at his office on a date specified in the notice or to produce any evidence on which the owner may rely. After hearing such evidence as the owner may produce and considering such other evidence as may be required, the Assistant Commissioner may fix the market value. The proceeding before the Assistant Commissioner is judicial in character and his opinion regarding the market value is reached objectively on all the materials produced before him. Section 20 provides for an appeal by the assessee objecting to the determination of the market value made by the Assistant Commissioner to a Tribunal within thirty days from the date of the receipt of the copy of the order. The Act requires that the Tribunal shall consist of one person only who shall be a judicial officer not below the rank of a Subordinate Judge. By section 30, the Board of Revenue is empowered either on its own motion or on application made by the assessee in this behalf, to call for and examine the records of any proceedings under the Act (not being a proceeding in respect of which an appeal lies to the Tribunal under section 20), to satisfy itself as to the regularity of such proceeding or the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed therein, and if it appears to the Board of Revenue that any such decision or order should be modified, annulled, reversed or remitted for reconsideration, it may pass orders accordingly. Section 32 enables the urban land tax officer, or the Assistant Commissioner, or the Board of Revenue or the Tribunal to rectify any error apparent on the face of the record at any time within three years from the date of any order passed by him or it. Section 33 confers power on the Assistant Commissioner to take evidence, to require discovery and production of documents and to receive evidence on affidavit etc. Thus, the Act envisages a detailed procedure regarding submission of returns, the making of an assessment after hearing objections and a right to appeal to higher authorities. We are hence unable to accept the contention of the petitioners that the provisions of section 6 of the new Act are violative of Article 14 of the Constitution.

It is necessary to state that the High Court decided the case in favour of the respondents mainly on the ground that investment of the power to determine value of the urban land under section 6 of the Act constituted excessive delegation of authority and so violative of Articles 19 (1) and 14 of the Constitution. (see the judgment of Veeraswami, J., who pronounced the main judgment in the High Court). But Mr. V. K. T. Chari did not support this line of reasoning in his arguments before this Court. On the other hand learned Counsel conceded that the power of determining the value of the urban land being judicial or quasi-judicial in character the doctrine of excessive delegation of authority had no application.

We pass on to consider the next contention raised on behalf of the petitioners namely that the Act should be struck down as an unreasonable restriction on the right to acquire, hold and dispose of property and as such violative of Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. It was argued that the test of reasonableness would be that the tax should not be so high as to make the holding of the property or the carrying on of the activity (business or profession) which is subject to taxation, uneconomic according to accepted rates of yield. In this connection it was said that that the new Act by imposing a tax on the capital value at a certain rate was not correlated to the income or rateable value and, therefore, violates the requirement of reasonableness. We are unable to accept the proposition put forward by Mr. Chari. It is not possible to put the test of reasonableness into the straight jacket of a narrow formula. The objects to be taxed, the quantum of tax to be levied, the conditions subject to which it is levied and the social and economic policies which a tax is designed to subserve are all matters of political character and these matters have been entrusted to the Legislature and not to the Courts. In applying the test of reasonableness it is also essential to notice that the power of taxation is generally regarded as an essential attribute of sovereignty and constitutional provisions relating to the power of taxation are regarded not as grant of power but as limitation upon the power which would otherwise be practically without limit. It was observed by this Court in *Rai Ramakrishna v. State of Bihar*¹ :

“It is of course true that the power of taxing the people and their property is an essential attribute of the Government and Government may legitimately exercise the said power by reference to the objects to which it is applicable to the utmost extent to which Government thinks it expedient to do so. The objects to be taxed so long as they happen to be within the legislative competence of the Legislature can be taxed by the Legislature according to the exigencies of its needs, because there can be no doubt that the State is entitled to raise revenue by taxation. The quantum of tax levied by the taxing statute, the conditions subject to which it is levied, the manner in which it is sought to be recovered, are all matters within the competence of the Legislature, and in dealing with the contention raised by a citizen that that taxing statute contravenes Article 19 Courts would naturally be circumspect and cautious. Where for instance it appears that the taxing statute is plainly discriminatory, or provides no procedural machinery for assessment and levy of the tax, or that it is confiscatory, Courts would be justified in striking down the impugned statute as unconstitutional. In such cases, the character of the material provisions of the impugned statute is such that the Court would feel justified in taking the view that, in substance, the taxing statute is a cloak adopted by the Legislature for achieving its confiscatory purposes. This is illustrated by the decision of this Court in the case of *Kunnathat Thathunni Moopil Nair v. State of Kerala*¹ where taxing statute was struck down because it suffered from several fatal infirmities. On the other hand, we may refer to the case of *Jagannath Baksh Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh*², where a challenge to the taxing statute on the ground that its provisions were unreasonable was rejected and it was observed that unless the infirmities in the impugned statute were of such a serious nature as to justify its description as a colourable exercise of legislative power, the Court would uphold a taxing statute."

As a general rule it may be said that so long as a tax retains its character as a tax and is not confiscatory, or extortionate the reasonableness of the tax cannot be questioned. Mr. Chari submitted that the existing property tax under section 100 of the City Municipal Corporation Act and the tax on urban lands under the new Act both enacted under Entry 49 of the State List, one of them imposing a tax on the capital value of urban lands and the other on the annual value of lands and buildings exhaust in unreasonably high proportion of income. For instance, it is pointed out that in W.P. No. 2835 of 1967 the annual income on property was Rs. 6,000 and the proposed market value for the lands alone comes to Rs. 10,40,000. The urban land tax at 0.4 per cent. of the market value is Rs. 4,160 and the income-tax at the rate applicable to the petitioner was Rs. 1,234. The total tax burden in the aggregate under the three heads was Rs. 6,794, which exceeds the rental income. In W.P. No. 3686 of 1967 the municipal annual value was Rs. 4,095, the property tax was Rs. 1,098 and the urban land tax at 0.4 per cent. was Rs. 1,523. The proportion of the two taxes together to yearly or annual municipal value worked out to Rs. 62.5 per cent. It was, therefore, said that the taxes put together would practically exhaust the total income and the charging section in the new Act was unreasonable. The answer to the contention is that the charge is on the market value of the urban land and not on the annual letting value on which the municipal property tax is based. The basis of the two taxes being different it is not permissible to club together the two taxes and complain of the cumulative burden. If the tax is on the market value of the urban land as it is in this case it does not admit of a complaint that it takes away an unreasonably high proportion of the income. A tax on land values and a tax on letting value, though both are taxes under Entry 49 of List II, cannot be clubbed together in order to test the reasonableness of one or the other for the purposes of Article 19 (1). But so far as the new Act is concerned we consider that the levy at 0.4 per cent. of the market value of the urban land is by no means confiscatory in effect. It was also pointed out by Mr. V. K. T. Chari that in certain cases the market value of the urban land was arrived at by applying what is known as the contractor's method not to the building which stands on the land whose value is ascertained by that means but to some other building on a different land taken for comparison. It was said that it was difficult enough for a man to apply the contractor's method of valuation to his own building which could be done by a competent architect after taking into account all measurements. But it is absolutely an impossible task to check up or make objections to the contractor's method applied to another man's property which cannot be trespassed upon. It was said that the contractor's method was the last resort in valuation when a building has to be valued apart from the land and that it was a wrong application of the formula to use it to value the land without the building particularly when valuation of land can be made by applying the principles of the Land Acquisition Act. But this argument has no bearing on the constitutional validity of the charging section or the machinery provisions of the Act. It is, however, open to the writ petitioners to challenge the validity of the particular valuation in any particular case by way of an appeal under a statute or to move the High Court for grant of writ under Article 226 of the Constitution.

The impugned Act provides for the retrospective operation of the Act. Section 2 states that except sections 19, 47 and 48, other sections shall be deemed to have come into force in the City of Madras on the 1st day of July, 1963 and section 19 and 47 shall be deemed to have come into force in the City of Madras on the 21st May, 1966. It also provides that section 48 shall come into force on the date of the publication of the Act in the Fort St. George Gazette. Section 5 enacts that the market values of the urban lands shall be estimated to be the price which in the opinion of the Assistant Commissioner or the Tribunal such urban land would have fetched or fetch if sold in the open market on the date of the commencement of the Act, that is, from 1st July, 1967. The urban land tax is, therefore, payable from 1st July, 1963. It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that the retrospective operation of the law from 1st July, 1963, would make it unreasonable. We are unable to accept the argument of the petitioner as correct. It is not right to say as a general proposition that the imposition of tax with retrospective effect per se renders the law unconstitutional. In applying the test of reasonableness to a taxing statute it is of course a relevant consideration that the tax is being enforced with retrospective effect but that is not conclusive in itself. Taking into account the legislative history of the present Act we are of opinion that there is no unreasonableness in respect of the retrospective operation of the new Act. It should be noticed that the Madras Act of 1963 came into force on 1st July, 1963, and provided for the levy of urban land tax at the same rate as that provided under the new Act. The enactment was struck down as invalid by the judgment of the Madras High Court which was pronounced on the 25th March, 1966. The Legislature by giving retrospective effect to Madras Act XII of 1966 that the urban land must be taxed on the date on which the 1963 Act came into force the new Act cured the defect from which the earlier Act was suffering. In *Rai Ramakrishna's case*¹ the question at issue was whether the Bihar Taxation on Passengers and Goods (Carried by Public Service Motor Vehicles) Act, 1961 (XVII of 1961) was violative of Article 19 (5) and (6) of the Constitution for the reason that it was made retrospective with effect from 1st April, 1950. It appears that the Bihar Finance Act, 1950 levied a tax on passengers and goods carried by public service motor vehicles in Bihar. In an appeal arising out of a suit filed by the passengers and owners of goods in a representative capacity the Supreme Court pronounced on the 12th December, 1960, a judgment declaring Part III of the said Act unconstitutional. Thereafter on Ordinance namely, Bihar Ordinance II of 1961 was issued on the 1st of August, 1961, by the State of Bihar. By this Ordinance the material provisions of the earlier Act of 1950 which had been struck down by this Court were validated and brought into force retrospectively from the date when the earlier Act had purported to come into force. Subsequently the provisions of the said Ordinance were incorporated in the Act namely the Bihar Taxation on Passengers and Goods (Carried by Public Service Motor Vehicles) Act, 1961 which was duly passed by the Bihar Legislature and received the assent of the President on 23rd September, 1961. As a result of the retrospective operation of this Act its material provisions were deemed to have come into force on 1st April, 1950, that is to say, the date on which the earlier Act of 1950 had come into force. The appellants challenged the validity of this Act of 1961. Having failed in their writ petition before the High Court the appellants came to this Court and the argument was that the retrospective operation prescribed by section 1 (3) and by a part of section 23 (b) of the Act so completely altered the character of the tax proposed to be retrospectively recovered that it introduced a serious infirmity in the legislative competence of the Bihar Legislature itself. The argument was rejected by this Court and it was held that having regard to the relevant facts of the case the restrictions imposed by the said retrospective operation was reasonable in the public interest under Article 19 (5) and (6) and also reasonable under Article 304 (b) of the Constitution. In our opinion the ratio of this decision applies to the present case where the material facts are of a similar character.

In this context a reference may be made to a recent review of retroactive legislation in the United States of America :

" It is necessary that the Legislature should be able to cure inadvertent defects in statutes or their administration by making what has been aptly called "small repairs." Moreover the individual who claims that a vested right has arisen from the defect is seeking a windfall since had the legislature's or administrator's action had the effect it was intended to and could have had, no such right would have arisen. Thus the interest in the retroactive curing of such a defect in the administration of Government outweighs the individual's interest in benefiting from the defect The Court has been extremely reluctant to override the legislative judgment as to the necessity for retrospective taxation, not only because of the paramount Governmental interest in obtaining adequate revenues but also because taxes are not in the nature of a penalty or a contractual obligation but rather a means of apportioning the costs of Government among those who benefit from it. Indeed, as early as 1935 one commentator observed that "arbitrary retroactivity" may continue to rear its head in tax briefs but for practical purposes in this field it is as dead as a dog in the manger of law."

In view of the legislative background of the present case we are of opinion that the imposition of the tax retrospectively from 1st July, 1963, cannot be said to be an unreasonable restriction. We, therefore, reject the argument of the petitioners on this aspect of the case.

For these reasons we hold that the Madras Urban Land Tax Act, 1966 (Act of 1966) must be upheld as constitutionally valid. We accordingly set aside the judgment of the Madras High Court dated the 10th April, 1968, and order that writ petitions filed by the petitioners should be dismissed. In other words C.A. Nos. 21 to 23 are allowed and C. As. Nos. 46, 47, 125 and 274 are dismissed. There will be no order with regard to costs of these appeals.

Order accordingly.

Arbitration Act (X of 1940), sections 2 (c), 20, 31 (4) and 34—Agreement containing arbitration clause—Suit by one of the parties, ignoring arbitration clause, other party filing application under section 34 for stay of suit—Pending that suit—Application by other party under section 20 in a different Court—Maintainability of—Whether application under section 34 is an application in a reference within the meaning of section 31 (4).

Two conditions must be fulfilled in order to give a Court exclusive jurisdiction under section 31 (4) of the Act. In the first place an application under the Arbitration Act must be made to the Court competent to entertain it. In the second place the application must be made "in any reference". The application for stay of suit under section 34 in the present case is not an application in a reference within the wider meaning given to the phrase by this Court in Kumbha Mawji v. Union of India. (1953) S.C.R. 878: (1953) S.C.J. 436 : (1953) 1 M.L.J. 841. There are different sections in the Arbitration Act whereby an application is to be made even before any reference has been made. Applications under sections 8 and 20 are clearly applications anterior to the reference but they lead to a reference. Such applications are undoubtedly applications "in the matter of a reference " and may fall within the purview of section 31 (4) of the Act even though these applications are made before any reference has taken place. But an application under section 34 is clearly not an application belonging to the same category. It has nothing to do with any reference. It is only intended to make an arbitration agreement effective and prevent a party from going to Court contrary to his own agreement that the dispute is to be adjudicated by a private Tribunal.

The second condition imposed under section 31 (4) is that the application for stay must be made to a Court competent to entertain it. Section 34 provides for an application to a judicial authority before whom a legal proceeding is pending for the stay of that proceeding. An application for stay of legal proceeding to a judicial authority before whom it is pending is an application under the Arbitration Act to a judicial authority competent to entertain it. But the judicial authority need not necessarily be a Court competent under section 2 (c) to decide the question forming the subject-matter of the reference. A party to an arbitration agreement may choose to file a suit in a Court which has no jurisdiction to go into the matter at all and merely because the defendant in such a suit has to make an application to that Court under section 34 of the Act for the stay of the suit it cannot be said that the Court which otherwise has no jurisdiction in the matter becomes a Court within the meaning of section 2 (c) of the Act.

Held, the applications for stay under section 34 of the Act cannot be treated as an application in a reference under section 31 (4) of the Act and that the Subordinate Judge, Delhi was right in holding that the application under section 20 was maintainable in this Court and for making a reference of the dispute to the arbitrator mentioned in the agreement.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 11th January, 1965 of the Punjab High Court, Circuit Bench at Delhi in F.A.O. No. 82-D of 1963.

Dr. L. M. Singhvi, Senior Advocate (B. D. Sharma, Advocate, with him), for Appellant.

M. G. Chagla and C. B. Agarwala, Senior Advocates (Rameshwar Nath, Mahinder Narain and P. L. Vohra Advocates of M/s. Rajinder Narain & Co., with them), for Respondents.

Ramaswami, J.—This appeal is brought by Special Leave from the judgment of the Punjab High Court, dated 11th January, 1965 in F.A.O. No. 82-D of 1963.

The said appeal was filed under section 39 of the Arbitration Act, 1940 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) against the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated 29th January, 1963, passed on an application under section 20 of the Act by the Union of India for filing the arbitration agreement in Court and to make a reference of the dispute to the officer mentioned in the agreement.

In the year 1942 tenders were invited by the Union of India for construction of certain runways and roads in an aerodrome at Dalbhumgarh. The tender of the respondent, Surjeet Singh Atwal, was accepted and the agreement was executed on 19th August, 1944. Clause 25 of the agreement provided for the settlement of the disputes by reference to the arbitration of the Superintending Engineer of the Circle for the time being, according to law. The respondent alleged that he had completed the work entrusted to him under the contract and made a claim of Rs. 50,000 on the basis of his last bill. On the other hand the Union of India made a demand against the contractor for a sum of Rs. 5,09,164 on the ground that the amount had been over-paid to the respondent. Ignoring the arbitration clause respondent filed a suit on the original side of the Calcutta High Court for the recovery of Rs. 50,000 being suit No. 531 of 1951. The Union of India made an application under section 34 of the Act for the stay of the suit. The suit was consequently stayed and the matter was referred to the arbitration of the Superintending Engineer Calcutta Aviation Circle C.P.W.D. Calcutta. Before the arbitrator the Union of India made its counter-claim for a sum of Rs. 5,09,164. The contractor objected to the entertainment of the counter-claim. The stay of the suit which was granted by the Calcutta High Court was later on vacated. Pending the suit of the respondent in the Calcutta High Court the Union of India filed an application under section 20 of the Act in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi for getting the agreement of reference filed in the Court and for making the reference of the disputes between the parties to the arbitration of the Superintending Engineer Central Circle No. 1 C.P.W.D. Calcutta. The respondent opposed the petition mainly on the ground that the Court of Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. It was contended that the appellant had filed an application under section 34 of the Act for stay of the suit filed in the Calcutta High Court, and, therefore any subsequent application relating to arbitration under the agreement should be filed in the Calcutta High Court. By its judgment dated 29th January, 1963, the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi allowed the application of the appellant and ordered that the disputes between the parties be referred to the Superintending Engineer Calcutta Circle No. 1 C.P.W.D. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the contract of the parties was concluded at Delhi and it was signed at Delhi on behalf of the respondent and therefore the Delhi Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. Aggrieved by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge First Class the respondent filed an appeal under section 39 of the Act in the Punjab High Court. By his judgment dated 11th January, 1965, D. K. Mehajan, J., allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge First Class and dismissed the application of the appellant on the ground that the Delhi Court had no jurisdiction to entertain an application under section 20 of the Act.

The question involved in this appeal is whether the application made by the appellant under section 34 of the Act before the Calcutta High Court was an application in a reference within the meaning of section 31 (4) of the same Act. Section 2 (c) of the Act defines "Court" thus :

"Court" means a civil Court having jurisdiction to decide the question forming the subject-matter of the reference if the same had been the subject-matter of a suit but does not except for the purpose of arbitration proceedings under section 21 include a Small Cause Court";

Section 14 provides that the award may be filed in the Court. Section 31 (1) enacts that an award may be filed in any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the reference relates. Section 31 (2) provides that all questions regarding the validity effect or existence of an award or an arbitration agreement between the parties to the agreement shall be decided by the Court in which the award has been filed and by no other Court. Section 31 (3) states that all applications regarding the conduct of arbitration proceedings shall be made to the Court where the award has been filed and to no other Court. Section 31 (4) reads as follows :

"Notwithstanding anything contained elsewhere in this Act or in any other law for the time being in force, where in any reference any application under this Act has been made in a Court competent to entertain it, that Court alone shall have jurisdiction over the arbitration proceedings and all subsequent applications arising out of that reference and the arbitration proceedings shall be made in that Court and in no other Court."

Section 34 states :

"Where any party to an arbitration agreement or any person claiming under him commences any legal proceedings against any other party to the agreement or any person claiming under him in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may, at any time before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to the judicial authority before which the proceedings are pending to stay the proceedings and if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the arbitration agreement and that the applicant was at the time when the proceedings were commenced and still remains ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration such authority may make an order staying the proceedings."

Two conditions must be fulfilled in order to give a Court exclusive jurisdiction under section 31 (4) of the Act. In the first place an application under the Arbitration Act must be made to the Court competent to entertain it. In the second place the application must be made "in any reference." It was contended on behalf of the respondent that an application for stay of suit under section 34 of the Act was an application made "in a reference" within the meaning of section 31 (4) of the Act. In support of this proposition reference was made to the decision of this Court in *Kumbha Mawji v. Union of India*¹ in which it was held that the phrase "in any reference" in section 31 (4) of the Act was comprehensive enough to cover an application first made after the arbitration is completed and a final award made and the sub-section is not confined to applications made during the pendency of the arbitration proceeding. It was pointed out that sub-section (1) of section 31 determines the jurisdiction of the Court in which an award can be filed and that sub-sections (2) (3) and (4) of section 31 were intended to make that jurisdiction effective in three different ways (1) by vesting in one Court the authority to deal with all questions regarding the validity, effect of existence of an award or an arbitration agreement (2) by casting on the persons concerned the obligations to file all applications regarding the conduct of arbitration proceedings or otherwise arising out of such proceedings in one Court and (3) by vesting exclusive jurisdiction in the Court in which the first application relating to the matter was filed. The context therefore, of sub-section (4) would seem to indicate that the sub-section was not meant to be confined to applications made during the pendency of an arbitration. The necessity for clothing a single Court with effective and exclusive jurisdiction, and to bring about by the combined operation of these three provisions the avoidance of conflict and scramble is equally essential whether the question arises during the pendency of the arbitration or after the arbitration is completed or before the arbitration is commenced. It was therefore held that the expression "in any reference" in section 31 (4) should be construed as "in the course of a reference". Even so we are of opinion that the application for stay of suit under section 34 in the present case is not an application in a reference within the wider meaning given to the phrase by this Court in *Kumbha Mawji's case*¹. There are different sections in the Arbitration Act whereby an application is to be made even before any reference has been made. Section 8 for instance provides for an application to invoke the power of the Court when the parties fail to concur in the appointment of an arbitrator to whom the reference can be made. So also section 20 provides for an application to file the arbitration agreement in Court so that an order of reference to an arbitrator can be made. These are clearly applications anterior to the reference but they lead to a reference. Such applications are undoubtedly applications "in the matter of a reference" and may fall within the purview of section 31 (4) of the Act even though these applications are made before any reference has taken place. But an application under section 34 is clearly not an application belonging to the same category. It has nothing to do with any reference. It is only intended to make an arbitration agreement effective and prevent a party from going to Court contrary to his own agreement that the dispute is to be adjudicated by a private tribunal.

We do not, therefore, consider that an application for stay of suit under section 34 is an application in a reference even within the wider meaning given to that phrase by this Court in *Kumbha Mawji's case*¹. The second condition imposed by section 31 (4) is that the application for stay must be made to a Court competent to entertain it. It should be noticed that in section 34 the expression "judicial authority" is used. The section provides for an application to a judicial authority before whom a legal proceeding is pending for the stay of that proceeding. An application for stay of legal proceeding to a judicial authority before whom it is pending is an application under the Arbitration Act to a judicial authority competent to entertain it. But the judicial authority need not necessarily be a Court competent under section 2 (c) to decide the question forming the subject-matter of the reference. A party to an arbitration agreement may choose to file a suit in a Court which has no jurisdiction to go into the matter at all and merely because the defendant in such a suit has to make an application to that Court under section 34 of the Act for the stay of the suit it cannot be said that the Court which otherwise has no jurisdiction in the matter becomes a Court within the meaning of section 2 (c) of the Act. The view that we have expressed is borne out by the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in *Choteylal Sham Lal v. Cooch Behar Oil Mills Ltd.*¹; *Britania Building & Iron Co., Ltd. v. Gobinda Chandra Bhattacharjee*² and *Basanti Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Dhirga Brothers*³. For these reasons we consider that the application for stay under section 34 of the Act cannot be treated as an application in a reference under section 31 (4) of the Act. Therefore, the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi was right in holding that the application under section 20 of the Act was maintainable in his Court and for making a reference of the dispute to the arbitrator mentioned in the agreement. Accordingly we set aside the order of the Punjab High Court and restore the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated 29th January 1963 allowing the application filed by the appellant under section 20 of the Arbitration Act 1940. The appeal is allowed with costs.

Cantonment Act (II of 1924), sections 185 (1) and 187 (1)—Relative scope and applicability.

The provisions of sections 185 and 187 of the Cantonments Act deal with different situations. While section 185 relates to erection or re-erection of buildings on private lands, section 187 deals with the construction of projections or structures over-hanging, projecting into or encroaching on any street, any drain or aqueduct. The one has nothing to do with the other.

Section 185 of the Act would apply only to cases where a building is erected or re-erected over a land belonging to some one other than the Cantonment Board. The notice contemplated under the section is also to be given only to the owner, lessee or occupier of such land and the period of twelve months prescribed under the section will apply only to cases of construction on private lands. Section 187 on the other hand relates to cases of encroachment on any street or drain. Obviously the Legislature does not intend that a Cantonment Board should be enabled to demolish buildings erected on private lands after the expiry of the time limit specified in section 185 (1). But public interest requires that no such limitation should be placed on the Cantonment Board while acting under section 187 (1) relating to encroachment on public streets and drains.

Quaere : Can a Cantonment Board take action under section 187 of the Act even after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed for filing of suits by such bodies for removal of encroachments on public streets or parts thereof.

Hegde, J.—The only question arising for decision in this appeal by Special Leave is whether the notices impugned in these proceedings are governed by section 185 (1) or section 187 (1) of the Cantonment Act, 1924. The trial Court held that section 185 (1) is the governing provision. The first appellate Court differed from it and held that section 187 (1) governs. The High Court in second appeal has restored the decision of the trial Court.

The respondent is the owner of shop No. 344 in Mohalla Bakri, Lal Kurti Bazar, Meerut Cantonment. The shop in question was constructed about 20 years before the institution of the suit from which this appeal arises. At about the time of the construction of that shop permission was obtained from the Cantonment Board to put up a stone projection over the drain by the side of the road in front of the shop to facilitate ingress into the shop and egress therefrom. The first appellate Court has found and that finding has been accepted by the High Court that about 18 years prior to the institution of the suit, the owner of the shop put up a wooden kiosk over the stone projection and the same is being used as a pan shop. According to the finding of those Courts the kiosk in question was put up without obtaining the permission of the Cantonment Board. On 9th November, 1953, the Cantonment Board issued a notice to the occupier of shop No. 344 under section 187, requiring him to demolish and remove the kiosk within 7 days from the receipt of that notice. As that demand was not complied with, a final notice under section 187 was given to him on 8th December, 1953. Thereafter the owner of the shop instituted the suit from which this appeal has arisen seeking a perpetual injunction restraining the Cantonment Board from getting the kiosk removed. As mentioned earlier, the trial Court decreed the suit holding that as the kiosk had been put up 18 years prior to the issue of the notice referred to earlier, the Cantonment Board cannot compel its removal in view of section 185 (1). This decision was reversed by the learned District Judge in appeal. The learned District Judge accepted the finding of the trial Court that the kiosk in question had been put up about 18 years prior to the date of the suit but yet according to him it was competent for the Cantonment Board to get the same removed under section 187 (1). The learned District Judge opined that section 185 (1) has no relevance to the facts of the case. In second appeal, the High Court agreed with the conclusion of the trial Court that section 185 (1) is the governing provision.

The established facts are : Shop No. 344 was constructed on the land belonging to the respondent. Cantonment Board had no right in or over that land. The stone projection was constructed over the drain adjoining the road after obtaining the permission of the Cantonment Board. It cannot be disputed that the property in the road including the drain statutorily vests in the Cantonment Board. The permission, given by the Cantonment Board to the owner of the shop to put up the projection does not confer on him any proprietary right over the drain. It merely gives him a licence to use the projection. He cannot exclude the public from using that projection. The kiosk had been put up without obtaining the permission of the Cantonment Board. The kiosk is a structure and it projects or encroaches upon the drain belonging to the Cantonment Board. It can even be said that it overhangs the drain. We have now to examine the provision of law applicable bearing in mind those facts.

Section 185 (1) reads :

“A (Board) may, at any time, by notice in writing direct the owner, lessee or occupier of any land in the cantonment to stop the erection or re-erection of a building in any case in which the (Board) considers that such erection or re-erection is an offence under section 184, and may in such case (or in any other case in which the Board considers that the erection or re-erection of a building is an offence under section 184, within (twelve months) of the completion of such erection or re-erection) in like manner direct the alteration or demolition as it thinks necessary, of the building or any part thereof, so erected or re-erected."

We are unable to agree with the High Court that this section applies to the facts of the present case. In our judgment that section applies only to cases where a building is erected or re-erected over a land belonging to someone other than the Cantonment Board. That is why that section says that a notice under that section can be given "to a owner, lessee or occupier of any land." A notice under that section cannot be given to any person other than the owner or lessee or the occupier of the land over which the building in question had been erected or re-erected. The notices with which we are concerned in this case were not given to the owner, lessee or occupier of the land over which kiosk is put up. As seen earlier the kiosk has been constructed over the land under the ownership of the Cantonment Board. Neither the owner of shop No. 344 or its occupier can be considered as a lessee of the land over which the projection was put up. Hence the provisions contained in section 185 (1) are not attracted to the present case.

This takes us to section 187 (1). It reads :

"No owner or occupier of any building in a cantonment shall, without the permission in writing of the (Board) add to or place against or in front of the building any projection or structure overhanging, projecting into, or encroaching on, any street or any drain, sewer or aqueduct therein."

This section deals with construction which are projections or structures overhanging, projecting into or encroaching on any street or any drain, sewer or aqueduct. Undoubtedly the kiosk is a structure. Further it is a projection into a drain. It also encroaches on the drain if it does not also overhang it. Therefore the act complained of clearly fails within the scope of section 187 (1).

In other words, section 185 deals with erection or re-erection of buildings on private lands whereas section 187 deals with the construction of projections or structures overhanging, projecting into or encroaching on any street, any drain or aqueduct. The two provisions deal with different situations. One has nothing to do with the other. Obviously the Legislature does not want the Cantonment Board to demolish buildings erected on private lands after the period mentioned in section 185 (1) but public interest requires that no such limitation should be placed on the Cantonment Board while acting under section 187 (1). Otherwise our streets and roads may soon disappear. The High Court missed the distinction between section 185 (1) and section 187 (1). Quite clearly the present case falls within section 187 (1).

Judicial opinion is divided on the question whether local Boards can take action under provisions similar to section 187 even after the period of limitation for filing suits by those bodies for possession of public street or roads or parts thereof or on which they have discontinued their possession expires. It is not necessary to go into that controversy in the present case. The period of limitation prescribed for a suit of the type referred to earlier is 30 years. In the present case action under section 187 (1) had been commenced within 18 years from the date of the encroachment.

For the reasons mentioned above this appeal is allowed and decree of the High Court is set aside and that of the first appellate Court restored.

Now coming to the question of costs, at the time of granting Special Leave this Court had directed that the appellant shall pay the costs of the respondent in any event. We incorporate that order as a part of this judgment.

v.

Shambhoo Narain Singh

... Respondent.

U. P. Panchayat Raj Act (XXVI of 1947), section 95 (1) (g)—Pradhan elected under—Nature of office—Power of Government to suspend an elected Pradhan pending enquiry into charges against him.

Interpretation of statutes—Doctrine of incidental or ancillary power—Scope of.

A Pradhan elected under the U. P. Panchayat Raj Act is not a Government servant though he is deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code. He is an elected representative and there is no contractual relationship between him and the Government much less the relationship of master and servant. His rights and duties are those laid in the Act and there is no question of any inherent power in the Government or its delegated authority under section 96-A of the Act, to suspend a Pradhan on the analogy of master and servant.

No specific power is conferred on the State Government under the Act to suspend a Pradhan pending enquiry into charges levelled against him. The power to suspend or remove an office-bearer under section 95 (1) (g) is only as a punishment and not a power to suspend pending enquiry.

It is no doubt true that where an Act confers a jurisdiction, it impliedly also grants the power of doing all such acts or employing such means as are essentially necessary to its execution. But before implying the existence of such a power the Court must be satisfied that the existence of that power is absolutely essential for the discharge of the power conferred and not merely that it is convenient to have such a power.

The power to place an officer under suspension is not absolutely essential for the proper exercise of the power conferred under section 95 (1) (g) of the U. P. Panchayat Raj Act, 1947.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 9th December, 1964 of the Allahabad High Court, Lucknow Bench in Special Appeal No. 93 of 1963.

C. B. Agarwala, Senior Advocate (O. P. Rana, Advocate, with him), for Appellant

S. C. Agarwal, R. K. Garg and D. P. Singh, Advocates of M/s. Ramamurthi and Co., and Miss S. Chakravarty, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hegde, J.—In this appeal by Special Leave, the scope of section 95 (1) (g) of the U. P. Panchayat Raj Act, 1947 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) arises for decision.

The facts material for the purpose of deciding this appeal are these : The respondent was the elected Pradhan of the Goan Sabha of Asapur District Faizabad. The Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar, Faizabad placed him under suspension as per his order of 18th September, 1963. The order in question reads as follows :

“Sri Shambhoo Narain Singh, Pradhan of Gram Sabha and Chairman, Land Management Committee of village Asapur is placed under suspension with effect from the immediate date. He is further directed to hand over the charge to the Up-Pradhan of Gram Sabha, Asapur. The Up-Pradhan will function as Pradhan till further orders. The charge sheet against Sri Shambhoo Narain Singh will follow.

31st March, 1969.

(Sd.) S. M. Abbas, P. C. S.

Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar, Faizabad."

The validity of this order is being challenged in these proceedings. It is the common case of both the parties that the suspension ordered thereunder is merely a suspension pending enquiry and is not a punishment imposed under section 95 (1) (g). The question for decision is whether the appellant had the competence to place the respondent under suspension pending enquiry into the charges levelled against the respondent. The impugned order was challenged before a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court by means of a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution. The learned single Judge dismissed that petition but in appeal the Appellate Bench up-held the contention of the respondent and quashed the same holding that section 95 (1) (g) did not empower the appellant to pass the impugned order. It is the correctness of that conclusion that is in issue in this appeal.

To repeat the respondent is an elected Pradhan. His rights and duties are regulated by the Act. He is not a Government servant though he has to be deemed as a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code in view of section 28 of the Act. He is not a subordinate of the Sub-Divisional Officer or even of the Government. It is true that the Act has conferred on the State Government certain powers of control and supervision over the Gaon Sabhas and its office-bearers. These powers are enumerated in section 95. Under section 95 (1) (g) power is conferred on the Government to suspend or remove a member of a Gaon Panchayat or joint committee (or Bhumi Prabandhak Samiti) an office bearer of a Gaon Sabha or a Panch, Sahayak Sarpanch or Sarpanch of a Nyaya Panchayat if the conditions mentioned therein are satisfied. But that power is admittedly a power to punish. No specific power to suspend a Pradhan pending enquiry into the charges levelled against him has been conferred on the State Government. This much is conceded. In view of section 96-A the power conferred on the Government under section 95 can be delegated to any officer or authority subordinate to it subject to such conditions and restrictions as the Government may deem fit to impose. The State Government's power under section 95 (1) (g) has been delegated to Sub-Divisional Officers. Therefore if the State Government is held to have power to suspend an office-bearer of a Gaon Sabha pending enquiry into the charges levelled against him that power must be held to have been delegated to the Sub-Divisional Officers. Therefore the essential question is whether the State Government has power to make the impugned order.

A faint attempt was made to show that the relationship between the State Government and the Pradhans is that of master and servants and that being so the State Government has competence to require Pradhans not to discharge their functions as Pradhans during the pendency of an enquiry into the charges made against them. It was urged that if the Court is pleased to hold that the relationship between the State Government and the Pradhans is that of a master and the servants then the appellant could call into aid the rule laid down by this Court in *Management of Hotel Imperial, New Delhi v. Hotel Workers Union*¹, *T. Caje v. U. Jormanik Siem*², *R. P. Kapur v. Union of India*³, and *Balwant Rai Ratilal Patel v. State of Maharashtra*⁴. This is a wholly untenable contention. A Pradhan cannot be considered as a servant of the Government. He is an elected representative. There is no contractual relationship between him and the Government much less the relationship of master and servant. As mentioned earlier his rights and duties are those laid down in the Act. Therefore the rule laid down in the above cited decisions is wholly inapplicable to the facts of this case. In this case there is no question of suspending a servant from performing the duties of his office even though the contract of service is subsisting. In the case of a master and his servant it is a well established right of the master to give directions to his servant relating to his duties. That power includes within itself the right to direct the servant to refrain from performing his duties but

1. (1960) S.C.J. 317 : (1960) M.L.J. (Cri.) 207 : (1960) 1 S.C.R. 476.

2. (1961) 1 S.C.R. 750.

3. (1964) 5 S.C.R. 431.

4. (1968) 2 S.C.J. 540 : (1968) 2 S.C.R. 577.

that does not absolve the liability of the master to pay the remuneration contracted to be paid to the servant unless otherwise provided in the contract, even during the period the servant is required not to perform his duties.

The Gaon Sabha is the creature of a statute. Its power and duties as well as the powers and duties of its officers are all regulated by the Act. Hence no question of any inherent power arises for consideration—See *Sm. Hira Devi and Others v. District Board, Shahjahanpur*¹.

The only other contention advanced is that power claimed should be held to be an essential power for the proper discharge of the conferred power. It was urged that without such a power, charges framed against any office-bearer cannot be properly inquired into as he may utilise his office to interfere with the course of enquiry and the possibility of his continuing to misuse his office during the pendency of the enquiry cannot be ruled out.

It is well recognised that where an Act confers a jurisdiction, it impliedly also grants the power of doing all such acts, or employing such means as are essentially necessary to its execution. But before implying the existence of such a power the Court must be satisfied that the existence of that power is absolutely essential for the discharge of the power conferred and not merely that it is convenient to have such a power. We are not satisfied that the power to place under suspension an officer is absolutely essential for the proper exercise of the power conferred under section 95 (1) (g). It cannot be said that the power in question cannot be properly exercised without the power to suspend pending enquiry. The mere possibility of interference with the course of enquiry or of further misuse of powers are not sufficient to enlarge the scope of a statutory power. If it is otherwise the mere power to punish an offender would have been held sufficient to arrest and detain him pending enquiry and trial. There would have been no need to confer specific power to arrest and detain persons charged with offences before their conviction.

The unsustainability of the contention of the appellant would become obvious on an examination of the various provisions of the Act. Under the impugned order, the appellant had directed the Up-Pradhan to officiate as Pradhan during the suspension of the respondent. Our attention has not been invited to any provision either in the Act or in the rules framed thereunder under which the appellant could have made such an order. If he could not have made that order, as in our opinion he could not have, then the question arises as to who could discharge the functions of a Pradhan when he is placed under suspension, pending enquiry of the charges levelled against him. Absence of a provision providing for such a contingency is a clear indication of the absence of the power contended for.

For the reasons mentioned above, we agree with the Appellate Bench of the High Court that the impugned order was made without the authority of law. That is also the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in *Babu Nandan v. Sub-Divisional Officer, Salempur*². We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Broach Borough Municipality and others

... Respondents.

Bombay Principal Boroughs Act (XVIII of 1925), section 73—Gujarat Municipalities Act (XXXIV of 1964), section 99 and Gujarat Imposition of Taxes by Municipalities (Validation) Act (II of 1964), section 3—Validation of assessments made by Municipalities on the capital value of land and buildings—Scope and effect—Power of Municipality to levy a tax on lands and buildings.

Words and Phrases—Rate—Meaning of.

Interpretation of statutes—Validating Acts—Scope of generally.

The word 'rate' as used in Municipal Acts has acquired a special meaning in legislative practice and it means a tax for local purposes imposed by local authorities. The basis of such tax was the annual letting value of the land or buildings which is arrived at either on the basis of the actual rent fetched by the land or building or on a notional rent which it could fetch if let. The rate based on a percentage of the capital value was held ultra vires of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act.

Patel Gordhandas Hargovindas v. Municipal Commissioner, Ahmedabad, (1964) 2 S.C.R. 608 : (1965) 1 S.C.J. 15, Ref.

It is to validate such levies that the Gujarat Imposition of Taxes by Municipalities (Validation) Act, 1963 was passed. Sections 3 of the Act in express terms validated all such levies based on a percentage of the capital value of land and buildings. The Legislature has the power to validate statutes and to pass retrospective laws.

Generally speaking, before a Legislature seeks to validate a tax declared by a Court to be illegally collected under an ineffective or an invalid law, the cause of the ineffectiveness or invalidity must be removed before validation can be said to take place. The most important condition, of course, is that the Legislature must possess the power to impose the tax, for if does not, the action must ever remain ineffective and illegal. The validity of a validating law, therefore, depends upon whether the Legislature possesses the competence which it claims over the subject matter and whether in making the validation it removes the defect which the Court had found in the existing law and makes adequate provision in the validating law for a valid imposition of the tax.

(Modes of validation and effect on decisions of Court, explained),

Section 99 of the Gujarat Municipalities Act, as now enacted, has clearly authorised the levy of a tax by the Municipality based on the percentage of the capital value. A tax on lands and buildings is fully within the competence of the State Legislature ; (Entry 49 of List II of Schedule VII to the Constitution) and it is open to the Legislature to authorise the Municipality to levy the same tax indicating the mode of levy. This the Legislature has done in section 99 by indicating the different modes of levy, one such mode being a percentage of the capital value.

Sudhir Chandra Nawn v. Wealth-tax Officer, Calcutta, (1968) 2 I.T.J. 724 : (1968) 2 S.C.J. 790 : A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 59, Referred to.

By section 3 of the Validation Act the Legislature has retrospectively imposed the tax on lands and buildings based on their capital value and has also given a new meaning to the expression 'rate'. Hence the effect of the decision in Patel Gordhanda, Hargovindas v. Municipal Commissioner, Ahmedabad, (1964) 2 S.C.R. 608: (1965) 1 S.C.J. 15 invalidating such levy under the earlier Act has been neutralised and put out of action.

B. Sen, Senior Advocate, (S. P. Nayar, Advocate, with him), for Respondent No. 3. (In both Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hidayatullah, C. J.—These matters arise under Article 226 of the Constitution and are appeals by certificate granted by the High Court of Gujarat against its judgment and order, 10th September, 1966. The appellant No. 1 is a Company which has spinning and weaving mills at Broach and manufactures and sells cotton yarn and cloth. Respondent No. 1 is the Broach Borough Municipality constituted under section 8 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925. In the assessments years 1961-62, 1962-63 and 1963-64 the Municipality purporting to act under section 73 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925 and the Rules made thereunder imposed a purported rate on lands and buildings belonging to the respondent at a certain percentage of the capital value. Section 73 of the Act allows the Municipality to levy 'a rate on buildings or lands or both situate within the municipal borough.' The Rules under the Act applied the rates on the basis of the percentage on the capital value of lands and buildings. The assessment lists were published and tax was imposed according to the rates calculated on the basis of the capital value of the property of the appellant and bills in respect of the tax were served. The writ petitions were filed to question the assessment and to get the assessment cancelled.

During the pendency of the writ petitions the Legislature of Gujarat passed the Gujarat Imposition of Taxes by Municipalities (Validation) Act, 1963. As a result the writ petitions were amended and the Validation Act was also questioned. The appellant also filed a second writ petition questioning the validity of the Validation Act under Articles 19 (1) (f), (g) and 265 of the Constitution. By the order under appeal here both the writ petitions were dismissed although a certificate of fitness was granted.

The Validation Act was presumably passed because of the decision of this Court reported in *Patel Gordhandas Hargovindas v. Municipal Commissioner, Ahmedabad*¹. In that case the validity of the Rules framed by the Municipal Corporation under section 73 were called in question, particularly Rule 350-A for rating open lands which provides that the rate on the area of open lands shall be levied at 1 per centum on the valuation based upon capital value. Dealing with the word 'rate' as used in these statutes, it was held by this Court that the word 'rate' had acquired a special meaning in English legislative history and practice and also in Indian legislation and it meant a tax for local purposes imposed by local authorities. The basis of such tax was the annual value of the lands or buildings. It was discussed in the case that there were three methods by which the rates could be imposed; the first was to take into account the actual rent fetched by the land or building where it was actually let; the second was, where it was not let, to take rent based on hypothetical tenancy, particularly in the case of buildings; and the third was where neither of these two modes was available, by valuation based on capital value from which annual value had to be found by applying suitable percentage which might not be the same for lands and buildings. It was held that in section 73 the word 'rate' as used must have been used in the special sense in which the word was understood in the legislative practice of India before that date. Rule 350-A which laid the rate on land at a percentage of the valuation based upon capital was therefore declared ultra vires the Act itself. In short, the word 'rate' was given a specialised meaning and was held to mean a kind of impost on the annual letting value of property, if actually let out, and on a notional letting value if the property was not let out. The Legislature of Gujarat then passed the Validation Act seeking to validate the imposition of the tax as well as to avoid any future interpretation of the Act on the lines on which Rule 350-A was construed. The Act came into force on 29th January, 1964.

After defining the expression used in the Act and providing for its application, the Act enacted section 3 which concerned validation of impositions and collections of taxes or rates by Municipalities in certain cases. That section reads as follows :

"3. Validation of imposition and collection of taxes or rates by municipalities in certain cases.

Notwithstanding anything contained in any judgment, decree or order of a Court or Tribunal or any other authority, no tax or rate assessed or purporting to have been assessed by a municipality under the relevant municipal law or any rules made thereunder on the basis of the capital value of a building or land, as the case may be, or on the basis of a percentage of such capital value, and imposed, or collected or recovered by the municipality at any time before the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to have been invalidly assessed, imposed, collected or recovered by reason of the assessment being based on the capital value or the percentage of the capital value, and not being based on the annual letting value, of the building or land, as the case may be, and the imposition, collection and recovery of the tax or rate so assessed and the provisions of the rules made under the relevant municipal law under which the tax or rate was so assessed shall be valid and shall be deemed always to have been valid and shall not be called in question merely on the ground that the assessment of the tax or rate on the basis of the capital value of the building or land, as the case may be, or on the basis of a percentage of such capital value was not authorised by law; and accordingly any tax or rate, so assessed before the commencement of this Act and leviable for a period prior to such commencement but not collected or recovered before such commencement, may be collected and recovered in accordance with the relevant municipal law, and the rules made thereunder."

If this section is valid that the imposition cannot be questioned and the short question which arises in this case is as to the validity of this section. It is not denied that a Legislature does possess the power to validate statutes and to pass retrospective laws. It is, however, contended that the Validation Act is ineffective in carrying out its avowed object. This is the only point which falls for consideration in these appeals.

Before we examine section 3 to find out whether it is effective in its purpose or not we may say a few words about validating statutes in general. When a Legislature sets out to validate a tax declared by a Court to be illegally collected under an ineffective or an invalid law, the cause for ineffectiveness or invalidity must be removed before validation can be said to take place effectively. The most important condition, of course, is that the Legislature must possess the power to impose the tax for, if it does not, the action must ever remain ineffective and illegal. Granted legislative competence, it is not sufficient to declare merely that the decision of the Court shall not bind for that is tantamount to reversing the decision in exercise of judicial power which the Legislature does not possess or exercise. A Court's decision must always bind unless the conditions on which it is based are so fundamentally altered that the decision could not have been given in the altered circumstances. Ordinarily, a Court holds a tax to be invalidly imposed because the power to tax is wanting or the statute or the rules or both are invalid, or do not sufficiently create the jurisdiction. Validation of a tax so declared illegal may be done only if the grounds of illegality or invalidity are capable of being removed and are in fact removed and the tax thus made legal. Sometimes this is done by providing for jurisdiction where jurisdiction had not been properly invested before. Sometimes this is done by re-enacting retrospectively a valid and legal taxing provision and then by fiction making the tax already collected to stand under the re-enacted law. Sometimes the Legislature gives its own meaning and interpretation of the law under which the tax was collected and by legislative fiat makes the new meaning binding upon Courts. The Legislature may follow any one method or all of them and while it does so it may neutralise the effect of the earlier decision of the Court which becomes ineffective after the change of the law. Whichever method is adopted it must be within the competence of the Legislature and legal and adequate to attain the object of validation. If the legislature has the power over the subject-matter and competence to make a valid law, it can at any time make such a valid law and make it retrospectively so as to bind even past transactions. The validity of a Validating law, therefore, depends upon whether the Legislature possesses the competence which it claims over the subject-matter and whether in making the validation it removes the defect which the Courts had found in the existing law and makes adequate provisions in the Validating law for a valid imposition of the tax.

The inquiry in this case may begin by asking whether the Legislature possesses competence to pass a law imposing a tax on lands and buildings on the basis of a percentage of their capital value. If the Legislature possesses that power then it can authorise the Municipality to levy that tax. To test the proposition we may consider section 99 which has now been enacted in the Gujarat Municipalities Act. It reads :

“ 99. Taxes which may be imposed.

(1) Subject to any general special orders which the State Government may make in this behalf and to the provisions of sections 101 and 102, a municipality may impose for the purposes of this Act any of the following taxes, namely :—

(i) a tax on building or lands situate within the municipal borough to be based on the annual letting value or the capital value or a percentage of capital value of the buildings or lands or both :

*	*	*	*	*	”

Learned Counsel for the appellants did not contend that this section was outside the powers of the Legislature. In fact, he could not, in view of Entry 49 of List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. That entry reads : “ Taxes on lands and buildings ” and a tax on lands and buildings based upon capital value falls squarely within the entry. The doubt which is created by Entry 86 of List I “ Taxes on the capital value of assets, no longer exists after the decision of this Court in *Sudhir Chandra Nawan v. Wealth-tax Officer, Calcutta*¹. In that case the respective ambits of the two entries are explained. It is pointed out that unlike the tax contemplated by Entry 49, List II the tax under entry 86 (List I) is not a direct tax on lands and buildings but on net assets the components of which may be lands and buildings and other times of assets excluding such liabilities as may exist. The incidence of the tax is not on lands and buildings as units of taxation but on the net assets of which lands and buildings are only some of the components. This is not the case under entry 49 (List II, where the tax can be laid directly on lands and buildings as units of taxation. Therefore, a tax on lands and buildings is fully within the competence of the Legislature and it is open to it to authorise the municipality to levy the same tax indicating the mode of levy. This the Legislature has done by indicating the different modes which may be adopted in making the levy, one such mode being a percentage of the capital value.

The Legislature in section 73 had not authorised the levy of a tax in this manner but had authorised the levy of a rate. That led to the discussion whether a rule putting the tax on capital value of buildings answered the description of the impost in the Act, namely, 'a rate on buildings or lands or both situate within the Municipal borough.' It was held by this Court that it did not, because the word 'rate' had acquired a special meaning in legislative practice. Faced with this situation the Legislature exercised its undoubted powers of redefining 'rate' so as to equate it to a tax on capital value and convert the tax purported to be collected as a 'rate' into a tax on lands and buildings. The Legislature in the Validation Act, therefore, provided for the following matters. First, it stated that no tax or rate by whichever name called and laid on the capital value of lands and buildings must be deemed to be invalidly, assessed, imposed, collected or recovered simply on the ground that a rate is based on the annual letting value. Next it provided that the tax must be deemed to be validly assessed, imposed, collected or recovered and the imposition must be deemed to be always so authorised. The Legislature by this enactment retrospectively imposed the tax on lands and buildings based on their capital value and as the tax was already imposed, levied and collected on that basis, made the imposition, levy, collection and recovery of the tax valid, notwithstanding the declaration by the Court that as 'rate', the levy was incompetent. The Legislature not only equated the tax collected to a tax on lands and buildings, which it had the power to levy, but also to a rate giving a new meaning to the expression 'rate', and while doing so it put out of action the effect of the decisions of the Courts to the contrary. The exercise of power by the Legislature was valid because the Legislature does possess the power to levy a tax on lands and buildings based on capital value thereof and in validating the levy on that basis, the implication of the use of the word 'rate' could be effectively removed and the tax on lands and buildings imposed instead. The tax, therefore, can no longer be questioned on the ground that section 73 spoke of a rate and the imposition was not a rate as properly understood but a tax on capital value. In this view of the matter it is hardly necessary to invoke the 14th clause of section 73 which contains a residuary power to impose any other tax not expressly mentioned.

In our judgment these appeals possess no merit after the passing of the Validation Act and must be dismissed but in the circumstances without any order about costs.

The Provisions of the Maharashtra Act as also of the Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 together with the amending Act are immune from any challenge on the ground of contravention of Articles 19 and 31 of the Constitution. By the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act 1964, after Entry 20, Entries 21 to 66 were inserted in the Ninth Schedule to the Constitution. Entries 35 and 36 relate to the Maharashtra Act and Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 respectively, Article 31 (b) gives full protection to an Act and its provisions in the Schedule against any challenge on the ground of inconsistency with or abridging of any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution. This would be so notwithstanding any Judgment decree or order of any Court or Tribunal to the contrary. The amending Laws and, in particular, Hyderabad Act III of 1954 which circumscribed section 38 (e) would also be covered by the same protection because the Parent Act, namely, the Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 was included in the Ninth Schedule in the year 1964 which was long after the enactment of the amending Act.

If the assent of the President had been accorded to the amending Acts, it would be difficult to hold that the President had never assented to the Parent Act, namely, Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950. Even if such assent has not been accorded earlier it must be taken to have been granted when Amending Act III of 1954 was assented to.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 25th March, 1964 of the Bombay High Court in Special Civil Application No. 1882 of 1962.

A.K. Sen, Senior Advocate (K.P. Gupta, Advocate, with him), for Appellants.

M.S.K. Sastri and R.H. Dhebar, Advocates, for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is an appeal by Special Leave from a judgment of the Bombay High Court dismissing a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution which had been filed by the appellants. The validity of the Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Re-enactment, Validation and further amendment) Act, 1961, hereinafter called the “Maharashtra Act”, was challenged. It was also sought to restrain the respondents from proceeding with the enquiry under section 38 (e) of the Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (XXI of 1950) as amended by the Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act (III of 1954), read with the relevant rules.

The appellants are land owners in Pathri Taluka of Parbhani District. This district was originally a part of the erstwhile State of Hyderabad and the provisions of the Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 were applicable there. By amending Act III of 1954 which received the assent of the President on 31st January, 1954 a number of amendments were made. Section 38-E was inserted. By that section the Government could declare by notification that ownership of all lands held by protected tenants which they were entitled to purchase from their land-holders under the provisions of chapter IV were to stand transferred to such tenants.

The district of Parbhani became a part of the erstwhile Bombay State on the enactment of the States Re-Organisation Act, 1956. By means of Bombay (Hyderabad Areas) Adoption of Laws (State and Concurrent Subjects) Order 1956, the State of Bombay adopted and modified Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950. A notification was issued on 21st May, 1957 by the Government of Bombay making a declaration under section 38-E of Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 in the district of Parbhani. The Agricultural Lands Tribunal and the Special Tehsildar, Parbhani District as also the Secretary, The Agricultural Lands Tribunal Pathri Taluka of the same District started an inquiry under rule 54 of the Hyderabad Transfer of Ownership Rules and published a provisional list of those who were declared to be land owners which included some of the tenants of the appellants. The appellants filed objections which were dismissed.

The Bombay Legislature passed Act XXXII of 1958 which was first published in the Bombay Government Gazette on 10th April, 1958 after having received the assent of the President. By this Act further amendments were made in Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950. In July, 1959 the appellants filed a writ petition in the High Court of Bombay assailing the vires of the provisions of section 38-E of Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950. The grounds of attack, inter alia, were that Articles 19 (f) and 31 of the Constitution had been contravened and that the aforesaid Act had not been reserved for and had not received the assent of the President. The validity of the notification issued in May 1957 was also attacked. This petition was dismissed by the High Court in March, 1960. In January, 1961 this Court granted Special Leave to appeal against that judgment. In March, 1961 during the pendency of the appeal the Andhra Pradesh High Court in *Inamdars of Sulhanagar and others v. Government of Andhra Pradesh and another*¹, struck down Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 as amended by Act III of 1954 on the sole ground that it had not received the assent of the President as required by Article 31 (3) of the Constitution. In February, 1961, the Maharashtra Act was enacted after the assent of the President had been obtained. It repealed and re-enacted the Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 and declared that it shall be deemed to have come into force on 10th day of June, 1950 as re-enacted. It also repealed the amending laws and re-enacted them and declared that as re-enacted they shall be deemed to have come into force on the day specified against each of them in the table given therein. It made certain further amendments. Thereupon the appeal pending in this Court was withdrawn by the appellants with liberty to challenge the constitutionality of the Maharashtra Act. In November, 1962 the appellants filed a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution in the Bombay High Court challenging the Maharashtra Act. This petition was dismissed by the High Court in March, 1964.

It appears that only two points were urged before the High Court. The first was that the State Legislature had no power to re-enact the provisions of the Hyderabad Acts (the parent Act and the amending Acts) with retrospective effect. This argument was repelled by a brief observation that the State Legislature was competent to give retrospective effect to the provisions enacted by it. The second point raised was that section 38 (E) which provided that protected tenants would be deemed to have become owners of the land held by them subject to certain conditions with effect from the date notified by the Government was ultra vires Articles 19 and 31 of the Constitution. The High Court referred to its earlier decision in Special Civil Application No. 1128 of 1959 in which the same contention had been pressed but had not been accepted. The High Court also relied on a decision of this Court in *Sri Ram Narain v. State of Bombay*¹ in which the constitutional validity of similar provisions in section 32 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act had been upheld.

The present appeal must fail. The provisions of the Maharashtra Act as also of the Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 together with the amending Act are immune from any challenge on the ground of contravention of Articles 19 and 31 of the Constitution. By the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964, after 20, entries 21 to 66 were inserted in the Ninth Schedule to the Constitution. 35 and 36 relate to the Maharashtra Act and Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 respectively. Article 31 (b) gives full protection to an Act and its provisions in the Schedule against any challenge on the ground of inconsistency with or abridging of any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution. This would be so notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of any Court or Tribunal to the contrary. The amending laws and, in particular, Hyderabad Act III of 1954 which inserted section 38-E would also be covered by the same protection because the parent Act, namely the Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 was included in the Ninth Schedule in the year 1964 which was long after the enactment of the amending Act.

In the above view of the matter no attempt was made on behalf of the appellants to raise the second question about the competency of the Legislature of the Maharashtra State to enact the Maharashtra Act with retrospective effect in respect of Parbhani District which became a part of the erstwhile Bombay State only after the enactment of the Bombay States Reorganisation Act, 1956. The reason apparently is that even on the assumption that the Maharashtra Legislature could not have validly enacted retrospective legislation with regard to Parbhani District, the Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 as amended by Act III of 1954 was in force at the time when the notification was made in May, 1957 pursuant to which proceedings were taken which were challenged by the appellants. As regards the decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Inamdars of Sulkanagar and others v. Government of Andhra Pradesh and others,² by which the Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 was struck down as not having received the assent of the President under Article 31 (3) the position taken up in the writ petition was that such assent had been given to it on 3rd April, 1958 and till then the said Act was not valid and operative. According to the judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court, Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 had never been assented to by the President although it had received the assent of the Rajpramukh of the erstwhile Hyderabad State. Now the question of lack of assent of the President was never pressed before the High Court, nor have we been invited to examine it. We would, however, like to observe that, as noticed before, when Hyderabad Amending Act III of 1954 was enacted the assent of the President was duly obtained. Similarly when Bombay Act XXXII of 1958 which was meant for amending Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950 was enacted the assent of the President had been given. If the assent of the President had been accorded to the amending Acts, it would be difficult to hold that the President had never assented to the parent Act, namely, Hyderabad Act XXI of 1950. Even if such assent had not been accorded earlier it must be taken to have been granted when Amending Act II of 1954 was assented to.

For the above reasons this appeal is dismissed, there will be no order as to costs.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J. M. SHELAT, V. BHARGAVA AND C.A. VAIDIALINGAM, JJ.

The Co-operative Central Bank Ltd., and others, etc. .. Appellants*

v.

The Additional Industrial Tribunal, Andhra Pradesh,
Hyderabad and others, etc. .. Respondents.

The Andhra Pradesh Co-operative Societies Act (VII of 1964), sections 16 (5), 61 and 62—Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947), section 10 (1) (d)—Dispute between Co-operative Central Bank and their workmen relating to number of service conditions viz., Salary and allowances etc.—Jurisdiction of Registrar to decide under section 61—Reference to Industrial Tribunal by the Government—Validity of.

The Andhra Pradesh Co-operative Societies Act (VII of 1964) and Industrial Disputes Act (XIV of 1947)—Service conditions subject matter of bye-laws—Bye-laws, whether law or have the force of law—Scope of Bye-laws—Competency of Industrial Tribunal to alter or vary, bye-law in granting relief.

The interpretation already placed by this Court, in Civil Appeal No. 358 of 1967, on the provisions of section 91 (1) of the Maharashtra Act XXXII of 1961 is fully applicable to the provisions of section 61 of the Andhra Pradesh Co-operatives Societies Act VII of 1964. In deciding these appeals, one must proceed on the basis that section 61 of the Act requires reference of a dispute to the Registrar only if the dispute is capable of being resolved by the Registrar or his nominee and further, the dispute between the co-operative society and the employee touches the business of the society in the sense explained by this Court in that case.

Held, the dispute covered by the first issue referred to the, Industrial Tribunal could not possibly be referred for decision to the Registrar under section 61 of the Act. The dispute related to alteration of a number of conditions of service of the workmen which relief could only be granted by an industrial tribunal dealing with an industrial dispute. The Registrar could not possibly have granted the reliefs claimed under this issue because of the limitations placed on his powers in the Act itself. It is true that section 61 by itself does not contain any clear indication that the Registrar cannot entertain a dispute relating to alteration of conditions of service of the employee of a registered society; but the meaning given to the expressions "touching the business of the society" makes it very doubtful whether a dispute in respect of alteration of conditions of service can be held to be covered by this expression. Since the word "business" is equated with the actual trading or commercial or other similar business activity of the society, and since it has been held that it would be difficult to subscribe to the proposition that whatever the society does or is necessarily required to do for the purpose of carrying out its objects, such as laying down the conditions of service of its employees, can be said to be part of its business, it would appear that a dispute relating to conditions of service of the workmen employed by the society cannot be held to be a dispute touching the business of the society. The position is clarified by the provisions of sub-section (4) of section 62 of the Act which limit the power to be exercised by the Registrar, when dealing with a dispute referred to him under section 61; by a mandate that he shall decide the dispute in accordance with the provisions of the Act and the rules and bye-laws. The provisions of the Act, the rules and the bye laws could not possibly permit the Registrar to change conditions of service of the workmen employed by the society. In respect of the dispute relating to the alteration of various conditions of service, the Registrar or other person dealing with it under section 62 of the Act is not competent to grant the relief claimed by the workmen at all. This dispute is not a dispute covered by the provisions of section 61 of the Act. Such a dispute is not contemplated to be dealt with under section 62 of the Act and must be held to be outside the scope of section 61.

The bye-laws of a co-operative society framed in pursuance of the provisions of the Act cannot be held to be law or to have force of law. It has no doubt been held that, if a statute gives power to a Government or other authority to make rules the rules so framed have the force of statute and are deemed to be incorporated as a part of the statute. That principle, however, does not apply to bye-laws of the nature that a co-operative society is empowered by the Act to make. The bye-laws that are contemplated by the Act can be merely those which govern the internal management, business or administration of a society. They may be binding between the persons affected by them, but they do not have the force of a statute. In respect of bye-laws laying down conditions of service of the employees of the society, the bye-laws would be binding between the society and the employees just in the same manner as conditions of service laid down by contract between the parties. After such bye-laws laying down the conditions of service are made and any person enters the employment of a society those conditions of service will have to be treated as conditions accepted by the employees when entering the service and will thus bind him like conditions of service specially forming part of the contract of service. The bye-laws that can be framed by a society under the Act are similar in nature to the Articles of Association of a company incorporated under the Companies Act and such articles of association have never been held to have the force of law. The jurisdiction which is granted to industrial tribunals by the Industrial Disputes Act is not the jurisdiction of merely administering the existing laws and enforcing existing contracts. Industrial tribunals have the right even to vary contracts of service between the employer and the employees which jurisdiction can never be exercised by a civil Court or a Registrar acting under the Co-operative Societies Act, so that the circumstance that, in granting relief on the various service conditions the Tribunal will have to vary the special bye-laws framed by the Co-operative Bank does not lead to the inference that the tribunal would be incompetent to grant the reliefs sought in this reference. The reliefs could only be granted by the Industrial Tribunal and could not fall within the scope of the powers of the Registrar dealing with a dispute under section 61 of the Act.

The provisions of section 16 (5) of the Act is irrelevant when considering the scope of the jurisdiction of the Registrar under section 61 of the Act. The Registrar could not have granted relief under section 16 (5) of the Act.

Appeals from the Judgment and Order dated the 5th August, 1968 of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Writ Petitions Nos. 2339 and 2742 of 1968.

G. B. Agarwala, Senior Advocate (K. Srinivasa Murthy, B. P. Singh and Naunit Lal, Advocates, with him, for the Appellants (In both).

A. S. R. Chari and M. K. Ramamurthi, Senior Advocates (Mrs. S. Pappu, Madan Mohan J. Ramamurthi, Vineet Kumar, P. S. Khera and Miss Bindra Thakur, Advocates, with them), for Respondent No. 2 (in both).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bhargava, J.—An industrial dispute arose between 25 Co-operative Central Banks in the State of Andhra Pradesh and their workmen represented by the Andhra Pradesh Bank Employees Federation, Hyderabad, which was referred by the Government of Andhra Pradesh to the Industrial Tribunal, Hyderabad, under section 10 (1) (d) of the Industrial Disputes Act No. XIV of 1947. The subject-matter of the dispute was divided into three issues. The first issue comprised a number of service conditions, viz., (1) Salary Scale and Adjustments (2) Dearness Allowance (3) Special Allowances (4) other Allowances (5) Uniforms and Washing Allowances for subordinate staff (6) Conveyance Charges (7) Provident Fund and Gratuity (8) Leave Rules (9) Joining Time on transfer, (10) Rules relating to departmental enquiry against employees for misconduct (11) Probationary Period and Confirmation (12) Working Hours and Overtime Allowance. (13) Age of Retirement, (14) Security, (15) Common Good Fund, (16) Service Conditions and (17) Promotions. The second and the third issues both related to the question whether the transfers of some employees of two of the Banks, The Vijayawada Co-operative Central Bank Ltd., Vijayawada, and The Vizianagaram Co-operative Central Bank Ltd., Vizianagaram, were justified and, if not to what reliefs were the employees entitled. Before the Industrial Tribunal, one of the grounds raised on behalf of the banks was that the reference of the disputes to the Tribunal was invalid, because such disputes were required to be referred for decision to the Registrar of the Co-operative Societies under section 61 of the Andhra Pradesh Co-operative Societies Act No. VII of 1964 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") and the effect of the provisions of the Act was to exclude the jurisdiction of the Industrial Tribunals to deal with the same disputes under the Industrial Disputes Act. Various other pleas were also taken by the banks in resisting the claims of the workmen, but in these appeals, we are not concerned with them, because the Tribunal dealt with the point, mentioned by us above, as a preliminary issue and rejected the contention of the banks. Twenty-four of the banks thereupon challenged the preliminary decision of the Tribunal on this question, treating it as a preliminary award, by filing two Writ Petitions Nos. 2339 and 2742 of 1968 under Article 226 of the Constitution in the High Court of Andhra Pradesh. The High Court also rejected the plea of the Banks. These two appeals have been brought up before us by certificate against the orders of the High Court dismissing the two writ petitions. In Civil Appeal No. 2093 of 1968, the appellants are 10 banks who were petitioners before the High Court in Writ Petition No. 2339 of 1968, while 2 of the petitioner-banks in that writ petition have been impleaded as respondents. In Civil Appeal No. 2094 of 1968, the appellants are also 10 banks who had joined in filing the other Writ Petition No. 2742 of 1968 in the High Court, while one of the petitioner-banks in that writ petition has been impleaded as respondent, and another has not joined the appeal as a party. In these appeals, therefore we are only concerned with one single question as to whether the jurisdiction of the Industrial Tribunal to adjudicate on the industrial dispute referred to it under section 10 (1) (d) of the Industrial Disputes Act was barred by the provisions of section 61 of the Act.

The Tribunal, and the High Court in rejecting the plea taken on behalf of the banks, expressed the view that the disputes actually referred to the Tribunal were, not capable of being decided by the Registrar of the Co-operative Societies under section 61 of the Act and, consequently, the reference to the Industrial Tribunal under the Industrial Disputes Act was competent. Learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the banks took us through the provisions of the Act to indicate that, besides being a local and special Act, it is a self contained Act enacted for the purpose of successful working of co-operative societies, including co-operative banks, and there are provisions in the Act which clearly exclude the applicability of other laws if they happen to be in conflict with the provisions of the Act. It is no doubt true that the Act is an enactment passed by State Legislature which received the assent of the President, so that, if any provision of a Central Act, including the Industrial Disputes Act, is repugnant to any provision of the Act, the provision of the Act will prevail and not the provision of the Central Industrial Disputes Act. The general proposition urged that the jurisdiction of the Industrial Tribunal under the Industrial Disputes Act will be barred if the disputes in question can be competently decided by the Registrar under section 61 of the Act is, therefore, correct and has to be accepted. The question, however, that has to be examined is whether the industrial dispute referred to the Tribunal in the present cases was such as was required to be referred to the Registrar and to be decided by him under section 61 of the Act.

In order to properly appreciate the submissions which have been made on behalf of the banks, by their Counsel, it is necessary to set out the provisions of sections 16, 61, 62 and 133 of the Act which are as follows :—

“ 16. Amendment of bye-laws of a society :—(1) No amendment of any bye-law of a society shall be valid unless such amendment has been registered under this Act. Where such an amendment is not expressed to come into operation on a particular day, then, it shall come into force on the day on which it is registered.

(2) Every proposal for such amendment shall be forwarded to the Registrar who shall, if he is satisfied that the proposed amendment fulfils the conditions specified in sub-section (1) of section 7, register the amendment within a period of sixty days from the date of receipt of such proposals :

Provided that the Government may, for sufficient cause which shall be recorded in writing, extend the said period for a further period of sixty days.

(3) The Registrar shall forward to the society a copy of the registered amendment together with a certificate signed and sealed by him, and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence that the amendment has been duly registered.

(4) Where the Registrar is not so satisfied, he shall communicate by registered post the order of refusal together with the reasons therefor, to the society within the period specified in sub-section (2).

(5) If in the opinion of the Registrar, an amendment of the bye-laws of a society is necessary or desirable in the interest of such society or of the co-operative movement, he may, in the manner prescribed, call upon the society, to make any amendment within such time as he may specify. If the society fails to make such an amendment within the time so specified the Registrar may, after giving the society an opportunity of making its representation, register such amendment and forward to the society by registered post a copy of the amendment together with a certificate signed by him ; such a certificate shall be conclusive evidence that the amendment has been duly registered ; and such an amendment shall have the same effect as an amendment of any bye-law made by the society.

61. Disputes which may be referred to the Registrar :—

(1) Notwithstanding anything in any law for the time being in force, if any dispute touching the constitution, management or the business of a society, other than a dispute regarding disciplinary action taken by the society or its committee against a paid employee of the society, arises—

(a) among members, past members and persons claiming through member, past members and deceased members ; or

(b) between a member, past member or person claiming through a member past member or deceased member and the society, its committee or any officer, agent or employee of the society ; or

(c) between the society or its committee and any past committee, any officer agent or employee, or any past officer, past agent or past employee or the nominee, heir or legal representative of any deceased officer, deceased agent, or deceased employee of the society; or

(d) between the society and any other society;

such dispute shall be referred to the Registrar for decision.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this sub-section a dispute shall include—

(i) a claim by a society for any debt or other amount due to it from a member past member or the nominee, heir or legal representative of a deceased member, whether such debt or other amount be admitted or not;

(ii) a claim by a surety against the principal debtor where the society has recovered from the surety any amount in respect of any debt or other amount due to it from the principal debtor as a result of the default of the principal debtor whether such debt or other amount due be admitted or not;

(iii) a claim by a society against a member, past member or the nominee, heir or legal representative of a deceased member for the delivery of possession to the society of land or other immovable property resumed by it for breach of the conditions of assignment or allotment of such land or other immovable property.

(2) If any question arises whether a dispute referred to the Registrar under this section is a dispute touching the constitution, management or the business of a society, such question shall be decided by the Registrar.

(3) (a) Every dispute relating to, or in connection with, any election to a committee of a society referred to in clause (a) of sub-section (3) of section 31, shall be referred for decision to a Subordinate Judge or where there is no Subordinate Judge, to the District Judge having jurisdiction over the place where the main office of the society is situated, whose decision thereon shall be final.

(b) Every dispute relating to or in connection with any election to a committee of such class of societies as may, by notification in the Andhra Pradesh Gazette, be specified by the Government in this behalf and referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (3) of section 31, shall be referred for decision to a District Munsif having jurisdiction over the place where the main office of the society is situated, and his decision thereon shall be final.

(4) Every dispute relating to, or in connection with, any election to a committee shall be referred under sub-section (1) of sub-section (3) only after the date of declaration of the result of such election.

62. Action to be taken by the Registrar on such reference :—

(1) The Registrar may, on receipt of the reference of a dispute under section 61,—

(a) elect to decide the dispute himself; or

(b) transfer it for disposal to any person who has been invested by the Government with powers in that behalf; or

(c) refer it for disposal to an arbitrator.

(2) Where the reference relates to any dispute involving immovable property, the Registrar or such person or arbitrator, may order that any person be joined as a party who has acquired any interest in such property subsequent to the acquisition of interest therein by a party to the reference and any decision that may be passed on the reference by the Registrar, or the person or the arbitrator aforesaid, shall be binding on the party so joined as if he were an original party to the reference.

(3) The Registrar may, by order for reasons to be recorded therein, withdraw any reference transferred under clause (b) of sub-section (1) or referred under clause

(c) of that sub-section and may elect to decide the dispute himself or transfer it to any other person under clause (b) of sub-section (1) or refer it to any other arbitrator under clause (c) of that sub-section.

(4) The Registrar, such person or arbitrator shall decide the dispute in accordance with the provisions of this Act and the rules and bye-laws and such decision shall, subject to the provisions of section 76, be final. Pending final decision on the dispute, the Registrar, such person or arbitrator, as the case may be, may make such interlocutory orders as he may deem necessary in the interests of justice.

133. Act to override other laws:—"The provisions of this Act shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law."

Reliance was placed on the non-obstante clause "Notwithstanding anything in any law for the time being in force" occurring in section 61 of the Act which has the effect that a dispute covered by this section must necessarily be referred to the Registrar for decision, so that it cannot be referred to any other authority under any other law. Further strength is sought in support of this proposition from the provisions of section 133 of the Act which clearly lays down that the provisions of the Act have overriding effect if there be any provision in any other law inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. Then, it was argued that the language of section 61 of the Act is wide enough to cover the disputes referred to the Tribunal in these cases, because the disputes are between co-operative societies and their employees and they touch the business of the co-operative societies. In support of this submission, learned Counsel referred us to a number of decisions of various High Courts in which the scope of the provisions contained in section 61 of the Act or of similar provisions in other local enactments was considered. Most of those decisions were concerned with laying down the meaning of the expression "touching the business of the society" so as to include within its scope disputes of different nature between the co-operative societies and their employees. The cases which have been brought to our notice are:

(1) a decision of a learned single Judge of the Bombay High Court in *G.I.P. Railway Employees Co-operative Bank Ltd. v. Bhikhaji Merwanji Karanjia—Employee*¹. In which a similar provision contained in section 54 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act VII of 1925 was interpreted;

(2) a decision in *Sagar Motor Transport Karamchari Union, Sagar v. Amar Kamgar Passenger Transport Company Co-operative Society, Sagar and another*², where the Madhya Pradesh High Court interpreted section 55 (2) of the Madhya Pradesh Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 which required a dispute regarding terms of employment, working conditions and disciplinary action taken by a society, arising between a society and its employees, to be decided by the Registrar or any officer appointed by him;

(3) a decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in *M.S. Madhava Rao and others v. D.V. K. Surya Rao, Member of the Pithapuram Co-operative Bank, Pithapuram and others*³, in which section 51 of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act VI of 1932, which was very similar to section 61 of the Act, was interpreted; and

(4) a decision of a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in *Farkhw deli Nannhay v. Potdar (F.B.)*⁴, in which also section 54 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act VII of 1925 came up for interpretation.

Learned Counsel for the appellants also brought to our notice a decision of a single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in *Co-operative Milk Societies Union, Ltd. v. State of West Bengal and others*⁵, where a dispute as to wages, wage-scales and dearness allowance was held not to be a dispute within the meaning of that word as defined in the Bengal Co-operative Societies Act, 1940, and sought to distinguish it on the ground that the decision in that case turned on the meaning specially given in that Act to the word "dispute".

It appears to us that it is not necessary to examine in detail the reasons given by the High Courts in the above-cited cases for the interpretation placed by them on provisions similar to section 61 of the Act in view of a very recent decision of this Court in *The Deccan Merchants Co-operative Bank Ltd. v. Messrs. Dalchand Jugraj Jain and others*¹. In that case, this Court had to interpret section 91 of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 (Maharashtra Act XXXII of 1961), the relevant provision of which is reproduced below :—

"91 (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, any dispute touching the constitution, elections of the office bearers, conduct of general meetings, management or business of a society shall be referred by any of the parties to the dispute, or by a federal society to which the society is affiliated, or by a creditor of the society, to the Registrar, if both the parties thereto are one or other of the following :—

(a) a society, its committee, any past committee, any past or present officer, any past or present agent, any past or present servant or nominee, heir or legal representative of any deceased officer, deceased agent or deceased servant of the society, or the Liquidator of the society ;

One of the questions which the Court formulated as requiring an answer was : what is the meaning of the expression "touching the business of the society"? In order to decide this question, the Court analysed the provisions of section 91 (1) and held:

"Five kinds of disputes are mentioned in sub-section (1); first, disputes touching the constitution of a society; secondly, disputes touching election of the office-bearers of a society; thirdly, disputes touching the conduct of general meetings of a society; fourthly, disputes touching the management of a society; and fifthly, disputes touching the business of a society. It is clear that the word "business" in this context does not mean affairs of a society because election of office-bearers, conduct of general meetings and management of a society would be treated as affairs of a society. In this sub-section the word "business" has been used in a narrower sense and it means the actual trading or commercial or other similar business activity of the society which the society is authorised to enter into under the Act and the Rules and its bye-laws".

In that case, this Court was concerned with the question whether a dispute touching the assets of a society was a dispute touching the business of the society, and it was in that context that the interpretation mentioned above was given by this Court. In considering the full scope of section 91 (1) of the Maharashtra Act XXXII of 1961, the Court further proceeded to hold :—

"While we agree that the nature of business which a society does can be ascertained from the objects of the society, it is difficult to subscribe to the proposition that whatever the society does or is necessarily required to do for the purpose of carrying out its objects can be said to be part of its business. We, however, agree that the word "touching" is very wide and would include any matter which relates to or concerns the business of a society, but we are doubtful whether the word "affects" should also be used in defining the scope of the word "touching".

This comment was made when taking notice of the decision of the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in *Farkhunda v. Potdar*¹. The Court also held :—

“ One other limitation on the word “ dispute ” may also be placed and that is that the word “ dispute ” covers only those disputes which are capable of being resolved by the Registrar or his nominee.”

Considering the similarity between section 61 of the Act and section 91 (1) of the Maharashtra Act XXXII of 1961, we are of the opinion that the interpretation already placed by this Court on the provisions of section 91 (1) of the Maharashtra Act XXXII of 1961 is fully applicable to the provisions of section 61 of the Act with which we are concerned. Consequently, in deciding these appeals, we must proceed on the basis that section 61 of the Act requires reference of a dispute to the Registrar only if the dispute is capable of being resolved by the Registrar or his nominee, and further, the dispute between the co-operative society and the employee touches the business of the society in the sense explained by this Court in that case.

Applying these tests, we have no doubt at all that the dispute covered by the first issue referred to the Industrial Tribunal in the present cases could not possibly be referred for decision to the Registrar under section 61 of the Act. The dispute related to alteration of a number of conditions of service of the workmen which relief could only be granted by an Industrial Tribunal dealing with an industrial dispute. The Registrar, it is clear from the provisions of the Act, could not possibly have granted the reliefs claimed under this issue because of the limitations placed on his powers in the Act itself. It is true that section 61 by itself does not contain any clear indication that the Registrar cannot entertain a dispute relating to alteration of conditions of service of the employees of a registered society ; but the meaning given to the expression “ touching the business of the society ”, in our opinion, makes it very doubtful whether a dispute in respect of alteration of conditions of service can be held to be covered by this expression. Since the word “ business ” is equated with the actual trading or commercial or other similar business activity of the society, and since it has been held that it would be difficult to subscribe to the proposition that whatever the society does or is necessarily required to do for the purpose of carrying out its objects, such as laying down the conditions of service of its employees, can be said to be a part of its business, it would appear that a dispute relating to conditions of service of the workmen employed by the society cannot be held to be a dispute touching the business of the society. Further, the position is clarified by the provisions of sub-section (4) of section 62 of the Act which limit the power to be exercised by the Registrar, when dealing with a dispute referred to him under section 61 ; by a mandate that he shall decide the dispute in accordance with the provisions of the Act and the Rules and bye-laws. On the face of it, the provisions of the Act, the rules and the bye-laws could not possibly permit the Registrar to change conditions of service of the workmen employed by the society. For the purpose of bringing facts to our notice in the present appeals, the Rules framed by the Andhra Pradesh Government under the Act, and the bye-laws of one of the appellant-banks have been placed on the Paper-books of the appeals before us. It appears from them that the conditions of service of the employees of the Bank have all been laid down by framing special bye-laws. Most of the conditions of service, which the workmen want to be altered to their benefit, have thus been laid down by the bye-laws, so that any alteration in those conditions of service will necessarily require a change in the bye-laws. Such a change could not possibly be directed by the Registrar when, under section 62 (4) of the Act he is specifically required to decide the dispute referred to him in accordance with the provisions of the bye-laws. It may also be noticed that a dispute referred to the Registrar under section 61 of the Act can even be transferred for disposal to a person who may have been invested by the Government with powers in that behalf, or may be referred for disposal to an arbitrator by the Registrar. Such person or arbitrator, when deciding the dispute, will also be governed by the mandate in section 62 (4) of the Act.

so that he will also be bound to reject the claim of the workmen which is nothing else than a request for alteration of conditions of service contained in the bye-laws. It is thus clear that, in respect of the dispute relating to alteration of various conditions of service, the Registrar or other person dealing with it under section 62 of the Act is not competent to grant the relief claimed by the workmen at all. On the principle laid down by this Court in the case of *The Deccan Merchants Co-operative Bank Ltd.*¹, therefore, it must be held that this dispute is not a dispute covered by the provisions of section 61 of the Act. Such a dispute is not contemplated to be dealt with under section 62 of the Act and must, therefore, be held to be outside the scope of section 61.

In this connections, we may take notice of the view expressed by a learned single Judge of the Madras High Court in *South Arcot Co-operative Motor Transport Society, Ltd. (for ex-servicemen) v. Syed Batcha and others*², where dealing with an industrial claim, the learned Judge held :—

“Therefore, in regard to an industrial claim, like the retrenchment compensation, the remedy for the worker would be only to enforce it by the machinery created by the Industrial Disputes Act, namely, by section 10 and 33 C (2). The Madras Co-operative Societies Act being itself a special statute, the authority, acting under it, would have no jurisdiction beyond what the enactment itself conferred on him. He could not, therefore, have jurisdiction to decide a dispute under the Industrial Disputes Act.”

That decision also related to section 51 of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act, 1932, which was similar in terms to section 61 of the Act.

Learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the appellant-banks, however, urged a new point to challenge the jurisdiction of the Industrial Tribunal to deal with the dispute relating to conditions of service to the effect that the conditions of service having been made the subject matter of bye-laws, an Industrial Tribunal will not be competent to alter them, because even an Industrial Tribunal has no jurisdiction to make orders contrary to law. For this purpose, he referred us to a number of decisions of this Court in *Dalmia Cement (Bharat) Ltd., New Delhi v. Their Workmen and another*³; *The Management of Marina Hotel v. The Workmen*⁴; *Cinema Theatres v. Their Workmen*⁵; and *The Hindustan Times Ltd., New Delhi v. Their Workmen and vice versa*⁶. In all these cases, it was held that an Industrial Tribunal acted illegally in prescribing leave in excess of the number of days laid down by the Delhi Shops and Establishments Act, 1954. In section 22 of that Act there was a specific prohibition that leave for sickness or casual leave with full wages shall not exceed 12 days; and it was held that a direction made by the Tribunal granting to the workmen more than 12 days' sickness or casual leave was illegal. The principle of the decisions in these cases does not, however, appear to us to be applicable to the cases before us, because, in the present case, there is no prohibition contained in the Act that the conditions of service prescribed are not to be altered. The argument on behalf of the banks, however, was that the bye-laws, which contained the conditions of service, are themselves law, so that any direction made by an Industrial Tribunal altering a condition of service contained in a bye-law would be an order contrary to law and, hence, illegal.

We are unable to accept the submission that the bye-laws of a co-operative society framed in pursuance of the provisions of the Act can be held to be law or to have the force of law. It has no doubt been held that, if a statute gives power to a Government or other authority to make rules, the rules so framed have the force of statute and are to be deemed to be incorporated as a part of the statute. That principle, however, does not apply to bye-laws of the nature that a co-operative society is empowered by the Act to make. The bye-laws that are contemplated by the Act can be merely those which govern the internal management, business or administration of a society. They may be binding between the persons affected by them, but they do not have the force of a statute. In respect of bye-laws laying down conditions of service of the employees of a society, the bye-laws would be binding between the society and the employees just in the same manner as conditions of service laid down by contract between the parties. In fact, after such bye-laws laying down the conditions of service are made and any person enters the employment of a society those conditions of service will have to be treated as conditions accepted by the employee when entering the service and will thus bind him like conditions of service specifically forming part of the contract of service. The bye-laws that can be framed by a society under the Act are similar in nature to the Articles of Association of a Company incorporated under the Companies Act and such Articles of Association have never been held to have the force of law. In a number of cases, conditions of service for industries are laid down by Standing Orders certified under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, 1964 and it has been held that, though such Standing Orders are binding between the employers and the employees of the industry governed by these Standing Orders, they do not have such force of law as to be binding on Industrial Tribunal adjudicating an industrial dispute. The jurisdiction which is granted to Industrial Tribunal by the Industrial Disputes Act is not the jurisdiction of merely administering the existing laws and enforcing existing contracts. Industrial Tribunals have the right even to vary contracts of service between the employer and the employees which jurisdiction can never be exercised by a civil Court or a Registrar acting under the Co-operative Societies Act, so that the circumstance that, in granting relief on issue No. 1, the Tribunal will have to vary the special bye-laws framed by the Co-operative Bank does not lead to the inference that the Tribunal would be incompetent to grant the reliefs sought in this reference. In fact, the reliefs could only be granted by the Industrial Tribunal and could not fall within the scope of the powers of the Registrar dealing with a dispute under section 61 of the Act.

We may also, in this connection, take notice of the submission made by learned Counsel that the Registrar could have granted relief under section 16 (5) of the Act if he thought that it was advisable to grant that relief to the workmen. In our opinion, this submission must be rejected for two reasons. The first reason is that action taken by the Registrar under section 16 (5) of the Act will not be a decision on a dispute referred to him under section 61 of the Act. When dealing with the dispute under section 61 of the Act, the Registrar is bound to decide the dispute in accordance with the existing bye-laws, so that, if the dispute relates to alteration of conditions of service laid down in the bye-laws, he will be incompetent to grant the relief claimed. It is also to be noticed that a dispute referred to a Registrar under section 6 of the Act may be transferred for disposal to a person who has been invested by the Government with powers in that behalf, or may be referred for disposal to an arbitrator. On the face of it, such person or arbitrator cannot possibly exercise the powers of the Registrar under section 16 (5) of the Act. The second reason is that, under section 16 (5) of the Act, the power given to the Registrar to propose amendments in the bye-laws and to enforce them if the proposal is not accepted by a society is to be exercised only when the Registrar is of the opinion that it is necessary or desirable to do so in the interests of such society or of the co-operative movement. Amendments in bye laws under section 16 (5) of the Act are not contemplated in the interests of the workmen or for the purpose of resolving industrial disputes. The provisions of section 16 (5) of the Act thus appear to us to be irrelevant when considering the scope of the jurisdiction of the Registrar under section 16 of the Act. Consequently, the decision of the High Court holding that the Tribunal had jurisdiction to deal with the industrial dispute referred to it must be upheld.

We may also take notice of an argument advanced at the last stage by learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the banks that, in any case matters covered by issues Nos. 2 and 3 referred to the Tribunal could have been competently decided by the Registrar, and the reference in respect of those two issues at least should be held to be incompetent. We do not think that at this stage there is any need for us to decide this question, because such a point was not raised at all in the petitions filed under Article 226 of the Constitution before the High Court. In those petitions, the competence of the reference to the Industrial Tribunal as a whole was challenged on the ground that it was barred because of the jurisdiction of the Registrar to deal with the dispute under section 61 of the Act. Consequently, we need not deal with the question whether a particular issue forming part of the reference has been competently referred or not.

Attorney-General for India (By notice).

Constitution of India (1950), Article 246, Schedule VII, List I, Entry 3, List II, Entry 18, and List III, Entries 6, 7 and 13 and West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act (XII of 1956)—Cantonment area—Extension of State Act to cantonment area by State Government—Whether ultra vires—Power of Parliament to legislate in respect of house accommodation in cantonment area—Whether limited to military purposes alone—Extension of power of Parliament to regulate the relationship between landlord and tenant—Scope of.

Words and Phrases—"regulation".

In the entry, where power is granted to Parliament to make laws for the regulation of house accommodation in cantonment areas, there are no qualifying words to indicate that the house accommodation must be accommodation required for military purposes, or must be accommodation that has already been acquired, requisitioned or allotted to the military. If a legislation in respect of any cantonment was to be undertaken by Parliament for the first time under this entry, there would be, at the time of that legislation, no house in the cantonment already acquired, requisitioned or allotted for military purposes, and, if the interpretation sought to be put on behalf of the appellant were accepted, the power to pass laws cannot be exercised by Parliament at all. In the entry, various items, which can be the subject matter of legislation by Parliament are mentioned separately and in none of these clauses there is any specification that the legislation is to be confined to areas or accommodation required for military purposes. When legislating in respect of local self Government in cantonment areas, it is obvious that Parliament will have to legislate for the entire cantonment area including portions of it which may be in possession of civilians and not military authorities, or military officers. Similarly, the powers of the cantonment authorities which could be granted by legislation by Parliament, cannot be confined to those areas or buildings which are in actual possession of military authorities or officers and must be in respect of the entire cantonment area including those buildings and lands which may be in actual ownership as well as occupation of civilians. There is no reason to narrow down the scope of legislation or regulation of house accommodation and confine it to houses which are required or are actually in possession of military authorities or military officers. The power to regulate house accommodation by law must extend to all house accommodation in the cantonment area irrespective of its being owned by or in the possession of, civilians. If a law were to be made for the first time under this entry, all houses would be either vacant or occupied by owners or occupied by tenants of owners under private agreements and the law, when first made, will have to govern such houses. The scope of the expression "regulation of house accommodation" in this entry, cannot, therefore be confined as urged on behalf of the appellant.

The word "regulation" cannot be so narrowly interpreted as to be confined to allotment only and not to other incidents, such as termination of existing tenancies and eviction of persons in possession of the house accommodation. This entry gives the power to Parliament to pass legislation for the purpose of directing or controlling all house accommodation in cantonment areas. This power to direct or control will include within it all aspects as to who is to make the constructions under what conditions the constructions can be altered, who is to occupy the accommodation and for how long, on what terms it is to be occupied, when and under what circumstances the occupant is to cease to occupy it, and the manner in which the accommodation is to be utilised. All these are ingredients of regulation of house accommodation and there is no reason to hold that the word "regulation" has not been used in this wide sense in the entry. Parliament was given the exclusive power to legislate in respect of house accommodation in cantonment areas for regulating the accommodation in all its aspects.

Whenever any legislation is passed relating to control of rents, that legislation can be effective and can serve its purpose only if it also regulates eviction of tenants. Consequently, when in Entry 3 of List I, the power is granted to Parliament specifically to legislate as control of rents, that power cannot be effectively exercised unless it is held that Parliament also has the power to regulate eviction of tenants whose rents are to be controlled. Such power must be necessarily read in the expression "regulation of house accommodation". It has to be remembered that this power reserved for Parliament is to be exercised in respect of house accommodation situated in cantonment areas only and not other areas the legislative power in respect of which is governed by entries either in List II or in List III. This view is also borne out by the historical background provided by the legislation relating to cantonments and house accommodation in cantonments in India.

The relationship of landlord and tenant in respect of house accommodation situated in cantonment areas is clearly covered by the entries in List I of the Constitution. The effect of Entry 3 of List I is that Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to the matters contained in that Entry, notwithstanding the fact that a similar power may also be found in any Entry in List II or List III. Article 246 of the Constitution confers exclusive power on Parliament to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List I, notwithstanding the concurrent power of Parliament and the State Legislative or the exclusive power of the State Legislative in Lists II and III respectively. The general power legislating in respect of relationship between landlord and tenant exercisable by a State Legislature either under Entry 18 of List II or Entries 6 and 7 of List III is subject to the overriding power of Parliament in respect of matters in List I, so that the effect of Entry 3 of List I is that, on the subject of relationship between landlord and tenant in so far as it arises in respect of house accommodation situated in cantonment areas, Parliament alone can legislate and not the State Legislatures. No anomaly arises in holding that the exclusive power of Parliament for regulation of house accommodation including control of rents in cantonment areas has the effect of making the legislative powers conferred by Lists II and III subject to this power of Parliament.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bhargava, J.—Rama Sundari Debi, the first respondent in this appeal by Special Leave, instituted a suit for the ejectment of Indu Bhusan Bose appellant who was a tenant in premises No. 18, Riverside Road, owned by respondent No. 1, situated within the cantonment area of Barrackpore. The agreed rent was Rs. 250 per mensem ; but there was a dispute as to whether the owner or the tenant was liable to pay rates and taxes. On an application presented by the appellant, the Rent Controller fixed fair rent under section 60 of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act No. XII of 1956 (hereinafter referred to as “the Act”) at Rs. 170 per month inclusive of all cantonment taxes, and, in appeal, the amount was enhanced to Rs. 188 per month inclusive of all cantonment taxes. Respondent No. 1, in December, 1960, served a notice on the appellant to quit and, on failing to get vacant possession, filed a suit in the Court of the Munsif. In the plaint, respondent No. 1 claimed that, regulation of house accommodation including control of rents, being a subject in Entry No. 3 of List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution, the State Legislature could not competently enact a law on the same subject for cantonment areas, so that the appellant was not entitled to protection under the Act which had been extended to that area by the State Government. It was urged that the extension of that State Act to the cantonment area was ultra vires and void. The Munsif, thereupon, made a reference under section 113 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the High Court of Calcutta for decision of this constitutional question raised in the suit before him. The High Court decided the reference by making a declaration that the notification, whereby the State Government had extended the provisions of the Act to the Barrackpore cantonment area, was ultra vires and void. This is the decision of the High Court that has been challenged in this appeal.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that the High Court is not correct in holding that the filed of Legislation covered by the Act, which is primarily concerned with control of rents and eviction of tenants, is included within the expression “regulation of house accommodation in cantonment areas” used in entry No. 3 of List I. That entry is as follows :—

“3. Delimitation of cantonment areas, local self-government in such areas, the constitution and powers within such areas of cantonment authorities and the regulation of house accommodation (including the control of rents) in such areas.”

The submission made is that regulation of house accommodation will not include within it laws or rules on the subject of relationship of landlord and tenant of buildings situated in the cantonment areas. On the other hand, according to the appellant, legislation on this subject can be made either under Entry No. 18 of List II, or Entries Nos. 6, 7 and 13 of List III, so that a State Legislature is competent to legislate and regulate relationship between landlord and tenant even in cantonment areas. These relevant entries are reproduced below :—

“ List II

18. Land, that is to say, rights in or over land, land tenures including the relation of landlord and tenant, and the collection of rents ; transfer and alienation of agricultural land ; land improvement and agricultural loans ; colonization”.

“ List III

6. Transfer of property other than agricultural land ; registration of deeds and documents.

7. Contracts, including partnership, agency, contracts of carriage, and other special forms of contracts, but not including contracts relating to agricultural land.

13. Civil Procedure, including all matters included in the Code of Civil Procedure at the commencement of this Constitution, limitation and arbitration.”

On the scope of Entry 3 of List I, the argument advanced is that Parliament is empowered to legislate in respect of house accommodation situated in cantonment areas only to the extent that that house accommodation is needed for military purposes and laws are required for requisitioning or otherwise obtaining possession of that accommodation for such purposes. In the alternative, the submission made is that regulation of house accommodation by parliamentary law should be confined to houses acquired, requisitioned or allotted for military purposes. This Entry 3, according to the appellant, should not be read as giving Parliament the power to legislate on the relationship of landlord and tenant in respect of houses situated in cantonment areas if such houses are let out privately by a private owner to his tenant and have nothing at all to do with the requirements of the military. We are unable to accept this submission. The language of the entry itself does not justify any such interpretation. In the entry when power is granted to Parliament to make laws for the regulation of house accommodation in cantonment areas, there are no qualifying words to indicate that the house accommodation, which is to be subject to such legislation, must be accommodation required for military purposes, or must be accommodation that has already been acquired, requisitioned or allotted to the military. In fact, if a legislation in respect of any cantonment was to be undertaken by Parliament for the first time under this entry, there would be, at the time of that legislation, no house in the cantonment already acquired, requisitioned or allotted for military purposes ; and, if the interpretation sought to be put on behalf of the appellant were accepted, the power of Parliament to pass laws cannot be exercised by Parliament at all. It is also significant that, in the entry, various items, which can be the subject-matter of legislation by Parliament, are mentioned separately, and these are :—

- (i) Delimitation of cantonment areas ;
 - (ii) local self-government in such areas ;
 - (iii) the constitution and powers within such areas of cantonment authorities;
- and
- (iv) the regulation of house accommodation (including the control of rents) in such areas.

In none of these clauses there is any specification that the legislation is to be confined to areas or accommodation required for military purposes. When legislating in respect of local self-government in cantonment areas, it is obvious that parliament will have to legislate for the entire cantonment area including portions of it which may be in possession of civilians and not military authorities or military officers. Similarly, the powers of the cantonment authorities, which could be granted by legislation by Parliament, cannot be confined to those areas or buildings which are in actual possession of military authorities or officers and must be in respect of the entire cantonment area including those buildings and lands which may be in actual ownership as well as occupation of civilians. In these circumstances, there is no reason to narrow down the scope of legislation on regulation of house accommodation and confine it to houses which are required or are actually in possession of military authorities or military officers. The power to regulate house accommodation by law must extend to all house accommodation in the cantonment area irrespective of its being owned by, or in the possession of, civilians. In fact, if a law were to be made for the first time under this entry, all the houses would be either vacant or occupied by owners or occupied by tenants of owners under private agreements and the law, when first made, will have to govern such houses. The scope of the expression "regulation of house accommodation" in this entry cannot, therefore, be confined as urged on behalf of the appellant.

It is, in the alternative, contended that, even if the expression "regulation of house accommodation" in this entry includes regulation of houses in private occupation, it should not be interpreted as giving Parliament the power even to legislate for eviction of tenants who may have occupied the houses under private arrangement with the owners. It should be confined to legislation for the purpose of obtaining possession and allotment of such accommodation to military authorities or military officers. We cannot accept that the word "regulation" can be so narrowly interpreted as to be confined to allotment only and not to other incidents such as termination of existing tenancies and eviction of persons in possession of the house accommodation. The dictionary meaning of the word "regulation" in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary is "the act of regulating" and the word "regulate" is given the meaning "to control, govern or direct by rule or regulation". This entry, thus, gives the power to Parliament to pass legislation for the purpose of directing or controlling all house accommodation in cantonment areas. Clearly, this power to direct or control will include within it all aspects as to who is to make the constructions under what conditions the constructions can be altered, who is to occupy the accommodation and for how long, on what terms it is to be occupied, when and under what circumstances the occupant is to cease to occupy it, and the manner in which the accommodation is to be utilised. All these are ingredients of regulation of house accommodation and we see no reason to hold that this word "regulation" has not been used in this wide sense in this entry.

It appears that, in the Government of India Act, 1935, the corresponding Entry No. 2 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to that Act was similar to this Entry No. 3 of List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution, but the expression "including control of rents" which is now in Entry No. 3 of List I within brackets did not exist. An argument was sought to be built on it that regulation of house accommodation was not intended to cover control of rents when that expression was used in the corresponding entry in the Government of India Act, and that this expression used in the Constitution should also be interpreted to cover the same field, so that, but for the addition made within brackets, Parliament could not have legislated for control of rents of house accommodation within cantonment areas. It is further urged that, if the expression "regulation of house accommodation" is interpreted as not including within it regulation or control of rents, it should also be held that it will not include regulation of eviction of private tenants. This argument is based on the premise that the words "including control of rents" was introduced in Entry 3 of List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution for the purpose of enlarging the scope of the legislative authority of Parliament and making it wider than that of the Federal Legislature under the Government of India Act. Such an assumption is not necessarily justified. It may be that the words "including the control of rents" were introduced by way of abundant caution or to clarify that the regulation of house accommodation is wide enough to include control of rents. The addition may have been made so as to concentrate attention on the fact that legislation was needed for control of rents in the situation that existed at the time when the Constitution was passed by the Constituent Assembly. It has to be remembered that cantonments are intended to be and are, in fact, military enclaves and regulation of occupation of house accommodation in the cantonment areas by Parliamentary law is necessary from the point of view of security of military installations in cantonments and requirements of military authorities and personnel for accommodation in such areas. Such a purpose could only be served by ensuring that Parliament could legislate in respect of house accommodation in cantonment areas in all its aspects, including regulation of grant of leases, ejectment of lessees, and ensuring that the accommodation is available on proper terms as to rents. On an interpretation of the contents of the entry itself, therefore, we are led to the conclusion that Parliament was given the exclusive power to legislate in respect of house accommodation in cantonment areas for regulating the accommodation in all its aspects.

In this connection, we may refer to three decisions which explain the object of legislation on the subject of rent control. In *Prout v. Hunter*¹, Scrutton, L.J., dealing with the legislation during the war in England, held :—

“Great public feeling was aroused by the exorbitant demands for rent that were made and the ejections for non-payment of it, with the result that Parliament passed the Rent Restriction Acts with the two-fold object, (1) of preventing the rent from being raised above the pre-war standard, and (2) of preventing tenants from being turned out of their houses even if the term for which they had originally taken them had expired.”

In *Property Holding Company Limited v. Clark*², it was held :—

“There are certain fundamental features of all the rent restriction legislation or at any rate of the legislation from 1920 to 1939. The two most important objects of policy expressed in it are (1) to protect the tenant from eviction from the house where he is living, except for defined reasons and on defined conditions ; (2) to protect him from having to pay more than fair rent. The latter object is achieved by the provisions for standard rent with (a) only permitted increases, (b) the provisions about furniture and attendance, and (c) the provisions about transfers of burdens and liabilities from the landlord to the tenant which would undermine or nullify the standard rent provisions. The result has been held to be that the Acts operate in rem upon the house and confer on the house itself the quality of ensuring to the tenant a status of irremovability. In this description of the distinguishing characteristics conferred by statute upon the house, the most salient is the tenant's security of tenure—his protection against eviction ; although the scope of the statutory policy about a fair rent must also be borne in mind, especially in connection with the provisions relating to furniture, attendance, services and board.”

In *Curl v. Angelo and another*³, Lord Greene, M.R. dealing with Rent Restrictions Act, held :—

“The Courts have had to consider what the over-riding purpose and intention of the Acts are, and I cannot put it in a more clear or authoritative way than by using the words of Scrutton, L.J. in *Skinner v. Geary*⁴, that the object was to protect the person residing in a dwelling-house from being turned out of his home.”

All these three cases clearly show that wherever any legislation is passed relating to control of rents, that legislation can be effective and can serve its purpose only if it also regulates eviction of tenants. Consequently, when in Entry 3 of List I the power is granted to Parliament specifically to legislate on control of rents, that power cannot be effectively exercised unless it is held that Parliament also has the power to regulate eviction of tenants whose rents are to be controlled. Such power must therefore, be necessarily read in the expression “regulation of house accommodation”. Of course, it has to be remembered that this power reserved for Parliament is to be exercised in respect of house accommodation situated in cantonment areas.

only and not other areas the legislative power in respect of which is governed by entries either in List II or in List III.

This view that we are taking is also borne out by the historical background provided by the legislation relating to cantonments and house accommodation in cantonments in India. Carnduff in his book on "Military and Cantonment Law in India" has indicated how the need for legislating with the object of overcoming difficulties experienced by military officers in obtaining suitable accommodation in cantonments came under consideration, and has stated :

"In the early days of the British dominion in India, the camps, stations, and posts of the field army gradually developed into cantonments, where troops were regularly garrisoned. The areas so occupied were at first set apart exclusively for the military and intended for occupation by them only ; but, by degrees, non-military persons were admitted, land was taken possession of by them, and houses were built under conditions laid down by the Government from time to time. These conditions were undoubtedly framed with the main object of rendering accommodation always primarily available for the military officers whose duties necessitated their residence within cantonment limits." (p. clxii).

He goes on to relate that a Bill which ultimately became the Cantonments Act, 1889, originally contained a set of provisions on the subject, insisting on the prior claim of military officers to occupy houses in cantonments and proposing that disputes as to the rent to be paid and the repairs to be executed should be referred to, and settled by, committees of arbitration. That part of the Bill was, however, omitted as it evoked considerable opposition and a separate measure was, consequently, taken up, but not till after many years of discussion. The new Bill was introduced in the Governor-General's Council in 1898, and was passed into law as the Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act II of 1902. The main provision in this Act was that, on the Act being applied to any cantonment, every house situated therein became liable to appropriation at any time for occupation by a military officer. It recognised the paramount claim of the military authorities to insist upon houses in cantonments being, where necessary, made primarily available for occupation by the military officers stationed therein. In addition, a provision was made in section 10 that no house in any cantonment or part of a cantonment was to be occupied for the purposes of a hospital, bank, hotel, shop or school, or by a railway administration, without the previous sanction of the General Officer of the Command, given with the concurrence of the Local Government. This provision, thus clearly regulated the letting out of houses in a cantonment even for some of the civilian purposes, such as hospital, bank, etc. The reason obviously was that it was considered inappropriate that a house occupied for such a purpose should be required to be vacated in order to make the house available for military officers. Keeping the primary object of facilitating availability of house accommodation for military officers in view, even private letting out was, thus, regulated at that earliest stage. Subsequently came the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act VI of 1923 which was in force when the Government of India Act was enacted, as well as at the time when the Constitution came into force. This Act also contained similar provisions which permitted military authorities to direct an owner to lease out a house to the Central Government, to require the existing occupier to vacate the house and to refrain from letting out any house for purposes of a hospital, school, school hostel, bank, hotel, or shop, or by a railway administration, a company or firm engaged in trade or business or a club, without the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the District given with the concurrence of the Commissioner or, in a Province where there are no Commissioners, of the Collector. This Act also, thus, interfered with and regulated letting out of house accommodation by owners for civilian purposes even though, at the time of letting, the house was not required for any military purpose. It was in the background of this legislative history that provision was made in the Government of India Act in Entry 2 of List I of the Seventh Schedule reserving for the Federal Legislature the power to legislate so as to regulate house accommodation in cantonment areas, and the same power with further clarification was reserved for Parliament in Entry 3 of List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. Obviously, it could not be intended that Parliament should not be able to pass a law containing provisions similar to the provisions in these earlier Acts which did interfere with private letting out of house accommodation in cantonment areas by owners for certain purposes.

Another aspect that strengthens our view is that if we were to accept the interpretation sought to be put on behalf of the appellant that the power of Parliament is confined to legislation for the purpose of obtaining house accommodation in cantonment areas for military purposes and excludes legislation in respect of house accommodation not immediately required for military purposes, all that Parliament will be able to do will be to make provision for acquisition or requisition of house accommodation. On the house accommodation being acquired or requisitioned, it will be available for use by military authorities. Such power, obviously, could not be intended to be conferred by Entry 3 in List I when the same power is specifically granted concurrently to both Parliament and the State Legislatures under Entry 42 of List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution.

On behalf of the appellant, reliance was placed on some decisions of some of the High Courts in support of the proposition that the power of Parliament under Entry 3 of List I does not extend to regulating the relationship between landlord and tenant which power vests in the State Legislature under Entry 18 of List II. The first of these cases is *A. C. Patel v. Vishwanath Ghada*¹ where the Bombay High Court was dealing with Entry 2 of List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935 and Entry 21 of List II of that Act. The Court was concerned with the applicability of the Bombay Rent Restriction Act No. LVII of 1947 to cantonment areas. Opinion was first expressed that the Rent Restriction Act had been passed by the Provincial Legislature under Entry 21 of List II and reliance was placed on the English interpretation Act to hold that land in that entry would include buildings so as to confer jurisdiction on the Provincial Legislature to legislate in respect of house accommodation. Then, in considering the effect of Act LVII of 1947, the Court said:—

“As the preamble of the Act sets out, the Act was passed with a view to the control of rents and repairs of certain premises, of rates of hotels and lodging house and of evictions. Therefore, the pith and substance of Act LVII of 1947 is to regulate the relation between landlord and tenant by controlling rents which the tenant has got to pay to the landlord and by controlling the right of the landlord to evict his tenant. Can it be said that when the Provincial Legislature was dealing with these relations between landlord and tenant, it was regulating house accommodation in cantonment areas? In our opinion, the regulation contemplated by Entry 2 in List I is regulation by the State or by Government. Requisitioning of property, acquiring of property, allocation of property, all that would be regulation of house accommodation, but when the Legislature merely deals with relations of landlord and tenant, it is not in any way legislating with regard to house accommodation. The house accommodation remains the same, but the tenant is protected qua his landlord.”

We have felt considerable doubt whether the power of legislating on relationship between landlord and tenant in respect of house accommodation or buildings would appropriately fall in Entry 21 of List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, or in the corresponding Entry 18 of List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. These Entries permit legislation in respect of land and explain the scope by equating it with rights in or over land, land tenures, including, the relation of landlord and tenant, and the collection of rents. It is to be noted that the relation of landlord and tenant is mentioned as being included in land tenures and the expression “land tenures” would not, in our opinion, appropriately cover tenancy of buildings or of house accommodation. That expression is only used with reference to relationship between landlord and tenant in respect of vacant lands. In fact, leases in respect of non-agricultural property are dealt with in the Transfer of Property Act and would much more appropriately fall within the scope of Entry 8 of List III in the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act read with Entry 10 in the same List, or within the scope of Entry 6 of List III in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution read with Entry 7 in the same List. Leases and all rights governed by leases, including the termination of leases and eviction from property leased, would be covered by the field of transfer of property and contracts relating thereto. However, it is not necessary for us to express any definite opinion in this case on this point because of our view that the relationship of landlord and tenant in respect of house accommodation situated in cantonment areas is clearly covered by the Entries in List I. In the Constitution, the effect of Entry 3 of List I is that Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to the matters contained in that Entry, notwithstanding the fact that a similar power may also be found in any Entry in List II or List III. Article 246 of the Constitution confers exclusive power on Parliament to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List I, notwithstanding the concurrent power of Parliament and the State Legislature, or the exclusive power of the State Legislature in Lists III and II respectively. The general power of legislating in respect of relationship between landlord and tenant exercisable by a State Legislature either under Entry 18 of List II or Entries 6 and 7 of List III is subject to the overriding power of Parliament in respect of matters in List I, so that the effect of Entry 3 of List I is that, on the subject of relationship between landlord and tenant insofar as it arises in respect of house accommodation situated in cantonment areas, Parliament alone can legislate and not the State Legislatures. The submission made that this interpretation will lead to a conflict between the powers conferred on the various Legislatures in Lists I, II and III has also no force, because the reservation of power for Parliament for the limited purposes of legislating in respect of cantonment areas only amounts to exclusion of this part of the legislative power from the general powers conferred on State Legislatures in the other two Lists. This kind of exclusion is not confined only to legislation in respect of house accommodation in cantonment areas. The same Entry gives Parliament jurisdiction to make provision by legislation for local self-government in cantonment areas which is clearly a curtailment of the general power of the State Legislatures to make provision for local self-government in all areas of the State under Entry 5 of List II. That entry 5 does not specifically exclude cantonment areas and, but for Entry 3 of List I, the State Legislature would be competent to make provision for local government even in cantonment areas. Similarly, power of the State Legislature to legislate in respect of : (i) education, including universities, under Entry 11 of List II is made subject to the provisions of Entries 63, 64, 65 and 66 of List I and Entry 25 of List III ; (ii) regulation of mines and mineral development in Entry 23 of List II is made subject to the provisions of List I with respect to regulation and development under the control of the Union ; (iii) industries in Entry 24 of List II is made subject to the provisions of Entries 7 and 52 of List I ; (iv) trade and commerce within the State in Entry 26 of List II is made subject to the provisions of Entry 33 of List III ; (v) production, supply and distribution of goods under Entry 27 of List II is made subject to the provisions of Entry 33 of List III ; and (vi) theatres and dramatic performances ; cinemas in Entry 33 of List II is made subject to the provisions of Entry 60 of List I. Thus the Constitution itself has specifically put down entries in List II in which the power is expressed in general terms but is made subject to the provisions of entries in either List I or List III. In these circumstances, no anomaly arises in holding that the exclusive power of Parliament for regulation of house accommodation including control of rents in cantonment areas has the effect of making the legislative powers conferred by Lists II and III subject to this power of Parliament. In this view, we are unable to affirm the decision of the Bombay High Court in *A.C. Patel's case*¹, which is based on the interpretation that Entry 2 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act only permitted laws to be made for requisitioning of property, acquiring of property and allocation of property only. The same High Court, in a subsequent case in F. E. Darukhanawalla v. Khemchand Lalchand,² placed the same interpretation on Entry 3 of List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. That decision was also based on the same interpretation of the scope of regulation of house accommodation as was accepted by that Court in the earlier case.

The Nagpur High Court in *Kewalchand v. Dashrathlal*¹ proceeded on the assumption that the decision in the case of *A. G. Patel v. Vishwanath Chada*² correctly defined the scope of Entry 2 in List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, and considered the narrow question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant specifically mentioned in Entry 21 in List II of that Act which covered the requirement of permission to serve a notice for eviction in regulating the relation of landlord and tenant and fell within the scope of Entry 21 in List II or in Entry 2 in List I of that Act. The Court held that it substantially fell in Entry 21 in List II and not in Entry 2 in List I. That Court did not consider it necessary to express any opinion on the question whether the expression "regulating of house accommodation" included something besides what Chagla, C.J., had said was its ambit in the case of *A. G. Patel v. Vishwanath Chada*², but expressed the opinion that the expression could not be stretched to include the aspect of the relation of landlord and tenant involved in that particular case. It is clear that, in that case also, a narrow interpretation of the expression "regulation of house accommodation" was accepted because it appears that there was no detailed discussion of the full scope of that expression. Similar is the decision of the Patna High Court in *Babu Jagatanand v. Sri Satyanarayanji and Lakshmi Through the Shebait and Manager Jamuna Das*³. In fact, this last case merely followed the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of *F. E. Darukhanawalla v. Khemchand Lalchand*⁴. On the other hand, the Rajasthan High Court in *Nawal Mal v. Nathu Lal*⁵ held that the power of the State Legislature to legislate in respect of landlord and tenant of buildings is to be found in Entries 6, 7 and 13 of List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution and not in Entry 18 of List II, and that that power was circumscribed by the exclusive power of Parliament to legislate on the same subject under Entry 3 of List I. That is also the view which the Calcutta High Court has taken in the judgment in appeal before us. We think that the decision given by the Calcutta High Court is correct and must be upheld.

Leave this Court will not be justified in interfering with the finding of the Tribunal even if it be open to the criticism that a part of the evidence relied upon is not in law relevant.

On facts gratuity payable to a workman on termination of employment is to be computed on the total wage packet of the workman including dearness allowance which he has last drawn. This order makes a departure from the normal rule which is adopted in industrial awards. A departure may be made from the normal rule, if there be some strong evidence or precedent in the industry, or conduct of the employer or other exceptional circumstances to justify that course. In the absence of such evidence, the gratuity should be related to the basic wage and not to the consolidated wage-packet. In the present case it is found that the financial position of the company is sound but there is no evidence that the company is 'making abnormally high profits' nor is there any evidence that in its sister concerns or in other engineering concerns in the region there is a practice of awarding gratuity related to consolidated wages. On facts held, 'wages' in the scheme shall mean basic salary or emoluments excluding dearness allowance and other allowances and benefits payable to the workman.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Award, dated the 19th May, 1965/23rd February, 1966 of the Additional Industrial Tribunal, Delhi in Industrial Dispute No. 109 of 1965.

H. R. Gokhale, Senior Advocate (M/s. G. L. Sanghi and K. P. Gupta, Advocates. with him), for the Appellant.

Mrs. Urmila Kapur and Miss Bhajan Ramrakhiani, Advocates, for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—By order dated 24th February, 1965 the Chief Commissioner of Delhi referred for adjudication, industrial disputes between the appellant company and its workmen relating to dearness allowance and introduction of a scheme of gratuity for the benefit of the workmen. The Industrial Tribunal, Delhi framed the following "gratuity scheme":

- | | |
|---|---|
| "(1) On death or retirement on attaining the age of superannuation or on becoming mentally or physically unfit. for further service. | One month's wages for each year of service or part thereof in excess of six months subject to a maximum of 15 months' wages. In case of death of employee the gratuity shall be payable to his nominee or if there is no nominee to his legal heirs. |
| (2) On termination after five years' service for any cause whatsoever except by way of retrenchment or resignation. | 15 days wages for each year of service or part thereof in excess of six months subject to a maximum of 15 months wages. |
| (3) On resignation after 10 years of service. | 15 days wages for each year of service or part thereof in excess of six months subject to a maximum of 15 months wages. |

Provided that if termination is for any misconduct causing financial loss. to the company, the amount of loss shall be deducted from the gratuity payable. The word 'wages' in this Scheme shall mean the total pay packet of the workman including dearness which he was last drawing."

The Tribunal also directed that "all workmen who were appointed in 1960 or earlier should get dearness allowance at Rs. 3 for every ten point rise in the cost of Consumer Price Index base 1960 over and above their existing wages with effect from 1st January, 1965. In case of workmen appointed after 1960, the consumer price index base 1960 on the date of his appointment shall be found out and he shall be given Rs. 3 as dearness for every ten point rise in cost of consumer Price Index base 1960 above it with effect from 1st January, 1965 or such later date on which the limit of 10 point rise in cost of Consumer Price Index base is crossed". The Tribunal also directed that dearness allowance will not be enhanced till the limit of ten points be "crossed", and that dearness allowance once granted will not be reduced till the Consumer Price Index falls by more than 10 points. The Company has appealed to this Court with Special Leave.

In the view of the Tribunal, the financial position of the company "is very sound" and that it has "financial capacity and stability to bear the additional burden of dearness allowance and of the gratuity scheme." In reaching that conclusion the Tribunal relied upon a news item published in the newspapers that 2000 Russian Tractors were being immediately imported by the company even though the agency of the Company was being terminated. In relying upon newspaper reports the Tribunal may have erred. But the conclusion of the Tribunal is founded upon a review of several other circumstances. It is true that one of the primary lines of business of the company was of selling tractors as agents of Russian manufacturers. That agency was in danger of being terminated because the State Trading Corporation had arranged to take over the agency. But the balance sheets of the company show that the agency was only one of the many lines of business and the closure of the agency of the tractor manufacturers was not likely to affect the financial structure of the Company seriously. The Tribunal has on appreciation of evidence come to the conclusion that the financial position of the company was sound and assuming that the Tribunal is governed by the strict rules prescribed by the Evidence Act, sitting in appeal with Special Leave we will not be justified in interfering with the finding of the Tribunal even if it be open to the criticism that a part of the evidence relied upon is not in law relevant.

The Company had on its roll 244 workmen out of whom 118 entered employment after 1960. The Company has been paying to its workmen wages consisting of two components—basic wages and 50 per cent. of the basic wages as dearness allowance. Payment of wages is made in this form to all workmen whether their employment commenced before the year 1960 or thereafter. It is true that before 1960 the company used to make a consolidated payment without specifying any amount of basic salary or dearness allowance. Since 1960 in every appointment letter it was expressly recited that the employee will get a consolidated salary consisting of 2/3rd of the consolidated salary as basic wages and the balance as dearness allowance. The company has produced before the Tribunal 118 such letters of appointment in respect of all employees employed after the year 1960. In respect of the employees appointed prior to the year 1960 in the salary register basic salary and dearness allowance was separately entered though at the time of appointment of employees there was no allocation as basic wages and dearness allowance.

There is no dispute that since the year 1960 there has been a rise in the cost of living. The Consumer Price Index for Industrial Workers which was 100 in 1960, had risen to more than 130 in 1965. The management of the company granted dearness allowance to employees in other concerns under its management even though those other concerns were not financially very sound. No serious argument has been advanced before us that the rise in dearness allowance is not justified. The only ground of complaint is that by relating the dearness allowance to the total wage packet the workmen are given a rise both in the dearness allowance and the basic wage.

The Tribunal has awarded dearness allowance at the flat rate of Rs. 3 for every 10 point rise in the cost of Consumer Price Index. The rise is not related to the quantum of basic wage or consolidated wage. It is a flat uniform rate applicable to every workman. The Tribunal was of the view that the allocation between the basic wage and the dearness allowance was "not fair", but for the purpose of the present reference, the question is academic because dearness allowance is not related to the quantum of salary that the workmen receive. The argument that the rise will operate to give to the workmen besides the additional dearness allowance, a percentage increase in dearness allowance already paid as part of the consolidated wage cannot be accepted. We do not therefore see any reason to interfere with the order passed by the Tribunal with regard to the dearness allowance "at the rate of Rs. 3 for every 10 point rise in the Consumer Price Index."

Gratuity payable to a workman on termination of employment is to be computed on the total wage packet of the workman including dearness allowance which he has last drawn. This order makes a departure from the normal rule which is adopted in industrial awards. In *M/s. British Paints (India) Ltd. v. Its Workmen*¹, this Court while introducing a gratuity scheme for the first time in the concern directed that the amount of gratuity shall be related to the basic wage or salary and not to the consolidated wage including dearness allowance. A similar order was made in *May and Baker (India) Ltd. v. Their Workmen*². It is true that in *British Indian Corporation v. The Workmen*³, an award made by the Tribunal fixing the quantum of gratuity on gross salary i.e., basic wage plus dearness allowance was upheld by this Court. The Court affirmed that the usual pattern in fixing the gratuity is to relate it to the basic wage, but refused to interfere with the order because the practice in that concern was to fix gratuity on the consolidated wage.

Similarly, in *Hindustan Antibiotics Ltd. v. Their Workmen*⁴, the Tribunal directed the employer to pay gratuity at the rate of one half of wages for each month including dearness allowance but excluding house rent and all other allowances for each completed year of service subject to a maximum of wages for ten months. In rejecting the claim of the employers for relating gratuity to the basic wage, this Court observed :

"If the industry is a flourishing one, we do not see any reason why the labour shall not have the benefit of both the schemes i.e., the employees provident fund and the gratuity scheme. Gratuity is an additional form of relief for the workmen to fall back upon. If the industry can bear the burden, there is no reason why he shall not be entitled to both the retirement benefits. The Tribunal considered all the relevant circumstances : the stability of the concern, the profits made by it in the past, its future prospects and its capacity and came to the conclusion that, in the concern in question, the labour should be provided with a gratuity scheme in addition to that of a provident fund scheme. There was no justification to disturb this conclusion."

In *The Remington Rand of India Ltd. v. The Workmen*⁵, this Court declined to interfere with the order of the Tribunal awarding gratuity related to the consolidated wage including dearness allowance "in view of the flourishing nature of the concern, the enormous profits it was making, the reserves it had built up as also in view of the fact that it was paying gratuity to executives on the basis of consolidated wages." In *The Delhi Cloth & General Mills Co., Ltd. v. The Workmen and others*⁶, this Court had to consider whether gratuity payable to workmen in the textile industry in the Delhi region should be related to the consolidated wage. After referring to the decisions which were brought to the notice of the Court, it was observed that :

"It is not easy to extract any principle from these cases : as precedents they are conflicting The Tribunal has failed to take into account the prevailing pattern in the textile industry all over the country It is a countrywide industry : and in that industry, except in one case to be presently noticed, gratuity has never been granted on the basis of consolidated wages."

6. C.A. No. 2168 of 1967 decided on 27th September, 1968.

The Court after referring to the schemes framed in respect of the industries in Bombay and Ahmedabad and other industries concluded that "determination of gratuity is not based on any definite rules. In each case it must depend upon the prosperity of the concern, needs of the workmen and the prevailing economic conditions examined in the light of the auxiliary benefits which the workman may get on determination of employment."

There is no clear evidence on the record, and no precedents have been brought to our notice, to justify a departure from the normal rule that the quantum of gratuity is related not to the consolidated wage packet but to the basic wage. A departure may be made from the normal rule, if there be some strong evidence or precedent in the industry, or conduct of the employer or other exceptional circumstances to justify that course. In the absence of such evidence, we are of the view that gratuity should be related to the basic wage and not to the consolidated wage packet. In the present case it is found that the financial position of the Company is sound but there is no evidence that the company is "making abnormally high profits" nor is there any evidence that in its sister concerns or in other engineering concerns in the region there is a practice of awarding gratuity related to consolidated wages.

It was urged on behalf of the company that even though the workmen had, in the claim made by them, demanded a scheme of gratuity benefit at the rate of 15 days wages for each year of service in case of death or retirement on attaining the age of superannuation or on becoming mentally or physically unfit for further service, the Tribunal had awarded gratuity at the rate of one month's wages for each year of service subject to a maximum of 15 months' wages. But the claim was made on the footing that the wages were to include dearness allowance. When that claim is not accepted, we cannot hold the workmen bound by the multipliers.

We make no modification in clause (1) of the scheme. We modify the scheme in so far as it relates to the dearness allowance and direct that for the last sentence of the gratuity scheme the following shall be substituted :

"The word 'wages' in the scheme shall mean basic salary or emoluments excluding dearness allowance and other allowances and benefits payable to the workman which he had last drawn."

Subject to the above modification, the appeal fails and is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs in the appeal.

Orissa Sales Tax Act (XIV of 1947), section 2 (g), 91 (1) and 25 (1) (a)—Sale—Failure to register as dealer—Levy of Penalty—Justification for.

The Company supplied building materials to the Contractor at agreed rates. There was concurrence of the four elements which constituted a sale, (1) the parties were competent to contract ; (2) they had mutually assented to the terms of contract ; (3) absolute property in building materials was agreed to be transferred to the contractors ; and (4) price was agreed to be adjusted against the dues under the contract.

Under the Act penalty may be imposed for failure to register as a dealer. (Section 9 (1) read with section 25 (1) (a) of the Act. But the liability to pay penalty does not arise merely upon proof of default in registering as a dealer. An order imposing penalty for failure to carry out a statutory obligation is the result of a quasi-criminal proceeding, and penalty will not ordinarily be imposed unless the party obliged either acted deliberately in defiance of law or was guilty of conduct contumacious or dishonest, or acted in conscious disregard of its obligation. Penalty will not also be imposed merely because it is lawful to do so. Whether penalty should be imposed for failure to perform a statutory obligation is a matter of discretion of the authority to be exercised judicially and on a consideration of all the relevant circumstances. Even if a minimum penalty is prescribed the authority competent to impose the penalty will be justified in refusing to impose penalty, when there is a technical or venial breach of the provisions of the Act or where the breach flows from a bona fide belief that the offender is not liable to act in the manner prescribed by the statutes. Those in charge of the affairs of the Company in failing to register the Company as a dealer acted in the honest and genuine belief that the Company was not a dealer. Granting that they erred, no case for imposing penalty was made out.

A person to be a dealer within the meaning of the Act must carry on the business of selling or supplying goods in Orissa. If the company agreed to charge affixed percentage above the cost price, for storage, insurance and rental charges, it may be reasonably inferred that the company did not carry on business of supplying materials as a part of business activity with a view to making profit.

Appeals by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order, dated the 3rd December, 1964 of the Orissa High Court in Special Jurisdiction Cases Nos. 44 to 53 of 1963.

G. K. Daphtary, Senior Advocate (D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, with him), for the Appellant (In all the Appeals).

D. Narasaraaju, Senior Advocate (R. N. Sachthey, Advocate, with him), for the Respondent (In all the Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, Acting C. J.—M/s. Hindustan Steel Ltd., a Company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913 is a Government of India undertaking in the public sector. The Company is registered as a dealer under the Orissa Sales Tax Act XIV of 1947, from the last quarter ending March, 1959.

Between 1954 and 1959 Company was erecting factory buildings for the steel plant, residential buildings for its employees and ancillary works such as roads, water supply, drainage. Some constructions were done departmentally and the rest through contractors. The Company supplied to the contractors for use in construction, bricks, coal, cement, steel, etc., for consideration and adjusted the value of the goods supplied at the rates specified in the tender.

In proceedings for assessment of tax under the Orissa Sales Tax Act, 1947, the Sales Tax Officer held that the Company was a dealer in building materials, and had sold the material to contractors and was on that account liable to pay tax at the appropriate rates under the Orissa Sales Tax Act. The Sales Tax Officer directed the Company to pay tax due for ten quarters ending 31st December, 1958, and penalty in addition to the tax for failure to register itself as a dealer. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner confirmed the order of the Sales Tax Officer. In second appeal the Tribunal agreed with the tax authorities and held that the Company was liable to pay tax on its turnover from bricks, cement and steel supplied to the contractors. The Tribunal however substantially reduced the penalty imposed upon the Company.

At the instance of the Company the Tribunal referred six questions to the High Court of Orissa under section 24 (1) of the Orissa Sales Tax Act, 1947. The questions were :

"A. Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case Messrs. Hindustan Steel Ltd., can be held to be a 'dealer' within the meaning of section 2 (c) of the Orissa Sales Tax Act?

B. Whether the sale of materials by the Company to different contractors working for the company for which sales tax is sought to be assessed amounts to 'sale' within the meaning of section 2 (g) of the Act?

C. Whether the accrual of some profit in the absence of any motive to make such profit can make the assessee a 'dealer' under the Act and whether in the circumstances of the case, the Tribunal was justified in coming to a finding that there was profit making motive on the part of the Company?

D. Whether in view of the definition contained in section 2, clause (h) as it stood prior to the amendment of the provisions by Act XVIII of 1959, the supplies of materials can be treated as 'sale price' in the hands of the assessee?

E. Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case, the amount received by the assessee in respect of tender forms can be said to be "sale price"?

F. Whether the Tribunal is right in holding that penalties under section 12 (5) of the Act had been rightly levied and whether in view of the serious dispute of liability it cannot be said that there was sufficient cause for not applying for registration?"

The High Court answered the questions A, B, C, D and F in the affirmative and question E in the negative.

In these appeals filed with Special Leave substantially three matters fall to be determined:

1. Whether the Company sold building material to the contractors during the quarters in question?
2. Whether the Company was a dealer in respect of building materials within the meaning of the Orissa Sales Tax Act?
3. Whether imposition of penalties for failure to register as a dealer was justified?

Solution of the first and third matters does not present much difficulty. At the relevant time 'sale' was defined by section 2 (g) of the Orissa Sales Tax Act as follows:—

" 'Sale' means, with all its grammatical variations and cognate expressions any transfer of property in goods for cash or deferred payment or other valuation consideration, including a transfer of property in goods involved in the execution of contract, but does not include a mortgage, hypothecation, charge or pledge:

* * * * *

The Company supplied building material to the contractors at agreed rates. There was concurrence of the four elements which constitute a sale (1) the parties were competent to contract; (2) they had mutually assented to the terms of contract; (3) absolute property in building materials was agreed to be transferred to the contractors; and (4) price was agreed to be adjusted against the dues under the contract. No serious argument was advanced before us that the supply of building material belonging to the Company for an agreed price did not constitute a sale.

Under the Act penalty may be imposed for failure to register as a dealer: section 9 (1) read with section 25 (1) (a) of the Act. But the liability to pay penalty does not arise merely upon proof of default in registering as a dealer. An order imposing penalty for failure to carry out a statutory obligation is the result of a quasi-criminal proceeding, and penalty will not ordinarily be imposed unless the party obliged either acted deliberately in defiance of law or was guilty of conduct

SANCTION TO PROSECUTE UNDER THE PREVENTION OF CORRUPTION ACT, 1947*

By

M. L. KAUL, Department of Legal Affairs, New De'hi-1.

The need for sanction in regard to criminal prosecution has been expressly stipulated in several enactments, as a limitation upon the general rule that a criminal prosecution can be initiated by or at the instance of any person whether or not he is directly injured or affected by the offence alleged. Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) specifically provides for such sanction. The essential purpose of the section is to reconcile two different principles. The first of them is, that a public servant, however important the position he may hold, should be easily amenable to the jurisdiction of the Courts of the country for any offence for which he may be responsible, as any ordinary citizen. The second principle is, that an allegation made against such a public servant amounts, as a matter of fact, to an attack on his honesty and integrity, which indirectly casts a reflection on the State itself of whose machinery, the public servant forms a part. Thus, the object of such stipulation on the requirement of sanction in relation to the prosecution of the public servant is to discourage frivolous, doubtful and impolitic prosecutions sought to be initiated against public servants exercising their duties. In view of the difficulties involved in a precise demarcation between claims made bona fide and claims made fraudulently, such stipulation seek to shut out a mala fide and vexatious attempt to institute criminal proceedings against a public servant, by a discretion to grant or not to grant sanction for such prosecution..

Thus, the previous sanction of certain specified authorities is, as mentioned above, a sine qua non for the prosecution of a public servant under the provisions of the Act. Section 6 reads as follows:

"6. (1) No Court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under section 161 or 164 or section 165 of the Indian Penal Code or under sub-section (2) of section 5 of this Act, alleged to have been committed by a public servant except with the previous sanction.

(a) in the case of a person who is employed in connection with the affairs of the Union and is not removable from his office, save by or with the sanction of the Central Government or some higher authority (of the) Central Government..

(b) in the case of a person who is employed in connection with the affairs of a State and is not removable from the office, save with the sanction of the State Government or some higher authority (of the) State Government..

(c) in the case of any other person, of the authority competent to remove him from his service.

(2) Where for any reason whatsoever any doubt arises whether the previous sanction as required under sub-section (1) should be given by the Central or State Government or any other authority, such sanction shall be given by the Government or the authority which would have been competent to remove the

* The views expressed herein are those of the author, public servant from his office at the time when the offence was alleged to have been committed."

Section 6 of the Act, as has been emphasized by the Supreme Court¹ differs materially from section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which constituted in general the fundamental law relating to sanction for prosecution of a public servant for criminal offences. The two major changes effected are:

(1) that while under section 197 the sanction of the Governor-General or the Provincial Government, as the case may be, was only necessary for the prosecution of public servants who were not removable from their offices save with the sanction of the Central Government or the Provincial Government, respectively, no such qualification is contained in section 6 in which the words used are "committed by public servants". Thus, under the Criminal Procedure Code no sanction was required to prosecute public servants removable by a lesser authority than the Provincial or Central Government, whereas now the sanction of the appropriate authority is necessary for prosecution of a public servant however subordinate, if he is alleged to have committed an offence under sections 161 and 165 of the Indian Penal Code or under section 5 of the Act.

(2) that in section 6 of the Act, the words appearing in section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code, namely, "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty" have been omitted. This omission appears to have been made in consequence of the decisions of the various High Courts and the Federal Court to the effect that an officer who had accepted a bribe or embezzled Government property was neither acting nor purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, and therefore no sanction for his prosecution was necessary. The sanction of the appropriate authority is therefore now necessary for the prosecution of any public servant under the Act.

The provisions of the Act indicate that it was the intention of the Legislature to treat more severely than hitherto corruption on the part of a public servant and not to condone it in any manner whatsoever.

The question of sanction under section 6 of the Act can best be studied under the following heads:

I. In what cases sanction is necessary.

II. Defects in sanction:

(1) Want of competency:

(a) whether the sanction should be given by the same authority who appointed the public servant or an authority of the same rank as the appointing authority or of higher rank than the appointing authority.

(b) whether such equal or superior authority should be expressly delegated with the power to issue such sanction,

(c) whether such sanction could be issued in the name of the President or the Governor and signed by subordinate officers,

(d) who is the authority to issue the sanction in case of Government servants whose services are lent by a State Government to the Central Government.

(2) Defective consideration.

(3) Defect in expression of sanction.

1. S.A. Vasudevan v. The State, (1958) S.C.J. 594 : (1958) S.C.R. 1037 : (1958) 2 An. W.R. (S.C.) 45 : (1958) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 45 : (1958) M.L.J. (Cri.) 473 : A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 107.

(4) Sanction granted after the institution of suit.

III. Effect of defective sanction and of subsequent proper sanction.

IV. Stage of objection to defect in sanction.

I. IN WHAT CASES SANCTION IS NECESSARY.

On examining the provisions of section 6 of the Act it is manifest that two conditions must be fulfilled before its provisions become applicable. One is that the offence mentioned therein must be committed by a public servant, and the other is that the person is employed in connection with the affairs of the Union or a State and is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Central Government or State Government or is a public servant who is removable from his office by any other competent authority. Both these conditions must be present to prevent the Court from taking cognizance of an offence mentioned in the sanction.^{1-a} An offender cannot invoke the protection of section 6 unless two conditions are fulfilled, namely,—

(1) he was a public servant when the offence charged against him was committed, and

(2) on the date when he is prosecuted there is some authority who could remove him from his office.

Section 6 of the Act offers protection only to those public servants who were in office both on the date of the commission of the offence charged and the date when a Court is asked to take cognizance.² Once he ceases to be public servant, the Court can take cognizance of the offence without any sanction. Section 6 of the Act certainly does prohibit the taking of cognizance of his offence without a previous sanction while he continues to be a public servant; but that prohibition does not continue after he ceased to be a public servant, i. e. who is no longer a public servant³. So, if either of the two conditions is lacking, the Court does not need a sanction for taking cognizance of the offence. The verb 'is' in section 6 (1) (a) of the Act refers to the date on which the Court is called upon to take cognizance⁴.

II. DEFECT IN SANCTION.

(1) Want of competency:

(a) whether the sanction shall be given by the same authority who appointed the public servant or an authority of the same rank as the appointing authority or of higher rank than the appointing authority.

Section 6 (1) (c) of the Act stipulates that the prosecution should have the sanction of the authority 'competent to remove the appellant from his service'. The authority contemplated therein is the authority competent to remove the particular public servant from his office and not any public servant holding the office held by the accused. In this connection Article 311 (1) of the Constitution becomes relevant. Article 311 (1) reads:

"No person who is a member of a civil service of the Union or an All India Service or a civil service of a State or holds a civil post under the Union, or a State shall be dismissed or removed by an authority subordinate to that by which he was appointed."

Section 6 (1) (c) of the Act has to be interpreted in the light of the provisions of the Article 311 (1), under which the authority to dismiss or remove should not be subordinate to the appointing authority. This does not, however, mean that the removal must be by the very same authority or by any of his direct superiors. It is enough if the removing authority is of the same rank or grade as the appointing authority.⁶

Where any doubt arises as to the authority who has to give the sanction as required under section 6 (1), section 6 (2) of the Act becomes relevant.

Sub-section (2) reads:

"Where for any reason whatsoever any doubt arises whether the previous sanction as required under sub-section (1) should be given by the Central or State Government or any other authority, such sanction shall be given by the Government or authority which would have been competent to remove the public servant from his office at the time when the offence was alleged to have been committed."

Section 6 (2) of the Act would thus become applicable as such only to such cases where it cannot be ascertained with reasonable certainty as to who has actually appointed the accused person⁷ or where by change of rule the authority who had appointed him was no longer competent to remove him from his office.⁸ In *State v. Madhewan*⁹ the Kerala High Court held that where the accused, who was appointed by the Government of Cochin, was prosecuted for offences under section 5 (1) (d) and 5 (2) of the Act, read with section 161 of the Indian Penal Code, and sanction under section 6 for prosecution was granted by the Director, Health Services, Government of Kerala, the Director, Health Services was not a competent authority. Only the successor Government of Kerala can, under Article 311 of the Constitution, dismiss or remove the accused from his service, and hence, by virtue of section 6 of the Act, the Kerala Government is the only competent authority to sanction the prosecution. So the sanction need not be by the same authority who appointed the accused; it may be given by any other authority of the same rank or higher rank than the appointing authority, but in no case can the sanction be given by an authority subordinate to the appointing authority.⁶ The Supreme Court held that sanction for prosecution given by an authority who was of a rank or grade higher than the authority who appointed the accused was a valid sanction.⁶ Article 311 does not preclude an authority which is superior to that which made the appointment, from dismissing or removing a person so appointed.^{9, 12} This prohibition is in case of authorities who are subordinate to the appointing authority. The provision regarding this prohibition cannot be qualified or taken away by statutory rules.

II (1) (b): whether such equal or superior authority should be expressly delegated with the power to issue such sanction:

In *Vinovak Roshi v. The State*¹³ the appellant who was an employee of the Northern Railway, was charged under section 5 (1) (d) of the Act and the sanction for prosecution was given under section 6 (1) (c) of the Act by the Divisional Medical Superintendent of the Northern Railway, who was of the same rank as the Divisional Personnel Officer who had under the power delegated to him by the General Manager, Northern Railway, appointed the appellant. The Punjab High Court held, that the General Manager not having delegated powers to the Divisional Medical Superintendent, as he had done in the case of the Divisional Personnel Officer, the sanction given by the former was not valid. The Rajasthan High Court also held that the sanction by an equal authority without delegation of powers was invalid. In this case¹⁴ the accused petitioner was originally an employee of the Bikaner State Railway; on integration of the Bikaner State Railway with the Northern Railway he was absorbed in the services of the Northern Railway. The Court referred to the Disciplinary and Appeal Rules for Non-Gazetted Railway servants, which made it clear that the appointing authority with regard to the Bikaner State Railway will be the authority of the Northern Railway who was then competent to make similar appointments, and therefore held that for the purposes of the present case the question as to who initially appointed the petitioner was wholly irrelevant and immaterial. The crucial question was as to which authority of the Northern Railway was competent to appoint the petitioner. Under rule 34 of the Railway Establishment Code the primary appointing authority of such employee is the General Manager, although he can delegate powers to lower authorities. There having been no delegation of authority by the General Manager to any lower authority at that time, it was held that the sanction given by an authority subordinate in rank to the General Manager was not valid. In the case of authority of equal rank or grade to that of the appointing authority, the express delegation of power to issue such sanction is necessary but such is not the case with the authority superior to the appointing authority.¹⁵ Sanction for prosecution given by the authority higher in rank or grade than the appointing authority is valid.¹⁶ So it has been held that delegation of power to issue the sanction for prosecution under section 6 of the Act to an authority of equal rank or grade must always be done expressly. And in case of the authority superior in rank or of higher grade than the appointing authority, the express delegation is not necessary at all.

II (1) (c): whether such sanction could be issued in the name of President or Governor and signed by subordinate officer:

In *G. V. Nair v Government of India*¹⁷ the question arose whether sanction issued in the name of the Governor and signed by subordinate officers under the Rules of Business is valid for purpose of section 6 of the Act. The Kerala High Court held that if such an order is in compliance with the requirements of Article 166 of the Constitution, it would give immunity to the order. It cannot therefore be challenged in a Court of law as not an order made by the Governor. However, the immunity is available only in so far as the above ground goes and not any further. Thus, the sanction does not enjoy immunity from attack on any other ground—as for example that the sanctioning authority has not applied its mind to the facts of the case before according the sanction. In like manner, Article 77 of the Constitution contains the immunity with regard to the Union. A sanction issued in the name of the President and signed by subordinate officers under the Rules of Business is valid for the purposes of section 6 of the Act, and cannot be challenged in a Court of law as not an order made by the President. A subordinate officer can sign the sanction issued in the name of the President or a Governor if he is authorised under the Rules of Business framed under Articles 77 and 166 of the Constitution respectively. Such a sanction is valid in law, and this cannot be made a ground of attack in a Court of law, i. e., that the sanction is not signed by the President or the Governor as the case may be.

II (1) (d): who is the authority to issue sanction in case of Government servants whose services are lent by a State Government to the Central Government:

In *R. R. Chari v. State of U.P.*¹⁸ the accused, a permanent Gazetted Government servant of the Assam Government, whose services were lent to the Government of India, was alleged to have committed offences under sections 161, 165 and 467 of the Indian Penal Code in the year 1946 while in service under the Government of India. Sanction for his prosecution was granted by the Governor-General under section 6 of the Act. The Supreme Court held, that the case of a public servant whose services are loaned by one Government to another does not fall under clause (a) and (b) of the Act, but falls under clause (c) of the Act. If the services of a public servant permanently employed by a State Government are loaned to the Central Government the authority to remove such public servant from his office would not be the borrowing Government, but the loaning Government, which is the State Government. The sanction by the Governor-General was therefore invalid. It was only the State Government, i. e., the Assam Government, which could give a valid sanction.

II. (2) Defective consideration.

Section 6 of the Act, which deals with sanction, implies first, a full knowledge of the facts upon which it is sought to prosecute him, and, secondly, a deliberate decision of the sanctioning authority that he may be prosecuted. Thus, it is necessary that the sanction should be given after all the facts have been collected against the accused so that the sanctioning authority has before it the material upon which the prosecution is to be launched. The sanction should not be granted as a matter of routine, merely on the request of the prosecuting authority. It can hardly be imagined that the duty of granting proper sanction would be properly discharged by merely putting one's signature on a ready-made sanction provided.¹⁹ The authority granting the sanction should realise that it is his duty to take a deliberate decision, after applying his mind to the facts of the case.²⁰ The sanctioning authority is placed somewhat in the position of a sentinel at the door of criminal Courts, in order that no irresponsible or malicious prosecution can pass the portals of the Court of Justice. It is, therefore, essential that persons charged with the responsible duty of granting sanction, which is a duty of deciding whether or not that credit and reputation of another citizen should be put in peril by means of a criminal prosecution, should bring to the discharge of their duty a sense of responsibility and the industry requires to examine the relevant materials.¹⁹ However, one does not and cannot expect a departmental head to be an expert in criminal law and to determine with certainty as to which label will appropriately cover the offence committed by an offender.²¹⁻²² It is not necessary that the sanctioning authority need call all the records, if the papers placed before the authority give him the necessary material upon which he decides that it was necessary in the ends of justice to accord his sanction.²³ But where sanction for the prosecution was issued by the Collector after considering only the statement of the investigating authority and before receiving the statement of witnesses recorded during the investigation, the sanction was held to be vitiated because there was the possibility that the sanctioning authority might take a different decision on considering the statement of the witnesses.²⁴ However, where it is alleged that there is material difference between the facts placed before that sanctioning authority and those sought to be proved at the trial, it has been held that, if the variations are not substantial as might reasonably be taken to affect the judgment of the sanctioning authority, the order of sanction is not vitiated.²⁵

II. (3) Defect in expression of sanction.

It is not necessary for the sanction under the Act to be in any particular form, or in writing, or for it to set out the facts in respect of which it is given.¹ When the facts are not set out in the sanction, the prosecution has to prove by other evidence that the material facts constituting the offence were placed before the sanctioning authority².

Where the sanction under section 6 of the Act related to a specific allegation in respect of the illegal gratification of a certain sum, and the sanctioning authority has sanctioned the prosecution of the accused in respect of this sum, the Saurashtra High Court held that the sanction could by no stretch of reasoning be extended to facts constituting another distinct offence in relation to another sum³.

In a Bombay case, the investigation was originally wrongfully carried out by an authority lesser than the proper authority entitled to do so, and sanction was given to prosecute the offender under section 161 of the Indian Penal Code; the Court ordered re-investigation by the proper authority, and after re-investigation the prosecution was launched on the old sanction, no new sanction on re-investigation having been issued. It was held that the original sanction would be sufficient. What is required is that the sanctioning authority should apply his mind to the facts before him and accord sanction. Sanction already accorded does not lapse on re-investigation (fresh investigation) although given on illegal investigation.⁴

The case may also arise wherein, on the same facts, altered or additional charges may be sought to be made by the prosecution. In such cases the jurisdiction of the Court to try the charge would depend on whether the sanction originally granted would suffice or whether a new sanction would be necessary.⁵ Where the facts remain the same, the Court could proceed with the altered or added charge, provided the altered or added charge is based on the same facts which have already been considered by the sanctioning authority. The stress is clearly on the facts, and not on the penal section applicable to these facts.⁶

II. (4) Sanction given after the institution of suit.

The rule requiring sanction before a Court can take cognizance of an offence is a rule of procedure, which applies retrospectively to all complaints whatever the date of the commission of the offence to which they relate. The procedure to be followed is the procedure that prevails on the date of the complaint.⁶ Where the Magistrate took cognizance of the offences and the sanction was thereafter given, it was held that the cognizance was without necessary sanction and therefore the commitment of the petitioners bad in law.⁷ In *Akki Veeraiah v. State*⁸ the Andhra High Court held that the previous sanction of the superior officer is a condition precedent for the filing of a complaint once it is established that an offence under the Act has been committed. Lapse of time does not effect the valid sanction, and it does not cease to be in force owing to the lapse of time.⁹

III. EFFECT OF THE DEFECTIVE SANCTION AND OF SUBSEQUENT PROPER SANCTION.

Where there is a defect in the accord of the sanction, its effect would be to vitiate the sanction, and no Court can take cognizance of the offence with respect to which such sanction has been accorded. The question would, therefore, arise whether such an illegality could be cured by a subsequent sanction or under section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Saurashtra High Court held, that the illegality arising out of a defective sanction cannot be cured under section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.¹⁰ The trial would be ab initio void as one without jurisdiction. Only a fresh trial after getting the proper sanction and submission of a fresh chargesheet would be possible.¹¹

This would also involve the question as to whether in cases where a trial is vitiated by the absence of a proper sanction, a subsequent trial after a fresh proper sanction would not be a violation of article 20 (2) of the Constitution and section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In *Baij Nath Prasad Tripathi v. State of Bhopal*¹² the Supreme Court held that Article 20 (2) of the Constitution has no application in the case. The petitioners are not being prosecuted and punished for the same offence more than once, the earlier proceedings having been held to be null and void. The Court also stated: "With regard to section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is enough to state that the petitioners were not tried in earlier proceedings by a Court of competent jurisdiction nor is there any conviction or acquittal inforce within the meaning of section 403 (1) of the Code, to stand as a bar against their trial for the same offence."

IV. STAGE OF OBJECTION TO THE DEFECT IN SANCTION.

The question would necessarily arise as to at what stage of a proceeding the objection to a sanction should be taken. It is true that the Court, before taking cognizance of the particular offence with regard to which sanction is necessary, has to satisfy itself as to whether a proper sanction has been granted to prosecute the accused for the offence. But at the same time, it has also to be remembered that it is inherent in the nature of the sanction itself that it is a safeguard afforded to the accused. It would therefore be unjust if the Court decided the question at the time of taking cognizance and thereby shut out any agitation of the matter at a subsequent stage. Firstly, it is difficult for the Court at the stage of taking cognizance to find out whether the sanction is valid in all respects; and secondly, if the accused is to be barred from raising the question when he appears in Court in obedience to its summons great injustice would be done to him.¹² The matter came up for discussion in *Ram Pakar Singh v. State*¹⁴. The Allahabad High Court held that the sanction was required for the purpose of taking cognizance of the offence. Once it was done, its utility was exhausted, and it was no longer needed either during the enquiry into the guilt of the accused or for purposes of convicting him. In fact, what the Court was emphasising was the absence of any necessity on the part of prosecution to prove the validity of the sanction. As the Court pointed out in a later part of the decision, the presumption regarding the validity of the sanction could be rebutted by the accused, which meant, therefore, that the question regarding sanction would necessarily be considered by the Court, at whatever time during the trial the accused may choose to raise the objection. In the above case, the Court held that not only did the accused not lead any evidence to prove that the signature on the sanction was not that of the authority concerned but also he did not question the genuineness of the signature. In the absence of any controversy at all, the Court added, there was no need for the prosecution to have proved, before the Magistrate, the validity of the sanction by producing evidence to prove the signature. The question came up in another form, again, before the Allahabad High Court in *Budh Sagar Ram Udit v. State*¹⁵. In this case the Advocate for the accused, in the first stage of the trial, made a statement withdrawing the objection as regards the validity of the sanction and stated that it was valid. But later, at the time of defence, the validity was again questioned. The Special Judge who tried the case held that the second objection could not be taken and the question of sanction could be raised only at the time of cognizance. The High Court, allowing the appeal against the above ruling of the Special Judge, held that the case of *Ram Pakar Singh v. State*¹⁴ on which the Special Judge had somehow relied, clearly envisaged the possibility that at a subsequent stage after the cognizance had been taken, the accused could challenge the validity of the sanction and then the Court was bound to enquire into that question. The High Court also pointed out that the same inference followed from a perusal of *Bhagwan Sahai v. State of Punjab*¹⁶⁻¹⁷ wherein the Supreme Court went into the question of the validity of the sanction. If it was the law that the question cannot be raised once cognizance had been taken by the trial Judge, the Supreme Court would have said so, and not considered the question at all.¹⁸ This the Supreme Court did not do.

The question may best be summarized in the words of Nigam J.:

"It could never have been the intention of the Legislature that the question as regards the validity or sufficiency of the sanction should be decided against the accused in his absence without giving him an opportunity to press the contention on the point. Further, the question of validity of the sanction raises a question of jurisdiction and we are inclined to the view that the question as regards the jurisdiction of a Court to take cognizance of the particular matter, may be raised at any stage before the trial closes."¹⁹

Conclusion:—1. In conclusion, it may therefore be stated that section 6 of the Act differs materially from section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code, first, in that sanction is now required not only for public servants removable only with the sanction of the Central Government or the Provincial Government, but also for any public servant accused of an offence under sections 161 and 165 of the Indian Penal Code or section 5 of the Act. Secondly, it is not necessary under the Act that the public servant should be 'acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty' as it is, under section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

2. Section 6 protects only those public servants who were in office both on the date of the commission of the offence charged and the date when a Court is asked to take cognizance.

3. Further, the authority to grant the sanction would be the authority competent to remove him from service, and this aspect has to follow the principle laid down in Article 311 (1) of the Constitution of India. If such authority is not the same as, but is of equal rank as, the authority which appointed the public servant concerned, express delegation of such power to sanction is necessary. But where the authority granting the sanction is superior to that by which such sanction is normally to be given, no such delegation is necessary.

4. A subordinate officer, authorised under the Rules of Business framed under Articles 77 and 166 of the Constitution, can sign the sanction issued in the name of the President of India or the Governor of a State, and its validity cannot be attacked in a Court of law.

5. Where the services of a public servant permanently employed by a State Government are loaned to the Central Government, the authority to remove such public servant would be the State Government and not the Central Government.

6. The sanction issued under section 6 of the Act should be issued only after all the facts have been collected, and only after the sanctioning authority has fully applied its mind to the question of whether the public servant should be prosecuted or not. The grant of such sanction need not, however, be in any particular form.

7. Where additional charges are levelled against an accused public servant, a new sanction may be required only when such additional charges were based on facts not considered by the authority granting the sanction when the original sanction was granted.

8. Sanction in every case is a condition precedent to the filing of the complaint.

9. It follows that where the sanction accorded is defective, the proceedings become ab initio void, and a new sanction is necessary. The fresh proceedings would not attract 'the rule of double jeopardy, contained in Article 20 (2) of the Constitution of India.

10. It also follows that the question of the validity of a sanction can be raised at any stage of the proceedings, and as it goes to the root of the jurisdiction an objection based on want of sanction can be raised later even though waived earlier.

 C.A. No. 1540 of 1969.

Representation of the People Act (XLIII of 1951), section 80—Election petition—Burden of proof.

The Supreme Court has held in a number of cases that in an election petition the burden is on the petitioner to prove that the result of the election has been materially affected by (1) the improper reception, refusal or rejection of any vote or the reception of any vote which is void or (2) by any non-compliance with the provisions of the Act.

On the material on record in the present case, the High Court was right in concluding that it has not been shown that the result of the election had been materially affected by the casting of votes by persons whose names were added to the electoral roll after the expiry of the last date fixed for making nominations or by the alleged non-voting of electors whose names had been deleted after that date. The election petition only contains vague allegations in this regard.

In Maganlal Chhotabhai Desai v. Chandrakant Motilal, (1969) 1 S.C.J. 100 : A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 37, it was held that section 20 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act gives the tenant a general right of recovery of the overpaid rent within six months of the date of payment. Without prejudice to any other mode of recovery, the tenant may deduct the over-payment from any rent payable by him to the landlord. The deduction provided is one mode of recovery. If the amount is incapable of recovery because of the bar of limitation, it cannot be recovered by deduction. In other words the right of recovery by deduction is barred at the same time as the right of recovery by suit. If the tenant seeks recovery of the overpaid amount he must bring the suit or make deduction within six months.

The Court observed that the above decision was binding on it and that it did not feel called upon to refer the question to a larger Bench for reconsideration.

Union of India v. M/s. Rai Bahadur Shreeram Durga Prasad (P.), Ltd., (1969) 1 S.C. C. 91, followed. Contention that this decision should be reconsidered by a larger Bench was rejected.

A declaration which is in contravention of the Rules or the Forms prescribed under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, may be penalised under section 23 of that Act, but such contravention will not attract the provisions of the Sea Customs Act. Under section 23-A of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, only a breach of restrictions imposed by section 12 (1) of that Act is to be deemed to be contravention of restrictions imposed by section 19 of the Sea Customs Act. An incorrect declaration in contravention of the Rules made under section 27 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act is not to be deemed a contravention of any restriction imposed by section 19 of the Sea Customs Act. In such a case the imposition of the penalties under section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act would be totally unjustified.

V. P. Gindroniya v.

State of M. P.

C.A. No. 890 of 1967.

Madhya Pradesh Government Servants (Temporary and Quasi-Permanent Service) Rules (1960)—Suspension under, of a temporary public servant pending enquiry into charges against him—Effect —Contract of service if becomes suspended—Public servant concerned thereafter putting an end to the contract by notice under rule 12 (a) —Validity—Right of Government to proceed with the enquiry—Scope of rule 12 (a).

Three kinds of suspension are known to law. A public servant may be suspended as a mode of punishment or he may be suspended during the pendency of an enquiry against him if the order appointing him or statutory provisions governing his service provide for such suspension. Lastly, he may merely be forbidden from discharging his duties during the pendency of an enquiry against him, which act is also called suspension. The right to suspend as a measure of punishment as well as the right to suspend the contract of service during the pendency of an enquiry are both regulated by the contract of employment or the provisions regulating the conditions of service. But the last category of suspension referred to earlier is the right of the master to forbid his servant from doing the work which he had to do under the terms of the contract of service or the provisions governing his conditions of service, at the same time keeping in force the master's obligation under the contract. In other words, the master may ask his servant to refrain from rendering his service but he must fulfil his part of the contract, viz., pay the remuneration.

It is now well settled that the power to suspend, in the sense of a right to forbid an employee to work, is not an implied term in an ordinary contract between master and servant. Ordinarily, therefore, the absence of such a power either as an express term in the contract or in the rules framed under some statute would mean that an employer would have no power to suspend an employee of his and even if he does so in the sense that he forbids the employee to work, he will have to pay the employee's wages during the period of suspension. Where, however, there is power to suspend the order of suspension has the effect of temporarily suspending the relationship of master and servant with the consequence that the servant is not bound to render service and the master is not bound to pay. It is equally well settled that an order of interim suspension can be passed while an enquiry is pending, even though there is no such term in the contract but in such a case the employee would be entitled to his remuneration.

In the present case, the Madhya Pradesh Government Servants (Temporary and Quasi-Permanent Service) Rules do not provide for suspension during the pendency of an enquiry. Therefore the impugned order of suspension of the appellant cannot be considered as an order suspending the contract of service. It follows that when the appellant issued the notice terminating his services under rule 12 (a) during the pendency of the impugned order, the contract of service was in force and it was open to him to put an end to the same. It would follow that ever since the appellant's notice was received by the Government he was not in the service of the Government. Hence it was not open to the Government to proceed with the disciplinary proceedings thereafter.

There is hardly any room for dispute that the notice contemplated by the main clause (a) of rule 12 of the Madhya Pradesh Government Servants (Temporary and Quasi-Permanent Service) Rules can be given either by the Government or its temporary servant. The rule in question specifically says so.

Held on facts, the notice of termination of contract issued by the appellant to the Government conformed to the requirements of rule 12 (a) and that the High Court was wrong in holding contra.

Ashoka Marketing Ltd. v.

State of Bihar.

C.A. No. 2004 of 1966.

Bihar Sales Tax Act (XIX of 1959) as amended by Act (XX of 1962), section 20-A (3), (4) (5), (7) and (8)—The sub-sections are ultra vires State Legislature—Not saved by Entry 54, List II or Entries 6, 7 and 13 of List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution of India (1950).

Sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) of section 20-A of the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1959, are ultra vires, the State Legislature. As a corollary thereto sub-section (7) and (8) shall be deemed invalid.

A provision which enables the dealer to pass on the liability for payment of tax is incidental to legislation for sales tax. But it cannot be held that a provision under which a dealer is called upon to pay to the State an amount which has been collected by him erroneously or deliberately on a representation, express or implied, that an equal amount is payable by him under the Sales Tax Act, is a provision incidental to the power to "levy tax on sale or purchase of goods" within the meaning of Entry 54, List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. In effect the provision is one for levying an amount as tax which the State is incompetent to levy. A mere device cannot be permitted to defeat the provisions of the Constitution by clothing the claim in the form of a demand for depositing the money with the State which the dealer has collected, but which he was not entitled to collect.

Sub-section (8) of section 20-A does not alter the true nature of the demand or appropriation which can be made under sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) of section 20-A. The intention underlying sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) is to enable the State to collect from the dealer tax which the State is not entitled to levy and to appropriate it to itself except in the very rare cases in which the purchaser may approach the State and be able to satisfy that he has a claim, that the claim is in order, and that it is within limitation. Notwithstanding the addition of sub-section (8) the amount received by the State or appropriated by the State continues to have the character of a tax collected which the State is not entitled to collect.

The power to legislate in respect of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) of section 20-A does not also fall under Entries 6, 7 and 13 of List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution, expressly, nor can it be said that the power to legislate is necessarily incidental to the power contained in those Entries.

(Validity of sub-sections (1) and (2) of section 20-A was not challenged.).

Ganga Ram v.
The Union of India.
W.P. No. 124 of 1967.

Constitution of India (1950), Articles 14 and 16 (1)—Guarantee of equality of opportunity in matters of public employment—Scope—Direct recruitment and promotion to post of Grade I clerk in the accounts department of the Railway establishment—Provisions for selection and fixation of seniority contained in Indian Railway Establishment Manual—If violative of Articles 14 and 16.

Article 14 of the Constitution is an injunction to both the legislative and the executive organs of the State and other subordinate authorities not to deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws. Article 16 is only an instance of the general rule of equality laid down in Article 14. Sub-Article (1) of Article 16 guarantees to every citizen equality of opportunity in matters of public employment thereby serving to give effect to the equality before the law guaranteed by Article 14. The equality of opportunity in the matter of services undoubtedly takes within its fold all stages of service from initial appointment to its termination including promotion but it does not prohibit the prescription of reasonable rules for selection and promotion, applicable to all members of a classified group. Mere production of inequality is not enough to attract the constitutional inhibition because every classification is likely in some degree to produce some inequality. The State is legitimately empowered to frame rules of classification for securing the requisite standard of efficiency in services and the classification need not be scientifically perfect or logically complete. In applying the wide language of Articles 14 and 16 to concrete cases a doctrinaire approach should be avoided and the matter considered in a practical way, of course, without whittling down the equality clauses. The classification, in order to be outside the vice of inequality, must however, be founded on an intelligible differential which on rational grounds distinguishes persons grouped together from those left out. The differences which warrant a classification must be real and substantial and must bear a just and reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved.

The State which encounters diverse problems arising from a variety of circumstances is entitled to lay down conditions of efficiency and other qualification for securing the best service for being eligible for promotion in its different departments. In the present case the object which is sought to be achieved by the provisions contained in paras 48 and 49, Chapter I, Section B and paras 16 and 20 (b), Chapter II of the Indian Railways Establishment Manual, is the requisite efficiency in the accounts department of the Railway establishment. The departmental authority is the proper judge of its requirements. The direct recruits and the promotees to the post of Grade I clerks clearly constitute different classes and this classification is sustainable on intelligible differential which has a reasonable connection with the object of efficiency ought to be achieved. Promotion to Grade I is guided by the consideration of seniority cum-merit. It is, therefore, difficult to find fault with the provision which places in one group all those Grade II clerks who have qualified by passing the prescribed examination. The fact that the promotees from Grade II who have officiated for some time are not given the credit of this period when a permanent vacancy arises also does not attract the prohibition contained in Articles 14 and 16. It does not constitute any hostile discrimination and is neither arbitrary nor unreasonable.

contumacious or dishonest, or acted in conscious disregard of its obligation. Penalty will not also be imposed merely because it is lawful to do so. Whether penalty should be imposed for failure to perform a statutory obligation is a matter of discretion of the authority to be exercised judicially and on a consideration of all the relevant circumstances. Even if a minimum penalty is prescribed, the authority competent to impose the penalty will be justified in refusing to impose penalty, when there is a technical or venial breach of the provisions of the Act or where the breach flows a bona fide belief that the offender is not liable to act in the manner prescribed by the statute. Those in charge of the affairs of the Company in failing to register the Company as a dealer acted in the honest and genuine belief that the Company was not a dealer. Granting that they erred, no case for imposing penalty was made out.

Liability to pay sales tax is imposed by section 4 of the Act. Every dealer whose gross annual turnover exceeds Rs. 10,000, is liable to pay tax during the ten quarters in question. The expression "dealer" was defined at the relevant time as meaning :

" ' Dealer ' means any person who executes any contract or carries on the business of selling or supplying goods in Orissa whether for commission, remuneration or otherwise and includes any firm or Hindu joint family, and any society, club or association which sells or supplies goods to its members.

Explanation * * * * *

A person to be a dealer within the meaning of the Act must carry on the business of selling or supplying goods in Orissa. The expression "business" is not defined in the Act. But as observed by this Court in *State of Andhra Pradesh v. Abdul Bakhi and brothers*¹.

"The expression 'business' though extensively used is a word of indefinite import, in taxing statutes it is used in the sense of an occupation, or profession which occupies the time, attention and labour of a person, normally with the object of making profit. To regard an activity as business there must be a course of dealings, either actually continued or contemplated to be continued with a profit motive, and not for support or pleasure."

The sales tax authorities and the tribunal have held that the Company was carrying on business of selling or supplying materials to the contractors and with that view the High Court agreed. The Company purchased bricks manufactured by its own contractors and sold the bricks to the building contractors at a flat 30 per cent. premium over the purchase price in the case of "second class bricks" and 25 per cent. premium in the case of "first class bricks". Steel, cement and other materials were initially supplied at 3½ per cent. premium over the purchase price paid by the Company. It was contended on behalf of the Company that merely because the price charged to the contractors exceeded the price paid by the Company for acquiring the materials, motive of the Company to carry on business in building materials for profit, cannot be inferred. The Company, it is true, maintained no separate accounts relating to the expenditure incurred by it for overhead and other charges in respect of those materials. Before the sales tax authorities Counsel for the Company also conceded that the Company had not maintained separate accounts from which it could be proved that the transactions of supply of bricks, cement, steel and other commodities resulted in no profit. The High Court observed :

"It is the Stores Department of the company as a whole which deals with the purchase, storage and sale of all the goods required both for acquisition and issue of materials to be used for the construction and operation work of the Company. * * * the Company had to construct not only the buildings but also roads railways, etc., acquire machinery and perform other multifarious activities connected with the establishment of steel plants and construction of the township.

There is nothing in the statement to show that the Company had at any time even contemplated the allocation of the total expenditure incurred for the maintenance of its Stores Department between the expenditure incurred in respect of the goods namely bricks, cement, steel, etc., and other goods. If such allocation was not even contemplated, it will be unreasonable to say that when these goods were sold to the building contractors at the prices mentioned above, the intention of the Company was merely to utilise the difference in price to meet the overhead charges in respect of these articles and that there was no profit-making motive."

It is unfortunate that in submitting the statement of case the Tribunal stated no facts at all, and merely submitted the question which was submitted by the Company and the question which, in the view of the Tribunal, arose out of the order. Even in the order deciding the appeal, the facts found on which the conclusion was based were not clearly set out. The Tribunal observed that though the primary object of the Company was to establish a steel plant, the Memorandum authorised the Company to carry on "any trade or business" that it thought would be conducive to its interest, observed the Tribunal:

"Judged in this light one cannot find anything wrong if in the initial stages when construction works were going on, the Company thought it prudent that instead of keeping its employees idle and bearing the cost of maintenance without any return, utilised them in some subsidiary business which would promote the interest of the Company and bring some return. With that end in view the company could as well have brought contractors to manufacture bricks in its lands, purchased the same from them, purchased cement, coal and other materials from dealers, opened a stores department and kept those materials so procured in its stores and thereafter effected sales of the materials to outsiders including its contractors. The Company knew that for speedy construction of its buildings and factory the contractors would require these materials and so the Company would not lose if it entered into such business. Rather that business would be in the interest of the Company. If the Company had no idea to enter into any business, there was no reason why it should have brought contractors to manufacture bricks, purchased the entire stock from them, stocked the same and thereafter sell the same to its building contractors."

But in so observing a very important piece of evidence appears to have been ignored by the Tribunal. Annexed to the form of the tender submitted by the contractors there are certain "general rules and directions for the guidance of contractors." Paragraphs 8 stated:

"The memorandum of work tendered for, and the schedule of materials to be supplied by the H.S. Ltd., and their issue rates, shall be filled in and completed in the office of the Divisional Officer before the tender form is issued. If a form is issued to an intending tenderer without having been so filled in as completed he shall request the office to have this done before he completes and delivers his tender."

Then following the conditions of contract of which condition No. 10 is material; it states—

"If the specification or estimates of the work provides for the use of any special description of materials to be supplied from the Engineer-in-Charge's store, or if it is required that the contractor shall use certain stores to be provided by the Engineer-in-Charge (such materials or stores, and the prices to be charged therefor as hereinafter mentioned being so far as practicable for the convenience of the contractor, but not so as in any way to control the meaning of effect of this contract specified in the schedule or memorandum hereto annexed), the contractor shall be supplied with such materials and stores as required from time to time to be used by him for the purpose of the contract only, and the value of the full quantity of materials and stores so supplied at the rates specified in the said schedule or memorandum may be set-off or deducted from any sums then due, or thereafter to become due to the contractor under the contract, or otherwise or against or from the security deposit. All materials supplied to the contractor shall remain the absolute property of the Company, and shall not on any account be removed from the site of the work, and shall at all times be open to inspection by the Engineer-in-Charge. Any such materials unused and in perfectly good condition at the time of the completion or determination of the contract shall be returned to the Engineer-in-Charge's store, if by a notice in writing under his hand he shall so require ; * * *

Attached to the tender form is the schedule which recites :

“ Recovery of rates of materials to be supplied by H.S.Ltd., for the work of :

(1) Construction of brick masonry compound wall around plant area. Northern section Length 2.4 miles.

(2) Construction of brick masonry compound wall around plant area. Southern section Length 2.30 miles.

(3) Construction of brick masonry compound wall around plant area. Marshalling yard section Length 4.15 miles.”

It is followed by a table which sets out the Serial No. of the articles to be supplied, description of materials unit, rate and place of delivery.

It is clear from the terms of the tender and the schedule annexed thereto that the Company was to charge certain rates for the materials to be supplied by it. One of the contracts which has been produced before this Court states under the head “ Rate ”: Rs. 5.94 + 3½ per cent. storage charges against “ cement in bags ”, Rs. 800.00 + 3½ per cent. storage charges against “ structural steel and M.S. rods ” and “ Rs. 41.25 for 1000 bricks ” against “ first class bricks ”. Apparently 3½ per cent. over the specified rate was agreed to be paid by the contractors as storage charges in respect of cement and structural steel and M.S. rods. No specific percentage was set out in respect of the bricks and an inclusive price was made chargeable.

Relying upon the terms of the schedule, Counsel for the Company contends that the contractors and the Company expressly agreed that 3½ per cent. over the agreed price of the goods was chargeable as storage charges. It is common ground that the rate mentioned against cement and structural steel is the price at which the goods were purchased by the Company. If the Company was charging a fixed percentage on the price paid by it for procuring such goods for storage and other incidental charges, it would be difficult to resist the conclusion that the Company was not carrying on the business of selling cement and structural steel. There is of course no statement in the schedule that the price charged by the Company in excess of the price paid by the Company to its contractors for bricks was in respect of storage charges.

But neither the Tribunal nor the High Court has referred to this important piece of evidence and we are unable to decide these appeals unless we have an additional statement of facts in the light of the relevant evidence as to whether the excess charged over and above the price which the Company paid for procuring Cement and Steel (expressly called storage charge) and bricks was intended to be profit. If the Company agreed to charge a fixed percentage above the cost price, for storage, insurance and rental charges, it may be reasonably inferred that the Company did not carry on business of supplying materials as a part of business activity with a view to making profit.

The Tribunal's statement of case is held and in recording its findings the Tribunal has ignored a very important piece of evidence. To enable us to answer the questions referred, it is necessary that the Tribunal should be called upon to submit a supplementary statement of the case on the questions whether the Company charged any profit apart from the storage charges for supplying cement and structural steel, and whether the difference between the price charged to the contractors and the price paid by the Company to its suppliers for bricks was not in respect of storage and other incidental charges. The Tribunal to submit the supplementary statement of case to this Court, within three months from the date on which the papers reach the Tribunal.

PRESENT :—J.C. SHAH, Acting Chief Justice, V. RAMASWAMI AND A.N. GROVER, JJ.

v.

Aziz Ahmad Khan and another

.. Respondents.

Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (XXVII of 1949), section 38 (1) and the Administration of Evacuee Property Act (XXXI of 1950), sections, 2 (d) (i) and 40 (1)—Scope—"Evacuee", meaning of—Transferor becoming an evacuee after the transfer—Custodian declining to confirm the transfer—Transfer, if has become ineffective.

Under the Administration of Evacuee Property ordinance as well as under the Act, transfer of property was ineffective unless confirmed by the Custodian even if it was made by a person who became an evacuee after the date of the transfer. It was not necessary that the property should have been declared or notified to be evacuee property before the aforesaid provisions were attracted. Under section 40 (1) of the Act, the transfer was to be ineffective in both eventualities ; (1) if the transferor became an evacuee within the meaning of section 2 after the transfer or (2) if the transferor's property had been declared or notified to be evacuee property. Aziz Ahmed Khan became an evacuee within the meaning of the definition of "evacuee". It was necessary, therefore, for the appellant to have obtained the confirmation of the custodian in respect of the transfer which had been made by Aziz Ahmed Khan in his favour of the properties in question. The Additional custodian declined to confirm the transfer and thus the condition precedent for the transfer to become effective remained unsatisfied. It was incumbent on the appellant to obtain the confirmation order before he could ask for any further steps to be taken by the Courts in the matter of execution and registration of the transfer deed. Under section 39 of the Central Ordinance XXVII of 1949, no document could be registered of the nature mentioned in section 38 unless the custodian had confirmed the transfer. Similar provisions were contained in section 40 of the Central Act XXXI of 1950. The prayer in the Execution Application that the Court might grant assistance "by execution of sale deed under the enabling para. 5 of the decree" could not be entertained or acceded to by the Executing Court.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Decree dated the 2nd May, 1961 of the Allahabad High Court in Execution First Appeal No. 10 of 1954.

Naunit Lal, Advocate, for Appellant.

Dr. V.A. Seyid Muhammad, Senior Advocate (S.P. Nayar, Advocate, with him), for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is an appeal by Special Leave from a judgment of the Allahabad High Court confirming the order of the District Judge dismissing an Execution Application filed by the appellant.

On 16th June, 1948, the appellant entered into an agreement with Aziz Ahmed Khan respondent No. 1 for the sale of certain properties comprising houses and plots in the town of Bareilly. The sale consideration of Rs. 1,45,000 was stated to have been already paid by the appellant to the vendor. Subsequently disputes arose between the vendor and the appellant regarding the completion of the sale. These disputes were referred to the arbitration of Shri R.R. Agarwal who gave an award on 30th August, 1949, which was made a rule of the Court on 30th November, 1949. A decree on the basis of the award was granted in favour of the appellant.

Sometime after 22nd November, 1949, the vendor Aziz Ahmed Khan left India for Pakistan. On 7th December, 1950, the appellant moved the Deputy Custodian (Judicial) Meerut Circle for confirmation of the transfer under section 38 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (XXVII of 1949) or under section 40 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 (XXXI of 1950). On 9th May, 1951, the Deputy Custodian accorded confirmation. The Additional Custodian, however, took suo motu action in exercise of his revisional jurisdiction and set aside the order passed by the Deputy Custodian. On 4th April, 1952, the appellant filed an application for execution of the decree passed on the basis of the award. On 10th May, 1952, objections were filed on behalf of the Custodian to the execution. The District Judge held that the award made on 30th August, 1949, could not have the effect of transferring the properties as the approval of the Collector had not been obtained under the notification dated 29th July, 1949, which had been issued under section 26 of U.P. Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance I of 1949 and that on the date of the decree the transfer of properties could not be effected unless confirmed by the Custodian. It was held by him that no interest by way of charge in favour of the appellant had been created on the properties in dispute. He was further of the view that section 17 (1) of the Central Act XXXI of 1950 created a bar to execution of the decree. The Execution application was consequently dismissed.

The appellant filed an appeal to the High Court which was dismissed. Then the appeal came up for hearing before this Court on 22nd February, 1968, it was considered expedient to have further findings on certain points. The following questions were therefore framed and remitted to the High Court for that purpose.

(1) the date on which Aziz Ahmed Khan migrated to Pakistan.

(2) Whether the properties of Aziz Ahmed Khan vested in the Custodian of Evacuee Property under U.P. Ordinance I of 1949 or Central Ordinance XII of 1949 as made applicable to the State of U.P. by U.P. Ordinance XX of 1949 or under the Central Ordinance XXVII of 1949 or under Central Act of 1950.

The High Court remitted these matters to the District Judge. His finding on the first question was that Aziz Ahmed Khan had migrated to Pakistan on some date after 22nd November, 1949. On the second question he found that Aziz Ahmed Khan's properties did not vest in the Custodian of Evacuee property under any of the Ordinances or under the Central Act XXXI of 1950. Certain additional evidence was produced before the High Court. The High Court expressed agreement with the conclusions of the District Judge on both the points. It may be mentioned that on certain subsidiary points the learned District Judge had also found that it had not been proved that a valid declaration under section 7 (1) of the Central Ordinance XXVII of 1949 or of the corresponding provision in the Central Act XXXI of 1950 was made for declaring Aziz Ahmed Khan an evacuee. In the opinion of the learned Judge such a declaration was necessary if his properties were to be declared evacuee properties.

In view of the findings which have been returned by the High Court on the points referred, it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that there could be no bar to the execution of the decree which was based on the award. It is pointed out that on the conclusions at which the High Court has now arrived the properties of Aziz Ahmed Khan were never declared to be evacuee properties either under the Central Ordinance XXVII of 1949 or the Central Act XXXI of 1950, and they could not vest in the Custodian unless they had been declared after appropriate proceedings. It is urged that the decree in favour of the appellant was of the nature of a decree passed in a suit for specific performance. The Court could and should have executed a conveyance in favour of the appellant since Aziz Ahmed Khan was no longer available or was refusing to do so and the confirmation of the Custodian could be obtained before the registration was effected. According to the Counsel for the appellant the additional Custodian had declined to confirm the transfer at the previous stage because there was no deed of sale or transfer.

Counsel for the respondent has drawn attention to a decision of this Court in *Azimunissa and others v. The Deputy Custodian Evacuee Properties, District Deoria and others*¹, in which the effect of the declaration of U.P. Ordinance I of 1949 to be invalid by the Courts came up for consideration, as also of the subsequent evacuee legislation namely, Central Ordinance XXVII of 1949, Central Act XXXI of 1950 and the Administration of Evacuee Property (Amendment) Act, 1960. It appears to have been held in that case that the property which had vested under the U.P. Ordinance I of 1949 continued to vest in the Custodian notwithstanding the fact that High Court of Allahabad in *Azimunissa and others v. Assistant Custodian*², held the vesting to be invalid. This was the result of the introduction of section 3 (2-2)] in the Central Act of 1931 by the Central Amendment Act I of 1960. In the present case, however, Aziz Ahmed Khan migrated to Pakistan after 22nd November, 1949. At that point of time it was Central Ordinance XXVII of 1949 which was in force. It appears highly doubtful that the respondent could take advantage of the provisions of automatic vesting contained in U.P. Ordinance I of 1949.

There is, however, a serious hurdle in the way of the appellant even when the provisions of central Ordinance XXVII of 1949 or the Central Act XXXI of 1950 are taken into consideration. Section 38 (1) of that Ordinance provided that no transfer of any right or interest in any property after the 14th day of August, 1947 by or on behalf of an evacuee or by or on behalf of a person who had become an evacuee after the date of the transfer shall be effective so as to confer any rights or remedies on the parties to such transfer unless it was confirmed by the Custodian. The provisions of section 40 of the Central Act XXXI of 1950 were similar though there was a certain change in the language. Sub-section (1) of that section was in the following terms :

“ No transfer made after the 14th day of August, 1947, but before the 7th day of May, 1954, by or on behalf of any person in any manner whatsoever of any property belonging to him shall be effective so as to confer any rights or remedies in respect of the transfer on the parties thereto or any person claiming under them or either of them, if, at any time after the transfer, the transferor becomes an evacuee within the meaning of section 2 or the property of the transferor is declared or notified to be evacuee property within the meaning of this Act, unless the transfer is confirmed by the Custodian in accordance with the provisions of this Act.”

Under both these enactments transfer of property was ineffective unless confirmed by the Custodian even if it was made by a person who became an evacuee after the date of the transfer. It was not necessary that the property should have been declared or notified to be evacuee property before the aforesaid provisions were attracted. Under section 40 (1) of the Act, the transfer was to be ineffective in both eventualities ; (1) if the transferor became an evacuee within the meaning of section 2 after the transfer or (2) if the transferor's property had been declared or notified to be evacuee property. It is abundantly clear that if Aziz Ahmed Khan became an evacuee even after the transfer, section 38 (1) of the Ordinance and section 40 (1) of the Act became applicable. One of the meanings of the word “ evacuee ” as given in the definition in section 2 (d) of the Ordinance and of the Act was :

1. (1962) 1 S.C.J. 324 : (1961) 2 S.C.R. 91. 2. A.I.R. 1957 All. 561.

Section 2 (d) (i) "evacuee" means any person, who, on account of the setting up of the Dominions of India and Pakistan or on account of civil disturbances or the fear of such disturbances leaves or has, on or after the 1st day of March, 1947, left any place in a Province for any place outside the territories now forming part of India."

Aziz Ahmed Khan became an evacuee within the meaning of the above definition. It was necessary, therefore, for the appellant to have obtained the confirmation of the Custodian in respect of the transfer which had been made by Aziz Ahmed Khan in his favour of the properties in question. The Additional Custodian declined to confirm the transfer and thus the condition precedent for the transfer to become effective remained unsatisfied. It is significant that even in the award which formed the basis of the decree it had been provided "the second party (Aziz Ahmed Khan) is hereby directed to execute the necessary documents in respect of the transfer by him of the properties referred to above within one month from the date of the receipt of the confirmation or approval according to law failing which the first party will, at his option, get the same executed and registered through Court on the basis of this award which would be made a rule of the Court. Therefore according to the award the confirmation or approval of the Custodian had to be obtained before the transfer documents were to be executed and completed in accordance with law. It was incumbent on the appellant to obtain the confirmation order before he could ask for any further steps to be taken by the Courts in the matter of execution and registration of the transfer deed. Under section 39 of the Central Ordinance XXVII of 1949 no document could be registered of the nature mentioned in section 38 unless the Custodian had confirmed the transfer. Similar provisions were contained in section 40 of the Central Act XXXI of 1950. The prayer in the Execution Application that the Court might grant assistance "by execution of sale deed under the enabling para 5 of the Decree" could not be entertained or acceded to by the Executing Court.

There is one matter, however, on which we would like to express no view and leave it open to the appellant to take such steps as he may be advised. Para. 6 of the award which became part of the decree was as follows :—

"The claim of the first party for this transfer and exchange consideration in Rs. 1,50,000 (one lac fifty thousand) on account of all principal money and interest and other expenses calculated to date against the second party Sri Aziz Ahmed Khan, which the second party will pay with interest at 12 per cent. per annum in case the transaction and transfer of the properties referred to above in favour of the first party Sri Sardana is not confirmed or approved in any way and for any other reasons whatsoever.

Sri Sardana will force the payments against the properties referred to above and these properties are here by charged with this claim and Sri Sardana will have his remedies to enforce the payment of the above claim against all other properties of the second party and also against his person."

The High Court in the judgment under appeal dealt with this question as if the charge was on the evacuee property. On the reasoning which has been pressed before us about the necessity of a declaration under the provisions of Central Ordinance XXVII of 1949 or Central Act XXXI of 1950 this part of the judgment does not appear to be correct. We would, however, refrain from expressing any final opinion as in fairness to both sides this question should be left for being decided, if taken, in appropriate proceedings including proceedings before the Executing Court.

With the above observations the appeal is dismissed but in view of the entire circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), as amended by the Punjab Pre-emption Amendment Act, 1960 and by Punjab Act (XIII of 1964), section 15 (2)—Interpretation—“In the son or daughter of such female,” meaning of—Right of pre-emption, if would vest in the son or daughter of the husband from another wife—Retroactive intention, if could be attributed to the legislature.

A close analysis of paragraphs (First) and (Secondly) of clause (b) of sub-section (2) of section 15 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act before the amendment introduced by Punjab Act XIII of 1964 would demonstrate that the Amendment Act of 1964 was merely of a clarificatory or declaratory nature. Even in the absence of the words [“husband of the ”] which were inserted by the Amendment Act of 1964 between the words “such” and “female” in section 15 (2) (b) the only possible interpretation and meaning of the words “in the son or daughter of such female” could have reference to and cover the son or daughter of the husband of the female. The entire scheme of sub-section (2) section 15 is that the right of pre-emption has been confined to the issues of the last male holder from whom the property which has been sold came by inheritance. The predominant idea seems to be that the property must not go outside the line of the last male holder and the right has been given to his male lineal descendants. It would follow that under clause (b) the right of pre-emption would vest firstly in the son or daughter of the husband of the female meaning. There by either her own off-spring from the husband whom she has succeeded or the son or daughter of that husband even from another wife. In view of this, there is no difficulty in attributing a retroactive intention to the legislature when the Amendment Act of 1964 was enacted.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Decree dated the 31st August 1965 of the Punjab High Court in Letter Patent Appeal No. 91 of 1961.

Harbans Singh, Advocate, for Appellants.

Bishan Narain, Senior Advocate (S. K. Mehta, Advocate of M/s. K. L. Mehta & Co., with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is an appeal by Special Leave from a Judgment of a division bench of the Punjab High Court decreeing the suit filed by the respondent for possession of certain land by pre-emption.

The facts may be shortly stated: Santa Singh was the owner of some land in village Samadh Bhai, tehsil Moga. He died leaving a widow Shrimati Sobhi. He also left a daughter Shrimati Jai Kaur from his other wife. On 3rd February, 1958, Smt. Sobhi sold 73 kanals 14 marlas of land to the appellants, the sale consideration mentioned in the sale deed being Rs. 8,000. Smt. Jai Kaur filed a suit for possession by pre-emption of the land which had been sold by Smt. Sobhi. According to her a consideration of Rs. 4,000 only had been paid by the vendee. The trial Court decreed the suit in May, 1959 granting a decree for possession on payment of Rs. 6,500 together with costs. The Second Additional Judge to whom an appeal was taken dismissed it. In the High Court the learned Single Judge took the view that Smt. Jai Kaur not being the daughter of the vendor Smt. Sobhi had no right of pre-emption under section 15 (2) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913 as amended by the Punjab Pre-emption Amendment Act, 1960. The suit was dismissed. Smt. Jai Kaur filed an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent of the High Court. Relying on an amendment made by the Punjab Pre-emption Amendment Act, 1964 in the first paragraph of clause (b) of sub-section (2) of section 15 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, hereinafter called the Act, the Division Bench reversed the judgment of the Single Judge and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

The relevant provisions of the statute may now be noticed together with the amendments made in 1960 and 1964. Section 15 of the Act was substituted by section 4 of the Amendment Act, 1960. According to the substituted section the right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land and village immoveable property shall vest thus:

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1),—

(a) where the sale is by a female of land or property to which she has succeeded through her father or brother or the sale in respect of such land or property is by the son or daughter of such female, after inheritance, the right of pre-emption shall vest,—

(i) if the sale is by such female, in her brother or brother's son;

(ii) if the sale is by the son or daughter of such female, in the mothers' brother or the mother's brother's sons of the vendor or vendors;”

By the Amendment Act, 1964 in the first paragraph of section 15 (2) (b) between the words “such” and “female” the words “husband of the” were inserted. The result was that after the amendment the portion of clause (b) relevant for our purpose was to read as follows:

“FIRST, in the son or daughter of such husband of the female.”

Now if the Amendment Act of 1964 could be regarded as having retrospective operation so as to affect pending proceedings there can be no dispute that the judgment of the division bench was right and must be affirmed. The contention which has been raised on behalf of the appellants is that there is no indication in the Amendment Act of 1964 that it was to have retrospective operation and therefore the amendment made by it should be deemed to be only prospective. It may be mentioned that by section 6 of the Amendment Act of 1960 a new section 31 was inserted in the Act. That section provided;

“no Court shall pass a decree in a suit for pre-emption whether instituted before or after the commencement of the Punjab Pre-emption Amendment Act of 1960 which is inconsistent with the provisions of the said Act.”

In *Ram Sarup v. Munshi and others*¹, this Court held that the language used in section 31 was comprehensive enough so as to require an appellate Court to give effect to the substantive provisions of the Amending Act whether the appeal before it was one against a decree granting pre-emption or one refusing that relief. Although section 31 was inserted in the Act for all times the phrasology employed therein does not show that its language was meant to cover those amendments which would be made subsequent to the Amendment Act of 1960. The word “said” can have reference in the context only to the enactment of 1960 and to no other. It would not be legitimate for the Courts to give an extended effect to a provision which has retrospective operation unless the language used and words employed warranted such a course being followed. That does not appear to be the case here.

It appears to us that the Amendment Act of 1964 was merely of a clarificatory or declaratory nature. Even in the absence of the words which were inserted by the Amendment Act of 1964 in section 15 (2) (b) the only possible interpretation and meaning of the words “in the son or daughter of such female” could have reference to and cover the son or daughter of the husband of the female. The entire scheme of sub-section (2) of section 15 is that the right of pre-emption has been confined to the issues of the last male holder from whom the property which has been sold came by inheritance. Looking at clause (a) of sub-section (2) where the property which has been sold has come to the female from her father or brother by succession the right of pre-emption has been given to her brother or brother's son. As has been observed in *Mota Singh v. Prem Parkash Kaur and others*¹, the predominant idea seems to be that the property must not go outside the line of the last male holder and the right has been given to his male lineal descendants. Where the sale is by the son or the daughter of such female the right is given to the mother's brother or their sons. The principle which has been kept in view is that the person on whom the right of pre-emption is conferred must be a male lineal descendant of the last male holder of the property sold. This is so with regard to clause (a) of sub-section (2). Coming to clause (b) where the sale is by a female of land or property to which she has succeeded through her husband or through her son in case the son has inherited the same from his father the right of pre-emption is to vest firstly in the son or daughter of such female and secondly, in the husband's brother or husband's brother's son of such female. Now if the son or daughter of the female who has sold the property could refer to her son or daughter from a husband other than the one from whom the property devolved on her, it would be contrary to the scheme and purpose of sub-section (2) which essentially is to vest the right of pre-emption in the lineal descendants of the last male holder. Similarly it is unthinkable that a husband's brother or husband's brother's son should have reference to a husband to whom the property never belonged. In other words it could never be intended that if a female has had a previous husband who has either died or with whom the marriage has been dissolved and the female has remarried and succeeded to the property of her second husband the brother or the brother's son of her previous husband should be able to claim the right of pre-emption when they had nothing whatsoever to do with the property sought to be pre-empted. If would follow that under clause (b) the right of pre-emption would vest firstly in the son or daughter of the husband of the female meaning thereby either her own off-spring from the husband whom she has succeeded or the son or daughter of that husband even from another wife.

If the above discussion is kept in view there is no difficulty in attributing a retroactive intention to the legislature when the Amendment Act of 1964 was enacted. It is well settled that if a statute is curative or merely declares the previous law retroactive operation would be more rightly ascribed to it than the legislation which may prejudicially affect past rights and transactions. We are in entire agreement with the following view expressed in a recent full bench decision of the Punjab High Court in *Moti Ram v. Bakhwant Singh and others*², in which a similar point came up for consideration:

"A close analysis of paragraphs (First) and (Secondly) of clause (b) of sub-section (2) of section 15 before the amendment introduced by Punjab Act XIII of 1964 would demonstrate that a son of the husband of a female vendor though not born from her womb would be entitled to pre-empt, particularly when the husband's brother and even the son of the husband's brother of that female are accorded the right of pre-emption. To reiterate, the right of pre-emption is accorded manifestly on the principle of consanguinity, the property of the female vendor being that of her husband, and there is no reason why the step-son should be excluded and the nephew of the husband included. From this alone it must be inferred that the Legislature had intended to include a step-son and consequently retrospective operation had to be given to the amending Act as such a construction appears to be in consonance and harmony with the purpose of the Act".

The result, therefore, is that the respondent was entitled to exercise her right of pre-emption under paragraph First of clause (b) of sub-section (2) of section 15 even before the amendment made in 1964. At any rate, whatever doubts existed they were removed by the Amendment Act of 1964 which must be given retrospective operation.

1. I.L.R. (1961) Punj. 614, 627.

2. I.L.R. (1968) 1 Punj. 104, 120.

The appeal consequently fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (XCIX of 1958), sections 2 (12) and 2 (22)—Scope—"To cultivate personally," meaning of—Idol, if is capable of cultivating the land personally.

Bombay Public Trusts Act (XXIX of 1959), section 2 (18)—Scope—"Trustee"—Definition of—The manager of the Sansthan (idol), if falls within the definition of "trustee."

It is well-known that when property is given absolutely for the worship of an idol it vests in the idol itself as a jurisdic person. The question, however, is whether the idol is capable of cultivating the land personally.

It is difficult to accept the suggestion that the idol would be in the same position as a minor and therefore it can certainly cultivate the land personally within the meaning of section 2 (12). Physical or mental disability as defined by section 2 (22) lays emphasis on the words "personal labour or supervision." The dominant idea of anything done personally or person is that the thing must be done by the person himself and not by or through some one else. In other words the intention is that the cultivation of the land concerned must be by natural persons and not by legal persons.

Held also that, In the present case, the Sansthan is a private trust and is not governed by the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act. The distinction between a manager or a Shebait of an idol and a trustee where a trust has been created is well recognised. The properties of the trust in law vest in the trustee whereas in the case of an idol or a Sansthan they do not vest in the manager or the Shebait. It is the deity or the Sansthan which owns and holds the properties. It is only the possession and the management which vest in the manager. The manager or the Wahiwardar of the Shansthan cannot, therefore, fall within the definition of the word "trustee" as given in section 2 (18) of the Bombay Public Trusts Act.

M. S. K. Sastri and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 5.

M. Veerappa, Advocate, for Respondent No. 4.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is an appeal by Special Leave from a judgment of the High Court of Bombay dismissing a petition under Article 227 of the Constitution which had been filed by appellant Sansthan.

The appellant is a private religions Trust, which is managed by Laxman Anant Mulay who is described as a Wahiwardar (Manager). The main source of income for performing the several acts including the daily worship of the family deity (Shri Kalanka Devi is stated to be derived from endowed agricultural land. Respondent No. 4 in the tenant is held survey No. 94 with an area of 30 acres 8 gunthas in Mouza Malrajura, districts Akola. On 30th January, 1961, a notice was served on behalf of the appellant on Respondent No. 4 under the provisions of section 38 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, hereinafter called the Act. It was mentioned in the notice that an earlier notice under section 9 (i) of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act had been served in the year 1955 that the Sansthan required to aforesaid field for personal cultivation and, therefore, he should give up possession. Those proceedings were pending but a notice under section 38 of the Act was given to terminate the tenancy without prejudice to the previous proceedings. As the notice was not complied with an application was filed on behalf of the appellant under section 36 of the Act for possession which was opposed by respondent No. 4. The Naib Tehsildar rejected the application on the ground that the Sansthan was not a landholder who could cultivate the land personally. His order was confirmed by the Sub-Divisional Officer and by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal to whom appeals were taken. The appellant ultimately filed a petition under Article 227 of the Constitution before the High Court which, as stated before, was dismissed.

The only point which has to be determined is whether the Sansthan could take advantage of the provisions contained in the Act by which possession can be claimed from the tenant on the ground that it is required for personal cultivation. Section 2 (12) of the Act defines the words "to cultivate personally" in the following manner:

"Section 2 (12) "to cultivate personally" means to cultivate on one's own account—

- (i) by one's own labour, or
- (ii) by the labour of any member of one's family, or
- (iii) under the personal supervision of one-self or of any member of one's family by hired labour or by servants on wages payable in cash or kind but not in crop share;

Explanation I.—A widow or a minor or a person who is subject to any physical or mental disability, or a serving member of the armed forces shall be deemed to cultivate the land personally if it is cultivated by her or his servants or by hired labourer;

Explanation II......"

According to section 2 (22) the "physical or mental disability" means physical or mental disability by reason of which the person subject to such disability is incapable of cultivating land by personal labour or supervision. The word "tenant" is defined by section 2 (32) as meaning a person who holds land on lease including a person who is deemed to be a tenant under sections 6, 7 or 8 and a person who is a protected lessee or occupancy tenant. It is provided that the word "landlord" shall be construed accordingly. Section 38 deals with termination of tenancy by landlord for cultivating land personally. It says that after giving notice to a tenant in writing at any time on or before 15th February, 1961, and making an application for possession under section 36 on or before 31st March, 1961, the landlord may terminate the tenancy other than an occupancy tenancy if the landlord bona fide requires the land for cultivating it personally. Sub-section (3) gives the conditions subject to which the tenancy can be terminated.

Now it is well-known that when property is given absolutely for the worship of an idol it vests in the idol itself as a juristic person. As pointed out in Mukherjee's Hindu Law of Religious and Charitable Trust at pages 142-143, this is view in accordance with the Hindu ideas and has been uniformly accepted in a long series of judicial decisions. The idol is capable of holding property in the same way as

1] a natural person. "It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir." The question, however, is whether the idol is capable of cultivating the land personally. The argument raised on behalf of the appellant is that under Explanation 1 in section 2 (12) of the Act a person who is subject to any physical or mental disability shall be deemed to cultivate the land personally if it is cultivated by the servants or by hired labourer. In other words an idol or a Sansthan that would fall within the meaning of the word "person" can well be regarded to be subject to a physical or mental disability and land can be cultivated on its behalf by servants or hired labourers. It is urged that in Explanation 1 the idol would be in the same position as a minor and it can certainly cultivate the land personally within the meaning of section 2 (12). It is difficult to accept the suggestion that the case of the appellant would fall within Explanation 1 in section 2 (12). Physical or mental disability as defined by section 2 (22) lays emphasis on the words "personal labour or supervision." As has been rightly pointed out in *Shri Kesheoraj Deo Sansthan, Karanja v. Bafurao Deoba and others*¹, in which an identically similar point came up for consideration, the dominating idea of anything done personally or person is that the thing must be done by the person himself and not by or through some one else. In our opinion the following passage in that judgment at page 593 explains the whole position correctly:

"It should thus appear that the legislative intent clearly is that in order to claim a cultivation as a personal cultivation there must be established a direct nexus between the person who makes such a claim, and the agricultural processes or activities carried on the land. In other words, all the agricultural operations, though allowed to be done through hired labour or workers must be under the direct supervision, control, or management of the landlord. It is in that sense that the words "personal supervision" must be understood. In other words, the requirement of personal supervision under the third category of personal cultivation provided for in the definition does not admit of an intermediary between the landlord and the labourer, who can act as agent of the landlord for supervising the operations of the agricultural worker. If that is not possible in the case of one landlord, we do not see how it is possible in the case of another landlord merely because the landlord in the latter case is a juristic person."

In other words the intention is that the cultivation of the land concerned must be by natural persons and not by legal persons.

It has next been contended that in the provisions of the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, public trusts of charitable nature were included among those who could claim possession from a tenant on the ground of personal cultivation. It is not possible to see how the provisions of a repealed statute which was no longer in force, after the enactment of the Act, could be of any avail to the appellant. The decision in *Ishwardas v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal and others*², has also been referred to by the Counsel for the appellant. In that case it was said that under section 2 (18) of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, a trustee has been defined as meaning a person in whom either alone or in association with other persons the trust property is vested and includes a manager. In view of this definition the properties of the trusts vest in the managing trustee and he is the landlord under clause 32 of section 2 of the Act. As he is the landlord, he can ask for a surrender from the tenant of the lands of the trust "to cultivate personally." In the present case it is common ground that the Sansthan is a private trust and is not governed by the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act. The manager or the Wahiwardar of the Sansthan cannot, therefore, fall within the definition of the word "trustee" as given in section 2 (18) of that Act. It may be mentioned that in *Ishwardas case*², the Court refrained from expressing any opinion on the question whether a manager or a Shebait of the properties of an idol or the manager of the Sansthan can or cannot apply for surrender by a tenant of lands for personal cultivation. The distinction between a manager or a Shebait of an idol and a trustee where a trust has been created is well recognised. The properties of the trust in law vest in the trustee whereas in the case of an idol or a Sansthan they do not vest in the manager or the Shebait. It is the deity or the Sansthan which owns and holds the properties. It is only the possession and the management which vest in the manager.

1. (1964) Mah.L.J. 589, 593.

2. (1968) 3 S.C.R. 441 : (1968) 2 S.C.J. 735.

It has lastly been contended that the relevant provisions of the Act which have the effect of debarring the appellant from claiming possession for personal cultivation violate the provisions of Articles 14 and 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. It is urged that discrimination is writ large between animate and juristic persons who fall within the definition of the word "person." Such a contention, however, cannot be entertained in view of Article 31-A of the Constitution. The Act had received the assent of the President and is rendered immune from attack or challenge on the ground of violation of Articles 14 or 19 of the Constitution. In *Shri Mahadeo Paikaji Kolhe Taxatmal v. The State of Bombay*¹, the constitutional validity of the Act itself was canvassed but the challenge failed. Similarly the validity of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Amendment Act, 1956, as applied to Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area was upheld in *Sri Ram Ram Narain Medhi v. The State of Bombay*².

The appeal consequently fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Andhra Pradesh Charitable and Hindu Religious Institutions and Endowments Act (XVII of 1966), sections 46 and 47—Whether violative of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f), 25 and 26 of the Constitution of India.

It is not possible to see how a procedural change of this nature can be regarded as contravening either Article 19 (1) (f) of Article 14 of the Constitution. The procedure which has been laid down makes all of the proceedings before the Commissioner quasi-judicial. This is particularly so where the provisions of section 104 of the Act are kept in view. Moreover if any order of removal is made that can be challenged in a Court of law and there is a further right of appeal to the High Court.

There can be little or no doubt that if a mathadhipathi is of an unsound mind or suffers from any physical or mental defect or infirmity or has ceased to profess Hindu religion or the tenets of the math or if his case falls within clauses (d) to (h) of section 46 (1), his removable would be in the interest of the general public. A mathadhipathi cannot possibly perform his duties either as a spiritual or a temporal head nor can be properly administer or manage the trust property if he falls within the categories mentioned in clauses (a) to (d) or has been guilty of breach of trust or wilful default, etc. or leads an immoral life. Even under the Civil Procedure Code, his removal could have been ordered in proceedings under section 92 for similar reasons.

26th March, 1969.

The suspension of a mathadhipathi, during the inquiry, is a necessary and reasonable part of the procedure which has been prescribed by section 46. If he is allowed to function during the pendency of an inquiry the entire purpose of the enquiry would be defeated. The mathadhipathi, may, during the pendency of the inquiry, do away with most of the evidence or transfer with books of account or otherwise commit acts of misappropriation and defalcation in respect of the properties of the math. It is essential, therefore, in these circumstances to make a provision for suspending him till the inquiry concludes and an order is made either exonerating minor directing his removal.

(held, section 46 not violative of Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution).

It has nowhere been established that the petitioner has been prohibited or debarred from professing, practising and propagating his religion. A good deal of material has been placed on record to show that the entire math is being guarded by the police constables but that does not mean that the petitioner cannot be allowed to enter the math premises and exercise the fundamental right conferred by Article 25 (1) of the Constitution.

As regards the contravention of clauses (b) and (d) of Article 26 there is nothing in sections 46 and 47 which empowers the Commissioner to interfere with the autonomy of the religious denomination in the matter of deciding as to what rights and ceremonies are essential according to the tenets of the religion the denomination professes or practises nor has it been shown that any such order has been made by the Commissioner or that the Assistant Commissioner who has been put in charge of the day to day affairs is interfering in such matters. Section 47 of the Act deals only with a situation where there is a temporary vacancy in the office after mathadhipathi by reason of any dispute in regard to the right of succession to the office or the reasons stated therein as also because the mathadhipathi has been suspended pending an inquiry under section 46. Its provisions do not take away the right of administration from the hands of a religious denomination altogether and vest is for all times in a person or authority who is not entitled to exercise that right under the customary rule and custom prevailing in the math.

Held, it cannot be said that section 47 would be hit by Article 26 (d) of the Constitution as the powers under it will be exercised, inter alia when mismanagement of property or maladministration of trust funds are involved.

Petition under Article 32 of the Constitution of India for enforcement of the Fundamental Rights.

Kanak Ghosh and B. Datta, Advocates, for Appellant.

P. Ram Reddy, Senior Advocate, (A.V.V. Nair and P. Parameshwar Rao, Advocates, with him), for Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution challenging, inter alia, the constitutionality of sections 46 and 47 of the Andhra Pradesh Charitable and Hindu Religious Institutions and Endowments Act (XVII of 1966), hereinafter called the “Act” and for issuance of a writ in the nature of mandamus or other appropriate writs and directions to the Commissioner of Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments, hereinafter called the “Commissioner” prohibiting him from exercising his powers or taking action under the aforesaid sections.

The petitioner claims to be the Mathadhipathi of Shri Swami Hathiramji Math Tripathi-Thirumalla in the State of Andhra Pradesh. It is stated that this institution was founded several centuries ago and is one of the renowned Maths in India. Hundreds of Sadhus visit the Math throughout the year and it is the duty of the Mahant as its religious head to provide the visiting Sadhus with food and shelter and for perform all religious duties with regard to the celebration of Hindu festivals, propagation of the cult of Shri Swami Hathiramji and performance of other religious functions. It is alleged that Mahant Chettandoss, the previous incumbent died on 18th March, 1962. On 24th March, 1962 the Commissioner took charge of the Math and its properties under section 53 of the Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Areas) Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Act (XIX of 1951), hereinafter referred to as the "Repealed Act". The petitioner filed a suit on 26th March, 1962, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chittoor for a declaration that he was the rightful successor. The Commissioner was impleaded as a party to the suit. He also filed a revisional application under section 92 of the Repealed Act to the State Government. The Government disposed of the revisional application on 5th June, 1962. It appointed the petitioner as the interim Mahant subject to certain conditions which need not be mentioned. Before this order was made the petitioner withdrew the suit filed by him in April, 1962. Devendradoss, who was another claimant but who was a minor, filed a writ petition in the High Court challenging the above order of the Government but the same was rejected by the division Bench. Devendradoss then filed certain suits for a declaration of his title. On 22nd August, 1964, the Commissioner made an order directing the petitioner to show cause why the previous order appointing him as an interim Mahant be not recalled. According to the petitioner this was done because the State Government started claiming, contrary to the rule and custom which prevailed in the Math, that the amounts received on account of Padakanukus (personal offerings) should be paid to the Government and not taken by the Mahant. This order was challenged by the petitioner by means of a writ petition in the High Court. The High Court issued a stay order which was later on clarified to mean that the State Government was free to take such further action under the Act as it considered necessary. On 9th September, 1965, the State Government framed charges against the petitioner and directed him to furnish his explanation. The petitioner was placed under suspension with immediate effect. It was further directed that the Assistant Commissioner, Tirupathi should take charge of the Math and its affairs. Meanwhile another claimant Bhagwandoss filed a suit on 29th September, 1965, claiming title to the gaddi in his own right. The writ petition which had been filed by the petitioner was allowed by the High Court on 8th November, 1966. The matter ultimately came up in appeal to this Court, the judgment being reported in *Secretary, Home (Endowments) Andhra Pradesh v. Digyadarsan Rajindra Ram Dasji*¹. The judgment of the High Court was affirmed. The High Court had held that the petitioner had succeeded to the office of the Mahant or the death of Chettandoss on 18th March, 1962, in his own right. This Court concurred in that view and observed that the mere circumstance that the Government had also passed an order appointing him as the interim Mahant could not take away his right to function as a trustee on the basis of his original right. It followed that the Government had no jurisdiction to pass an order placing him under suspension as that virtually amounted to a removal of the trustee of the Math which could only be done in the manner provided by section 52 of the Repealed Act.

The Act received the assent of the President on 6th December, 1966, and was enforced with effect from 27th January, 1967. On 30th May, 1967, the petitioner filed a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution in the High Court for declaring the present impugned provisions of the Act as ultra vires. The petition was dismissed in limine as premature. An appeal to the Letters Patent bench failed. On coming to know that certain orders were going to be passed against the petitioner whereby charges on various matters were to be preferred and an inquiry made and that the suspension of the petitioner from Mahantship was going to be ordered, the present petition was filed under Article 32 of the Constitution in October, 1968. In this petition, apart from challenging the provisions of the Act a case of mala fide action has been sought to be made out against the respondent. In the order which was made by the Government on 18th November, 1968, as many as 14 charges have been preferred against the petitioner and his suspension as been duly ordered. The Assistant Commissioner Endowments Department has been directed to attend to the day-to-day administration of the Math temporarily and its Endowments until the disposal of the inquiry.

Now the Act has been enacted to consolidate and amend the law relating to the administration and governance of charitable and Hindu religious institutions and endowments in the State of Andhra Pradesh. Chapter I contains the definitions of various expressions used in the Act including the word "Commissioner" Chapter II provides for the appointment of Commissioner Joint Commissioners, etc., and give their powers and functions. Chapter III deals with administration and management of charitable and Hindu religious institutions and endowments. Chapter IV provides for registration of such institutions and endowments. Section 42 in Chapter V defines the word "mathadhipathi" to mean any person whether known as Mahant or by any other name, in whom the administration of a Math or specific endowment attached to a math are vested. Sections 46 and 47 are in the following terms :

"46. (1) The Commissioner may suo motu or on an application of two or more persons having interest, initiate proceedings for removing a mathadhipathi or a trustee of a specific endowment attached to a Math, if he—

- (a) is of unsound mind ;
- (b) is suffering from any physical or mental defect or infirmity which renders him unfit to be a mathadhipathi, or such trustee ;
- (c) has ceased to profess the Hindu religion or the tenets of the math ;
- (d) has been sentenced for any offence involving moral turpitude, such sentence not having been reversed ;
- (e) is guilty of breach of trust or misappropriation in respect of any of the properties of the math ;
- (f) commits persistent and wilful default in the exercise of his powers or performance of his functions under this Act.
- (g) violates any of the restrictions imposed or practices enjoined by the custom, usage or the tenets of the math, in relation to his personal conduct, such as celibacy, renunciation and the like ;
- (h) leads an immoral life.

(2) The Commissioner shall frame a charge on any of the grounds specified in sub-section (1) against the mathadhipathi or trustee concerned and give him an opportunity of meeting such charge, of testing the evidence adduced and of adducing evidence in his favour. After considering the evidence adduced and other material before him, the Commissioner may, by order exonerate the mathadhipathi or trustee, or remove him. Every such order shall state the charge framed against the mathadhipathi or the trustee, his explanation and the finding on such charge together with the reasons therefor :

Provided that in the case of a math or specific endowment attached thereto whose annual income exceeds rupees one lakh, the order of removal passed by the Commissioner against the mathadhipathi or trustee shall not like effect unless it is confirmed by the Government.

(3) Pending the passing of an order under sub-section (2) the Commissioner may suspend the mathadhipathi or the trustee.

(4) (a) Any mathadhipathi or trustee aggrieved by an order passed by the Commissioner under sub-section (2) may, within ninety days from the date of receipt of such order, institute a suit in the Court against such order.

(b) An appeal shall lie to the High Court within ninety days from the date of a decree or order of the Court in such suit.

47. (1) Where a temporary vacancy occurs in the office of the mathadhipathi and there is dispute in regard to the right of succession to such office ; or where the mathadhipathi is a minor and has no guardian fit and willing to act as guardian, or where the mathadhipathi is under suspension under sub-section (3) of section 46, the Commissioner shall, if he is satisfied after making an inquiry in this behalf that an arrangement for the administration of the math and its endowments of the specific endowments, as the case may be, is necessary, make such arrangement as he thinks fit until the disability of the mathadhipathi ceases or another mathadhipathi succeeds to the office, as the case may be.

(2) In making any such arrangement, the Commissioner shall have due regard to the claims, if any, of the disciples of the math.

(3) * * * *

Section 83 confers powers on the Government to call for and examine the record of the Commissioner.....in respect of any proceedings not being a proceeding in respect of which a suit or any appeal or application or reference to a Court is provided by the Act, to satisfy themselves as to the regularity of such proceedings or the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order passed therein and if, in any case, it appears to the Government that such decision or order should be modified, annulled, reversed or remitted for consideration they may pass orders accordingly. Under section 104 where a Commissioner.....makes an inquiry or hears an appeal under the Act, the inquiry has to be made and the appeal has to be heard as nearly as may be, in accordance with the procedure applicable under the Code of Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to the trial of suits or the hearing of appeals and the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act and the Indian Oaths Act have also been made applicable.

Learned Counsel for the petitioner has assailed the constitutionality of section 46 although he has sought to read section 47 along with it so as to establish that the combined effect of the provisions contained in both the sections would be hit by Articles 14, 19 (1) (f), 25, 26 and 31 of the Constituion. Before the submissions, which have been made, are examined reference may be made to *The Commissioner, Hindu Religious Endowments, Madras v. Sri Lakshmindra Thirtha Swamiar of Sri Shirur Math*¹ in which the constitutionality of various provisions of the repealed Act was challenged. That case related to the Shirur Math which was one of the 8 maths situate at Udupi in the district of South Kanara. The Hindu Religious Endowments Boards functioning under the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1927 had taken action to frame a scheme for the administration of the affairs of the math. The challenge in the Courts was confined to the constitutional validity of the repealed Act. B. K. Mukherjee, J., (as he then was) dealt exhaustively with the rights of a Mahant to hold office as well as enjoy the property of the institution. The following observations as pages 1019, 1020 are noteworthy :

“As said above, the ingredients of both office and property, of duties and personal interest are blended together in the rights of a Mahant and the Mahant has the right to enjoy this property or beneficial interest so long as he is entitled to hold his office. To take away this beneficial interest and leave him merely to the discharge of his duties would be to destroy his character as a Mahant altogether. It is true that the beneficial interest which he enjoys is appurtenant to his duties and as he is in charge of a public institution, reasonable restrictions can always be placed upon his rights in the interest of the public. But the restrictions would cease to be reasonable if they are calculated to make him unfit to discharge the duties which he is called upon to discharge. A Mahant's duty is not simply to manage the temporalities of a Math. He is the head and superior of spiritual fraternity and the purpose of Math is to encourage and foster spiritual training by maintenance of a competent of teachers who could impart religious instructions to the disciples and followers of the Math and by try to strengthen the doctrines of the particular school or order, of which they profess to be adherents. This purpose cannot be served if the restrictions are such as would bring the mathadhipathi down to the level of a servant under the State department. It is from this standpoint that the reasonableness of the restrictions should be judged."

It was held that the Mahant was entitled to claim the protection of Article 19 (1) (f). The same Shirur Math figured in another case which came up to this Court and the decision in which is reported in *H. H. Sudhundra Thirtha Swamiar v. Commissioner for Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments, Mysore*¹. There the constitutionality of section 52 (1) (f) of the repealed Act, as amended, was unsuccessfully assailed. The scheme of that section was similar to section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Commissioner or any two or more persons having interest or having obtained the consent in writing of the Commissioner could institute a suit in the Court to obtain a decree for removing a trustee of a math or a specific endowment attached to a math for any one or more reasons given in clauses (a) to (f) which were similar to clauses (a) to (f) of sub-section (1) of section 46 of the Act. Whereas previously the Commissioner could only institute a suit in a Court, he has now been empowered under the Act by section 46 to initiate proceedings himself for removing a mathadhipathi on the grounds mentioned in clauses (a) to (h). Clauses (g) and (h) are new and sub-section (2) gives the procedure for making the inquiry. If the mathadhipathi is aggrieved by the order made by the Commissioner, he has been given the right to institute a suit against such order in the Court by sub-section (4). The difference, in other words, is that previously the removal could be ordered only by the Court but under section 46 of the Commissioner can order the removal after following the procedure laid down and his order is final except that it can be challenged by means of a suit by the mathadhipathi. It also requires confirmation by the Government where the annual income of the math exceeds rupees one lakh. An additional power has been conferred on the Commissioner by sub-section (3) to suspend the mathadhipathi pending the passing of an order under sub-section (2).

The view which was taken in the above case was that section 52 (1) (f) of the repealed Act did not in effect seek to cut down the authority of the Mahant which was traditionally recognized and that the said provision which authorised the institution of a suit for removal of a Mahant where he was found to have wasted the property of the math or applied such funds or property for purposes wholly unconnected with the institution did not amount to an unreasonable restriction upon the exercise of the rights of the Mahant. On behalf of the petitioner a strenuous attempt has been made to show that section 46 of the Act is quite different from its counterpart contained in the repealed Act, namely, section 52 and that the powers which have been conferred are clearly violative of the fundamental right to hold the office of the Mahant as also the property of the math. In *H. H. Sudhundra Thirtha Swamiar's case*¹ it has been emphasised that the Mahant by virtue of his office is under an obligation to discharge the duties as a trustee and is answerable as such. He enjoys large powers for the benefit of the institution of which he is the head. He is to incur expenditure for the math i.e., for carrying on the religious worship for the disciples and for maintaining the dignity of his office but the property is attached to the office and the Mahant cannot incur expenditure for personal luxury or objects incongruous with his position as a Mahant. Keeping all this in view it is difficult to see how the provisions of section 46 would be violative of Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. The grounds on which his removal as mathadhipathi can be ordered have been specifically provided and no exception has been or can be taken to them. The main attack is based on the power given to the Commissioner instead of the Court to make an inquiry into or try the allegations or charges against the Mahant and order his removal if such charges are established. It is not possible to see how a procedural change of this nature can be regarded as contravening either Article 19 (1)(f) or Article 14 of the Constitution which is the other Article which has been pressed into service. The procedure which has been laid down makes all the proceedings before the Commissioner quasi-judicial. This is particularly so when the provisions of section 104 of the Act are kept in view. Moreover if any order of removal is made that can be challenged in a Court of law and there is a further right of appeal to the High Court. Learned Counsel for the petitioner had finally to build his argument on the provisions of sub-section (3) which give power to the Commissioner to suspend the mathadhipathi during the pendency of an inquiry and before any order in the matter of removal is made. It is pointed out that such suspension would seriously interfere with the numerous duties which a mathadhipathi has to perform as the head of a spiritual fraternity. The petitioner, in this manner, has been debarred from not only managing the institution but also from carrying out the essential work which according to the tenets and custom of the fraternity he is under an obligation to do. For instance he cannot look after the Sadhus and other disciple who constantly visit the math and come for religious instruction there nor can he preside over religious functions and other periodical festivities which are held in the seat of math. Thus, it is urged, that there is a clear violation of Article 19 (1) (f) which guarantees the petitioner's right to hold and enjoy the property, apart from the interference with his right to practice and propagate religion and manage the affairs of the math in matters of religion which rights are guaranteed by Articles 25 and 26 of the Constitution.

As regards Article 19 (1) (f) it has to be seen whether the restrictions which have been imposed by the impugned provisions of the Act are reasonable and are in the interest of the general public. There can be little or no doubt that if a mathadhipathi is of an unsound mind or suffers from any physical or mental defect or infirmity or has ceased to profess Hindu religion or the tenets of the math or if his case falls within clauses (d) to (h) of section 46 (1) his removal would be in the interest of the general public. A mathadhipathi cannot possibly perform his duties either as a spiritual or a temporal head nor can he properly administer or manage the trust property if he falls within the categories mentioned in clauses (a) to (d) or has been guilty of breach of trust or wilful default etc. or leads an immoral life [vide clauses (e) to (h) of section 46 (1)]. Even under the Civil Procedure Code, his removal could have been ordered in proceedings under section 92 for similar reasons.

The suspension of a mathadhipathi, during the inquiry, is a necessary and reasonable part of the procedure which has been prescribed by section 46. If he is allowed to function during the pendency of an inquiry the entire purpose of the enquiry might be defeated. The mathadhipathi may, during the pendency of the inquiry, do away with most of the evidence or tamper with the books of account or otherwise commit acts of misappropriation and defalcation in respect of the properties of the math. It is essential, therefore, in these circumstances to make a provision for suspending him till the inquiry concludes and an order is made either exonerating him or directing his removal.

On the question whether sections 46 and 47 of the Act contravene Articles 25 and 26, a good deal of reliance has been placed on the observations in the first *Shirur Math case*¹, Mukherjea, J., (as he then was) delivering the judgment of the Court had examined the scope of the language of Articles 25 and 26. It was indicated by him that freedom of religion in our constitution is not confined to religious beliefs only; it extends to religious practice as well subject to the restrictions which the Constitution itself has laid down. Under Article 26 (b) therefore, a religious denomination or organisation enjoys complete autonomy in the matter of deciding as to what rights and ceremonies are essential according to the tenets of the religion and no outside authority has any jurisdiction to interfere with its decision in such matters. Moreover under Article 26 (d) it is the fundamental right of a religious denomination or its representative to administer its property in accordance with law; and the law, therefore, must leave the right of administration to the religious denomination itself subject to such restrictions and regulations as it might choose to impose. It was further laid down that a law which takes away the right of administration from the hands of a religious denomination altogether and vests it in any other authority would amount to a violation of the right guaranteed under clause (d) of Article 26. Now under section 47 of the Act where a mathadhipathi is under suspension the Commissioner can make such arrangement as he thinks fit for the administration of the math until another mathadhipathi succeeds to the office and in making such arrangement has to have due regard to the claims of the disciples of the math. It is maintained on behalf of the petitioner that the appointment of Assistant Commissioner, Endowments Department, Tirupathi as the day-to-day administrator of the math and its endowment as a two fold effect. The first is that the complete autonomy which a religious denomination like the math in question enjoys in the matter of observance of rights and ceremonies essential to the tenets of the religion has been interfered with. The second is that the right of administration has been altogether taken away from the hands of the religious denomination by vesting it in the Assistant Commissioner. This clearly contravenes the provisions of clauses (b) and (d) of Article 26 within the rule laid down in the first *Shirur Math case*¹. By doing so in exercise of the powers under section 47 the Commissioner has also debarred the petitioner from practising and propagating religion freely which he is entitled to do under Article 25 (1).

The attack on the ground of violation of Article 25 (1) can be disposed of quite briefly. It has nowhere been established that the petitioner has been prohibited or debarred from professing, practising and propagating his religion. A good deal of material has been placed on the record to show that the entire math is being guarded by police constables but that does not mean that the petitioner cannot be allowed to enter the math premises and exercise the fundamental right conferred by Article 25 (1) of the Constitution. As regards the contravention of clauses (b) and (d) of Article 26 there is nothing in sections 46 and 47 which empowers the Commissioner to interfere with the autonomy of the religious denomination in the matter of deciding as to what rights and ceremonies are essential according to the tenets of the religion the denomination professes or practises nor has it been shown that any such order has been made by the Commissioner or that the Assistant Commissioner who has been put in charge of the day-to-day affairs is interfering in such matters. Section 47 of the Act deals only with a situation where there is a temporary vacancy in the office of the mathadhipathi by reason of any dispute in regard to the right of succession to the office or the other reasons stated therein as also because the mathadhipathi has been suspended pending an inquiry under section 46. Its provisions do not take away the right of administration from the hands of a religious denomination altogether and vest it for all times in a person or authority who is not entitled to exercise that right under the customary rule and custom prevailing in the math. In the first *Shirur Math case*¹, section 56 of the repealed Act before its amendment by Act XII of 1954 was struck down as power had been given to the Commissioner to require the trustee to appoint a manager for the administration of the secular affairs of the institution and the Commissioner himself could also make the appointment. It was pointed out that this power could be exercised at the mere option of the Commissioner without any justifying necessity whatsoever and no pre-requisites like mismanagement of property or maladministration of trust funds were necessary to enable the trustee to exercise such drastic power. The effect of the section really was that the commissioner was at liberty, at any moment, to deprive the Mahant of his right to administer the trust property even if there was no negligence or maladministration on his part. Such a restriction was held to be opposed to the provisions of Article 26 (d) of the Constitution. Section 47 of the Act is not in pari materia with section 56 of the repealed Act. On the contrary section 47 indicates quite clearly the conditions and situations in which the Commissioner can appoint someone to carry on the administration of the math and its endowments. In the present case, the Assistant Commissioner has been appointed as a day-to-day administrator because of the inquiry which is pending against the petitioner and in which serious charges of misappropriation and defalcation of trust funds and leading an immoral life are being investigated. It cannot be said that section 47 would be hit by Article 26 (d) of the Constitution as the powers under it will be exercised, inter alia, when mis-management of property or maladministration of trust funds are involved.

Counsel for the petitioner has not made any serious attempt to argue that in the view that we are inclined to take there would be any contravention of Article 31 (1) of the Constitution. He has, however, pressed for the petitioner being allowed to take the Padakanulas which are receivable by the Mahant of which he will keep an account as was directed by this Court when disposing of the stay petition on 13th December, 1968. Counsel for the respondent agrees to this and has also agreed to keep accounts of whatever amount is spent on feeding the sadhus and on the management of the math property. He has further given an undertaking that the inquiry which is being conducted under section 46 of the Act will be concluded within a period of three months. It may be made clear that the Assistant Commissioner who is in charge of the day-to-day administration temporarily of the math and its endowments shall be fully entitled to take necessary steps for recovery of all debts and claims which could have been recovered by the Mahant from various debtors etc.

The writ petition, however, fails and it is dismissed, but in view of the entire circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 115—Scope of—‘Case’—Meaning of—Court ordering that a question may properly be put to a witness examined—Whether amounts to case decided.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), section 11—Res judicata—Consent decree does not operate as res judicata.

Exercise of the power under section 115 is broadly subject to three important conditions (1) that the decision must be of a Court subordinate to the High Court; (2) that there must be a case which has been decided by the subordinate Court; and (3) that the subordinate Court must appear to have exercised jurisdiction not vested in it by law or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

By ordering that a question may properly be put to a witness who was being examined, no case was decided by the Trial Court. The expression ‘case’ is not limited in its import to the entirety of the matters in dispute in an action. To interpret the expression ‘case’ as an entire proceeding only and not a part of the proceeding imposes an unwarranted restriction on the exercise of the powers of superintendence and may result in certain cases in denying relief to the aggrieved litigant where it is most needed and may result in the perpetration of gross injustice. A case may be said to be decided, if the Court adjudicates for the purposes of the suit some right or obligation of the parties in controversy every order in the suit cannot be regarded as a case decided within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

A consent decree does not operate as res judicata, because a consent decree is merely the record of a contract between the parties to a suit, to which is super added for seal of the Court. A matters in contest in a suit may operate as res judicata only if there is adjudication by the Court. The terms of section 11 leave no scope for a contrary view. Again it was for the trial Court in the first instance to decide that question and thereafter the High Court could, if the matter were brought before it by way of appeal or in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, have decided that question (Held on facts). The High Court had no jurisdiction to record any finding on the issue of res judicata in a revision application filed against an order refusing to uphold an objection to certain question asked to a witness under examination.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—By insistence upon procedural wrangling in a comparatively simple suit pending in the Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad the parties have effectively prevented all progress in the suit during the last six years.

A building in the town of Ahmedabad used as a cinematograph theatre belonged originally to M/s. Popatlal Punjabhai. In proceedings in insolvency, receivers were appointed of the estate of the owners and on 19th August, 1954, the receivers granted a lease of the theatre on certain terms and conditions to two persons, Raval and Faraqui. By an agreement dated 27th November, 1954, between Raval and Faraqui on the one hand and M/s. Filmistan Distributors (India) Private Ltd. hereinafter called 'Filmistan'—on the other hand, right to exhibit cinematograph films was granted to the latter on certain terms and conditions. "Filmistan" instituted suit No. 149 of 1960 in the Court of the Civil Judge (Senior Division) at Ahmedabad against Raval and Faraqui and two other persons claiming a declaration that it was entitled pursuant to the agreement dated 27th November, 1954, to exhibit motion pictures in the theatre. By an order dated 1st December, 1960, the suit was disposed of as compromised. It was inter alia agreed that Raval and Faraqui were bound and liable to allow Filmistan to exercise its "exhibition rights" in the theatre; that Raval and Faraqui, their servants and agents were not to have any right to exhibit any picture in contravention of the terms and conditions of the agreement dated 27th November, 1954; and that Raval and Faraqui shall "execute and register" an agreement in writing incorporating the said agreement with the variation as to rental. Pursuant to this agreement, a fresh agreement was executed on 1st December, 1960. On 1st September, 1963, Filmistan filed suit No. 1465 of 1963 in the Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad, inter alia, for a declaration that a sub-lessee or as lessee under law it was entitled to obtain and remain in possession of the theatre and to exhibit cinematograph films and to hold "entertainment performances" etc., in the theatre, and that one Shabeer Hussain Khan Tejabwala had no right, title or interest in the theatre, that the defendants in the suit be ordered to hand over vacant and peaceful possession of the theatre, and the defendants, their servants and agents be restrained by an injunction from interfering directly or indirectly with its rights to obtain and remain in possession of the theatre or any part thereof and to exercise its right of exhibiting "motion pictures" and entertainment performances etc. This suit was filed against the receivers in insolvency of the owners of the theatre, against Raval and Faraqui, against Tejabwala and also against Baldevdas Shivalal who claimed to be the owner of the theatre. The suit was based on the claim by Filmistan as lessees or sub-lessees of the theatre and was exclusively triable by the Court of Small Causes by virtue of section 28 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947. Three sets of written statements were filed against the claim made by Filmistan, but no reference need be made thereto, since at this stage in deciding this appeal the merits of the pleas raised by the defendants are not relevant. After issues were raised on 20th June, 1966, the plaint was amended and additional written statements were filed by the defendants. The learned Judge was then requested to frame three additional issues in view of the amended pleadings : the issues were :

" 11. Whether in view of the said consent decree in suit No. 149 of 1960 defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are debarred on principles of res judicata from agitating the question that the said document dated 27th November, 1954, as confirmed by their letter dated 31st January, 1955, and further confirmed by document dated 1st December, 1960, is not a lease ?

12. Whether in view of the said consent decree defendants 5 and 6 are estopped from contending and leading any evidence and putting questions in cross-examination of plaintiffs witnesses to show that the said document dated 27th November, 1954, as confirmed by their letter dated 31st January, 1955, and further confirmed by document dated 1st December, 1960, is not a lease?

13. Whether in respect of the terms of the said consent decree as also of the said document dated 27th November, 1954, as confirmed by their letter dated 31st January, 1955, and further confirmed by document dated 1st December, 1960, defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are debarred from leading any evidence of the plaintiffs witnesses in view of section 92 of the Evidence?"

In drawing up the additional issues not much care was apparently exercised : whether a party is entitled to lead evidence or to put questions in cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses cannot form the subject-matter of an issue.

Filmistan then applied to the Court of Small Causes for an order that issues Nos. 11, 12 and 13 be tried as preliminary issues. The learned Judge observed that the issues were not purely of law, that in any event the case or any part thereof was not likely to be disposed of on these issues, and that ordinarily in "appealable cases" the Court should, as far as possible, decide all the issues together and that piecemeal trial might result in protracting the litigation. He also observed that the issues were not of law going to the root of the case and were on that account not capable of being decided without recording evidence.

A revision application against that order was dismissed in limine by the High Court of Gujarat. When the case reached hearing and the evidence of a representative of Filmistan was being recorded Counsel for the defendants asked in cross-examination the question whether the "agreement between the plaintiff and defendant Nos. 5 and 6 was a commercial transaction and was not a lease ?" The question was objected to by Counsel appearing for Filmistan. Thereafter elaborate arguments were advanced and the Trial Judge passed an order disallowing the objection.

The objection to the question raised by Filmistan was not that it related to a matter to be decided by the Court and on which the opinion of witnesses was irrelevant. The objection was raised as an attempt to reopen the previous decision given by the Trial Judge refusing to try issues Nos. 11, 12 and 13 as preliminary issues. Counsel for Filmistan contended that an enquiry into the nature of the legal relationship arising out of the agreement dated 1st December, 1960, "was barred by the principle of res judicata and estoppel under the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act", since the question was already concluded by the consent decree in suit No. 149 of 1960. The trial Judge observed that he had carefully gone through the consent decree and the registered agreement dated 1st December, 1960, and he found that the consent decree had not decided that the transaction between the parties of the year 1954 was in the nature of a lease ; that in the plaint in the earlier suit it was not even averred that the rights granted were in the nature of lease-hold rights; that suit No. 149 of 1960 was for declaration of the rights of Filmistan to exhibit motion pictures in the theatre under the agreement dated 27th November, 1954, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from violating the said rights of Filmistan under the agreement; and that the agreement dated 1st December, 1960 was "not plain enough to exclude the oral evidence of the surrounding circumstances, and conduct of the parties to explain its terms and language." Accordingly he held that the question asked in cross-examination of the witnesses for Filmistan intended to disclosure of the surrounding circumstances and conduct of the parties in order to show in what manner the language of the document was related to the existing facts, could not be excluded.

The Court also rejected the contention that there was any bar of estoppel, and held that evidence as to the true nature of the transaction was not inadmissible by virtue of section 92 of the Evidence Act.

Filmistan feeling dissatisfied with the order invoked the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court of Gujarat under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The revision petition was entertained and elaborate arguments were advanced at the Bar. The High Court referred to a number of authorities and observed that the correctness of the findings of the Trial Court on issues Nos. 12 and 13 may not be examined in exercise of the powers under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court proceeded to observe :

“The question then arises for consideration whether in fact the subordinate Court has decided the question res judicata” and that “it is true that the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes to decide disputes between a tenant and his landlord and falling within the purview of section 28 of the Bombay Rent Control Act is derived from section 28 of the said Act, but at the same time if an issue is in fact barred by res judicata, then the Court has no jurisdiction on principles of res judicata to go into that question or to decide that question over again to the extent to which the Court, viz., the trial Court in the instant case, proposed to go into that question and allow the whole question, that was closed once for all by consent decree of 1st December, 1960, to be reopened, it is proposing to exercise the jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law. It is not open to any Court of law to try an issue over again or reopen the same if an earlier decision operates as res judicata. Once the jurisdiction of the Court has been taken away, any proposal to reopen the question closed by the earlier decision would be exercise of jurisdiction which is not vested in the Court by law and to that extent the decision would become revisable, even if it is the decision as to the res judicata of an issue”.

and concluded :

“It is not open to me in revision at this stage to express any opinion about the rights and contentions of the parties with reference to the agreement of 1st December, 1960. But the only thing that can be said is that so far as the agreement of 27th November, 1954, is concerned, it must be held, in view of the consent decree of 1st December, 1960, that that document of 27th November, 1954, created a lease * * *.

The consent decree must be held to create a bar of res judicata as far as the question of document of 27th November, 1954, creating a lease is concerned. The learned Judge will not proceed with the trial.”

By section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure the High Court is invested with power to call for the record of any case decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, if such subordinate Court appears—(a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or (b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested or (c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and to make such order in the case as it thinks fit. Exercise of the power is broadly subject to three important conditions (1) that the decision must be of a Court subordinate to the High Court ; (2) that there must be a case which has been decided by the subordinate Court ; and (3) that the subordinate Court must appear to have exercised jurisdiction not vested in it by law or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

In the present case the Court of Small Causes had only decided that a question seeking information about the true legal relationship arising out of the document could be permitted to be put to the witnesses for Filmistan. The Court gave no finding expressly or by implication on the issue of res judicata or any other issue. In the view of the Trial Court the question whether the legal relationship arising out of the agreement dated 1st December, 1960, was in the nature of a lease or of other character had to be decided at the trial and the previous judgment being a judgment by consent “could not operate as res judicata” for, it was not a decision of the Court, and that the consent decree in suit No. 149 of 1960 had not decided that the agreement dated 27th March, 1954, was of the nature of a lease, and that in the plaint in that suit it was not even averred that it was a lease.

The Trial Judge in overruling the objection did not decide any issues at the stage of recording evidence ; he was not called upon to decide any issues at that stage. The observations made by him obviously relate to the arguments advanced at the Bar and can in no sense be regarded even indirectly as a decision on any of the issues. But the High Court has recorded a finding that the agreement dated 27th November, 1954, created a lease and that the consent decree operated as res judicata. A consent decree, to the decisions of this Court, does not operate as res judicata because a consent decree is merely the record of a contract between the parties to a suit, to which is super added for seal of the Court. A matter in contest in a suit may operate as res judicata only if there is an adjudication by the Court : the terms of section 11 of the code leave no scope for a contrary view. Again it was for the Trial Court in the first instance to decide that question and thereafter the High Court could, if the matter were brought before it by way of appeal or in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, have decided that question. In our judgment, the High Court had no jurisdiction to record any finding on the issue of res judicata in a revision application filed against an order refusing to uphold an objection to certain question asked to a witness under examination.

The true nature of the order brought before the High Court and the dimensions of the dispute covered thereby apparently got blurred and the High Court proceeded to decide matters on which no decision was till then recorded by the Trial Court, and which could not be decided by the High Court until the parties had opportunity of leading evidence thereon.

It may also be observed that by ordering that a question may properly be put to a witness who was being examined, no case was decided by the Trial Court. The expression "case" is not limited in its import to the entirety of the matter in dispute in an action. This Court observed in *Major S. S. Khanna v. Brig. F. J. Dillon*¹, that the expression "case" is a word of comprehensive import ; it includes a civil proceedings and is not restricted by anything contained in section 115 of the Code to the entirety of the proceeding in a civil Court. To interpret the expression "case" as an entire proceeding only and not a part of the proceeding imposes an unwarranted restriction on the exercise of powers of superintendence and may result in certain cases in denying relief to the aggrieved litigant where it is most needed and may result in the perpetration of gross injustice. But it was not decided in *Major S. S. Khanna's case*¹, that every order of the Court in the course of a suit amounts to a case decided. A case may be said to be decided, if the Court adjudicates for the purposes of the suit some right or obligation of the parties in controversy ; every order in the suit cannot be regarded as a case decided within the meaning of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The order passed by the High Court is set aside and the Trial Court is directed to proceed and dispose of the suit. We trust that the suit will be taken up early for hearing and disposed of expeditiously. We recommend that the form of the issues Nos. 11, 12 and 13 will be rectified by the learned Trial Judge.

Filmistan will pay the costs of the appeal in the Court and in the High Court.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J. C. SHAH, Acting Chief Justice AND G. K. MITTER, J.

M. C. Chacko

v.

The State Bank of Travancore

... Respondent.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 100—Charge on immovable property—When created.Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 2 (d)—Stranger to contract—When can sue.

For creating a charge on immovable property no particular form of words is needed ; by adequate words intention may be expressed to make property or a fund belonging to a person charged for payment of a debt mentioned in the deed. But in order that a charge may be created, there must be evidence of intention disclosed by the deed that a specified property or fund belonging to a person was intended to be made liable to satisfy the debt due by him.

The recitals of the deed in the instant case do not evidence any intention of the donor to create a charge in favour of the bank ; they merely set out an arrangement between the donor and the members of his family that the liability under the letter of guarantee executed by him in favour of the bank, if and when it arises, will be satisfied by his son out of the property allotted to him under the deed. It was only intended to confer a right of indemnity upon the other members of the family.

It is settled law that a person not a party to a contract cannot, subject to certain well recognised exceptions, enforce the terms of the contract ; the recognised exceptions are that beneficiaries under the terms of the contract or where the contract is a part of the family arrangement may enforce the covenant.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 23rd November, 1964 of the Kerala High Court in A. S. No. 502 of 1961.

S. V. Gupte, Senior Advocate (Anantha Krishna Iyer, S. Balakrishnan and R. Thiagarajan, Advocates, with him), for Appellant.

H. R. Gokhale, Senior Advocate (J. S. Arora, Advocate and K. Baldev Mehta, Advocate for Anand, Dasgupta and Sagar, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, Ag. C. J.—The High Land Bank, Kottayam of which the appellant M. C. Chacko was the Manager had an overdraft account with the Kottayam Bank. K. C. Chacko, father of the appellant, had executed from time to time letters of guarantee in favour of the Kottayam Bank agreeing to pay the amounts due by the High Land Bank under the overdraft arrangement. By the last letter of guarantee dated 22nd January, 1953, K. C. Chacko agreed to hold himself liable for the amounts due by the High Land Bank to the Kottayam Bank on the overdraft arrangement subject to a limit of Rs. 20,000.

The Kottayam Bank Ltd. filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kottayam against the High Land Bank for a decree for the amount due in the account. To this suit were also impleaded K. C. Chacko, the guarantor, M. C. Chacko, Manager of the High Land Bank, and M. C. Joseph, Kuriakose, Annamma and Chinnamma, the last three being the son, daughter and wife respectively of K. C. Chacko. Against the High Land Bank the claim was made on the footing of the overdraft account : against K. C. Chacko on the letter of guarantee and against M. C. Chacko, his brother, his sister and his mother as universal donees of the property of K. C. Chacko under a deed dated 21st June, 1951, under which, it was claimed, a charge was created on the properties to which the deed related and against M. C. Chacko, also on the claim that he had personally agreed to pay the amount due by the High Land Bank. During the pendency of the suit, K. C. Chacko died and the suit was prosecuted against his widow, daughter and sons who were described also as his legal representatives.

The trial Court decreed the suit against the High Land Bank and also against M. C. Chacko, limited to the property received by him from his father under the deed dated 21st June, 1951. The claim of the Kottayam Bank to enforce the liability under the letter of guarantee personally against K. C. Chacko was held barred by the law of limitation and on that account not enforceable against his heirs and legal representatives. The Court also rejected the claim that M. C. Chacko had personally agreed to pay the amount due under the overdraft arrangement.

In appeal to the High Court by M. C. Chacko the decree passed by the trial Court was confirmed and the cross-objections filed by the State Bank of Travancore with which the Kottayam Bank was merged claiming that M. C. Chacko was personally liable were dismissed. This appeal with Special Leave is preferred by M. C. Chacko against the decree of the High Court.

Two questions arise in this appeal : (1) whether under Exhibit D-1 a charge is created in favour of the Kottayam Bank to satisfy the debt arising under the letter of guarantee and (2) whether the charge assuming that a charge arises is enforceable by the Bank when it was not a party to the deed Exhibit D-1.

Exhibit D-1 is called a deed of partition : in truth it is a deed whereby K. C. Chacko gave the properties described in the Schedule A to M. C. Chacko and other properties described in Schedules B to F to M. C. Chacko, M. C. Joseph, Annamma and Chinamma. In paragraph 17 it is recited :

"I have no debts whatsoever. If in pursuance of the letter given by me to the Kottayam Bank at the request of my eldest son, Chacko, for the purpose of the High Land Bank Ltd., Kottayam, of which he is the Managing Director, any amount is due and payable to the Kottayam Bank, that amount is to be paid from the High Land Bank by my son, Chacko. If the same is not so done and any amount becomes payable (by me) as per my letter, for that my eldest son, Chacko and the properties in Schedule A alone will be answerable for that amount."

The other paragraphs which deal with the properties in Schedule A may also be referred to. Paragraph 10 of the deed recited :

"The donees of the properties included in A, B and C Schedules are, as from this date, to be in possession of their respective properties and to get mutation of registry in their names, pay land revenue and enjoy the income save that from coconut trees."

By paragraph 12 it was declared that notwithstanding the deed of partition, K. C. Chacko will take the income from the coconut trees standing on the properties included in Schedules A, B, C and F till his death and that the donees of the properties will take and enjoy the income from the coconut trees in their respective properties after his death. In paragraph 13 it was recited that :

"As it is decided that Chinamma should receive and have for her maintenance the rent of the building in item 7 in the A Schedule, as well as the rent of the building in item 18 of the B Schedule, she is to be in possession of these buildings as from this date and is to let them out and enjoy the rent. The respective donees will have possession and enjoyment after her death. Chinamma is to have full rights and liberty to reside in any of the houses included in A, B or C Schedule and so long as she so resides in any of the houses, the donees of the respective house is to meet all her expenses. The rent collected by Chinamma from the buildings given possession of to her is to be utilised by her for her private expenses as she pleases."

In our judgment the various covenant in the deed were intended to incorporate an arrangement binding between the members of the family for satisfaction of the debt, if any, arising under the letter of guarantee.

We are unable to agree with the High Court that by clause 17 of the deed it was intended to create a charge in favour of the Kottayam Bank for the amount which may fall due under the letter of guarantee. The letter of guarantee created merely a personal obligation. The deed Exhibit D-1 was executed before the last letter of guarantee dated 22nd January, 1953. By clause 17 of Exhibit D-1 it is merely directed that the liability if any arising under the letter of guarantee, shall be satisfied by M.C. Chacko and not by the donor, his son M.C. Joseph, his daughter Annamma and his wife Chinnamma. The reason for the provision in the deed is clear. M.C. Chacko was the Managing Director of the High Land Bank Ltd. and it was at the instance of M.C. Chacko that the letters of guarantee were executed by the donor. For creating a charge on immovable property no particular form of words is needed : by adequate words intention may be expressed to make property or a fund belonging to a person charged for payment of a debt mentioned in the deed. But in order that a charge may be created, there must be evidence of intention disclosed by the deed that a specified property or fund belonging to a person was intended to be made liable to satisfy the debt due by him. The recitals in clause 17 of the deed do not evidence any intention of the donor to create a charge in favour of the Kottayam Bank ; they merely set out an arrangement between the donor and the members of his family that the liability under the letter of guarantee, if and when it arises, will be satisfied by M.C. Chacko out of the property allotted to him under the deed.

The debt which M.C. Chacko was directed by the deed to satisfy was not in any sense a "family debt." It was a debt of K.C. Chacko; and K.C. Chacko was personally liable to pay that debt. After his death his sons, his daughter and his widow would be liable to satisfy the debt out of his estate in their hands. From the recitals in the deed Exhibit D-1 an intention to convert a personal debt into a secured debt in favour of the Bank, a third person, cannot be inferred. In *Akella Suryanarayana Rao and others v. Dwarapudi Basiviraddi and others*¹, the Madras High Court in construing a deed of partition of joint family property pursuant to a compromise decree, held that properties allotted to certain branches to which were also "allotted certain debts" with a stipulation that until the debts were fully discharged the properties allotted to the shares of the respective persons shall be liable in the first instance, were not subject to a charge in favour of the creditors. The Court held that the covenant in the partition deed resulted in a contract of indemnity, and not a charge. In the present case also the covenant that M.C. Chacko will either personally or out of the properties given to him satisfy the debt is intended to confer a right of indemnity upon other members of the family, if the Kottayam Bank enforced the liability against them, and created no charge in favour of the Bank. Clauses 12 and 13 of the deed support that view. By clause 12 the right to the coconut trees standing in the properties included in Schedules A, B, C and F is reserved to K.C. Chacko. Similarly Chinnamma, wife of K.C. Chacko, is permitted during her lifetime to occupy the houses in the properties described in the three schedules and to receive the income; and to utilize the same for herself. It is clear that K.C. Chacko had no intention to create a charge or to encumber any of the properties for the debt which may become due to the Bank.

The Kottayam Bank not being a party to the deed was not bound by the covenants in the deed, nor could it enforce the covenants. It is settled law that a person not a party to a contract cannot subject to certain well recognised exceptions, enforce the terms of the contract : the recognised exceptions are that beneficiaries under the terms of the contract or where the contract is a part of the family arrangement may enforce the covenant. In *Krishna Lal Sadhu v. Pramila Bala Dosi*², Rankin, C.J. observed :

1. (1932) 62 M.L.J. 533 : (1932) I.L.R. 55 Mad. 436; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 457. 2. (1928) I.L.R. 55 Cal. 1315.

" Clause (d) of section 2 of the Contract Act widens the definition of ' consideration ' so as to enable a party to a contract to enforce the same in India in certain cases in which the English Law would regard the party as the recipient of a purely voluntary promise and would refuse to him a right of action on the ground of nudum pactum. Not only, however, is there nothing in section 2 to encourage the idea that contracts can be enforced by a person who is not a party to the contract, but this notion is rightly excluded by the definition of ' promisor ' an ' promised '."

Under the English Common Law only a person who is a party to a contract can sue on it and that the law knows nothing of a right gained by a third party arising out of a contract : *Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Selfridge & Co.*¹. It has however been recognised that where a trust is created by a contract, a beneficiary may enforce the rights which the trust so created has given him. The basis of that rule is that though he is not a party to the contract his rights are equitable and not contractual. The Judicial Committee applied that rule to an Indian case *Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begam*². In a later case *Jamna Das v. Ram Autar*³, the Judicial Committee pointed out that the purchaser's contract to pay off a mortgage debt could not be enforced by the mortgagee who was not a party to the contract. It must therefore be taken as well settled that except in the case of a beneficiary under a trust created by a contract or in the case of a family arrangement, no right may be enforced by a person who is not a party to the contract.

Even if it be granted that there was an intention to create a charge, the Kottayam Bank not being a party to the deed enforce the charge only if it was a beneficiary under the terms of the contract, and it is not claimed that the Bank was a beneficiary under the deed Exhibit D-1. The suit against M.C. Chacko must therefore be dismissed.

The decree passed by the High Court is modified and it is declared that M.C. Chacko is not personally liable for the debt due under the letter of guarantee executed by K.C. Chacko, nor are the properties in Schedule A allotted to M.C. Chacko under the deed dated 21st June, 1951, liable to satisfy the debt due to the Kottayam Bank under the letter of guarantee.

Having regard to the circumstances of the case and specially that a concession that persons not parties to a contract may enforce the benefit reserved to them under the Contract, was made before the High Court, we direct that the parties to this appeal will bear their respective costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 41, rule 4—Object of—One of the parties to a suit filing an appeal—If can be given relief on grounds common to him and to other parties who are not parties in the appeal.

The object of the rule enunciated in Order 41, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, is to enable one of the parties to a suit to obtain relief in appeal when the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to him and others. The appellate Court in such an appeal may vary or reverse the decree in favour of all the parties who are in the same interest as the appellant. Relief can be given to the appellant Karam Singh Sobti and another v. Shri Pratap Chand and another, (1964) 4 S.C.R. 647, followed.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Decree dated the 10th July, 1963, of the Allahabad High Court in First Appeal No. 16 of 1953.

C.B. Agarwala, Senior Advocate, (K.P. Gupta, Advocate, with him), for Appellant.

B.C. Misra, Senior Advocate, (O.P. Gupta, Ram Prakash Agarwal and Sultan Singh, Advocates, with him), for Respondent No. 1.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—Firm Lalman Das Chhadamma Lal hereinafter called ‘the plaintiffs’—commenced an action against “Mohan Singh Ratan Lal, through its partners Mohan Singh and Ratan Lal”, in the Court of the Senior Civil Judge, Nainital, for a decree for Rs. 12,883 and interest thereon for value of goods supplied. Ratan Lal denied liability for payment of the amount claimed. Mohan Singh by a separate written statement admitted that goods were supplied by the plaintiffs to the firm, but submitted that he was liable only for one-fifth of the amount claimed. The Trial Judge decreed the claim of the plaintiffs in its entirety against “Mohan Singh and Ratan Lal and the firm known as Mohan Singh Ratan Lal.”

Against the decree, Ratan Lal alone appealed to the High Court of Allahabad. Mohan Singh was impleaded as the second respondent in the appeal. The notice of appeal sent to Mohan Singh was returned unserved and an application made by Counsel for the appellant to serve Mohan Singh “in the ordinary course as well as by registered post” was not disposed of by the Court. On 9th July, 1963, Ratan Lal applied that it was “detected that there had been no service of the notice of appeal upon Mohan Singh and it was essential for the ends of justice that notice of appeal may be served upon Mohan Singh.” The Court by order dated 10th July, 1963 rejected the application and proceeded to hear the appeal. The Court was of the view that since there was a joint decree against Ratan Lal and Mohan Singh in a suit founded on a joint cause of action and the decree against Mohan Singh had become final, Ratan Lal could not claim to be heard on his appeal. The High Court observed :

“If we hear him (Ratan Lal) the result may be that on the success of his appeal there will be two conflicting decisions between the “same parties in the same suit based on the same cause of action. Further more, the appellant has not taken steps to serve the second respondent (Mohan Singh) and the appeal must be dismissed for want of prosecution. On both these grounds we dismiss this appeal.”

Against the order passed by the High Court, this appeal has been preferred with Special Leave.

In our view the judgment of the High Court cannot be sustained. The appeal could not be dismissed on the ground that Mohan Singh was not served with the notice of appeal, nor could the appeal be dismissed on the ground that there was a possibility of two conflicting decrees. Order 41, rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides :

“Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in a suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs, or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be.”

The object of the rule is to enable one of the parties to a suit to obtain relief in appeal when the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to him and others. The Court in such an appeal may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the parties who are in the same interest as the appellant. There was some conflict of judicial opinion in the High Courts on the question whether power under Order 41, rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be exercised where all the parties against whom a decree is passed on a ground which is common to them are not impleaded in the appeal. The preponderance of authority in the High Courts was that even in the absence of a person against whom a decree has been passed on a ground common with the appellant, the appeal was maintainable, and appropriate relief may be granted. It is, however, unnecessary to examine those decisions for, in our judgment, the question has been considered by this Court in *Karam Singh Sobti and another v. Shri Pratap Chand and another*¹. In that case a landlord of certain premises filed an action in ejectment against the tenant and the sub-tenant in respect of premises on the ground that the tenant had sub-let the premises without the landlord's consent. The Trial Judge decreed the suit holding that the landlord had not acquiesced in the sub-letting. The sub-tenant alone appealed to the Additional Senior Subordinate Judge who set aside the order of the Trial Court. It was urged before this Court that the appeal by the sub-tenant to the Subordinate Judge was incompetent, because the tenant against whom a decree in ejectment was passed had not appealed. On certain questions which are not material for the purpose of this judgment, there was difference of opinion between Sarkar, J., on the one hand, and S.K. Das, Acting C.J., and Hidayatullah J., on the other, but the Court unanimously held in that case that the appeal was maintainable before the Subordinate Judge, even though the tenant had not appealed against the order of the Court of First Instance. Sarkar, J., observed at p. 663 :

"The suit had been filed both against the tenant and the sub-tenant, being respectively the Association and the appellant. One decree had been passed by the trial Judge against both. The appellant had his own right to appeal from that decree. That right could not be affected by the Association's decision not to file an appeal. There was one decree and, therefore, the appellant was entitled to have it set aside even though thereby the Association would also be freed from the decree. He could say that that decree was wrong and should be set aside as it was passed on the erroneous finding that the respondent had not acquiesced in the sub-letting by the Association to him. He could challenge that decree on any ground available. The lower appellate Court was, therefore, quite competent in the appeal by the appellant from the joint decree in ejectment against him and the Association, to give him whatever relief he was found entitled to, even though the Association had filed no appeal."

With that view S.K. Das, Acting C.J., and Hidayatullah, J., agreed : see page 652. It is true that in that case the tenant was made a party to the appeal before the Subordinate Judge. But the judgment of the Court proceeded upon a larger ground that the sub-tenant had a right to appeal against the decree passed against him and that right was not affected by the tenant's decision not to file an appeal.

Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that the appeal filed by Ratan Lal if it be heard may possibly result in an order which may prejudicially affect Mohan Singh, and if Mohan Singh has no opportunity of being heard no decree may be passed against him, for to do so would be contrary to the fundamental rules of natural justice. But in the appeal filed by Ratan Lal there is no possibility of a decree being passed which may impose a more onerous liability upon Mohan Singh. The Trial Court has passed a decree against Ratan Lal and Mohan Singh jointly and severally. Mohan Singh is liable for the full amount of the claim of the plaintiffs. If the appeal filed by Ratan Lal succeeds, the Court may reduce the liability of Mohan Singh, but there may conceivably be no order by the Court operating to the prejudice of Mohan Singh in the appeal.

It was also urged by Counsel for the plaintiffs that Ratan Lal had been negligent in the High Court in prosecuting the appeal, and it would be putting a premium upon his negligence to allow him now to prosecute the appeal. It is not possible on the record, as it stands, to say whether failure to serve notice of appeal upon Mohan Singh was wholly attributable to the negligence of Ratan Lal. But even if it be assumed that he was negligent, on that ground he cannot be deprived of his legal right to prosecute the appeal and to claim relief under Order 41, rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if the circumstances of the case warrant it, the decree of the Trial Court proceeded on a ground common to Mohan Singh and Ratan Lal. In the appeal filed by Ratan Lal he was denying liability for the claim of the plaintiffs in its entirety. This was essentially a case in which the Court's jurisdiction under Order 41, rule 4, Code of Civil Procedure could be exercised.

The appeal is allowed and the decree passed by the High Court is set aside. The proceedings are being remanded the High Court will admit the appeal in its original number and hear and dispose of it according to law. There will be no order as to costs in this Court of this appeal. In view of the fact that there has been some negligence on the part of Ratan Lal to prosecute the appeal in the High Court, we direct that he will pay the costs of the appeal in the High Court in any event.

v.

Krishna Bahari and others

... Respondents.

Representation of the People Act (XLIII of 1951), section 92 (a)—Election petition——Inspection of ballot papers—When may be permitted.

The basic requirements to be satisfied before an election tribunal can permit the inspection of ballot papers are : (1) the petition for setting aside the election must contain an adequate statement of the material facts on which the petitioner relies in support of his case, and (2) the tribunal must be prima facie satisfied that in order to decide the dispute and to do complete justice between the parties, inspection of the ballot papers is necessary.

The material facts required to be stated are those facts which can be considered as materials supporting the allegations made. In other words they must be such facts as to afford a basis for the allegations made in the petition and must be points of substance and not of mere form.

The election tribunals in this country have uniformly refused to permit the scrutiny of ballot papers unless there was prima facie evidence in support of the allegations made in the election petition.

The trial Court in the instant case correctly came to the conclusion that before an order of inspection of the ballot papers can be made it must be prima facie satisfied that in order to decide the dispute and to do complete justice between the parties, inspection of the ballot papers is necessary. It did say that it was so satisfied but it gave no reasons whatsoever as to how it came to be satisfied. A judge can be satisfied only on the basis of proof and not on the basis of mere allegations. There is absolutely no proof in this case to support the allegations on the basis of which the scrutiny of the ballot papers was prayed for. The trial Court did not mention in its order even a single reason in support of its satisfaction as to the need for inspecting ballot papers. Every judicial order must be based on reasons and reasons must be disclosed in the order itself. Unfortunately the learned trial Judge had overlooked the importance to be attached to the secrecy of the ballot papers.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 21st May, 1968 of the Allahabad High Court, Lucknow Bench in Civil Misc. Applications Nos. 41 (E) and 42 (E) of 1968 in Election Petition No. 7 of 1967.

G. N. Dikshit, R. N. Dikshit and O. P. Saini, Advocates, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 9.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hedge, J.—This appeal by Special Leave is directed against the order made by Sahgal, J., on 21st May, 1968, permitting the 1st respondent, an elector challenging the validity of the election of the appellant to Lok Sabha from 15, Shahabad Parliatary Constituency in the general election held in 1967, to inspect the packets of ballot papers containing the accepted as well as the rejected votes of the candidates.

In the election in question as many as 10 persons contested. The appellant, the Jan Sangh nominee was the successful candidate. The 9th respondent, Shri Nevatia Rameshwar Prasad, the congress nominee was his nearest rival. In the election petition the petitioner not only wants the appellant's election to be held void, he also wants that the 9th respondent should be declared elected. The election of the appellant has been challenged on various grounds, with most of which we are not at present concerned. We are only concerned with the allegations relating to the irregularity in the scrutinising and counting of votes. The averments relating thereto are found in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the election petition. They are as follows :

(1) only one counting agent was permitted at each table whereas three persons were doing the counting work simultaneously and it was impossible for one man to look into and detect the wrong acts of three persons at the same time.

Under this head it was further mentioned that the counting staff was from amongst the Government servants who had gone on two months strike before the election and during the elections they had adopted hostile attitude towards the congress candidates and had made efforts to bring about their defeat ;

(2) the bundles of votes of either candidates were neither properly made nor properly scrutinised ;

(3) about 5,000 votes of the congress candidates were improperly rejected ignoring the protests of Mr. Malhotra, the election agent of the congress nominee ;

(4) invalid votes were counted in favour of the returned candidate. The votes of the congress candidates were counted for the returned candidate.

In Schedule 'E' certain figures showing the alleged improperly rejected as well as accepted votes pertaining to certain booths are mentioned. It also shows the number of votes of the congress nominee counted as the votes of the returned candidate. Neither the petition nor the Schedule discloses the basis for arriving at those figures.

The election petitioner is neither the candidate nor his election agent. In the election petition, it was not stated that he was even the counting agent. In the verification appended to the election petition, it was averred that the allegations contained in paragraphs 12 to 15 of the election petition were believed by the petitioner to be true on the basis of the information received from the workers of the congress nominee and others which means that the allegations made by him in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the election petition were based on hearsay information. He does not and he could not vouchsafe their accuracy though he claims to have believed the information given to him to be correct. Similarly in the verification appended to Schedule 'E', the election petitioner stated that he has given the information contained in that Schedule on the basis of the information received from the counting agents of the congress nominee. Neither in the election petition nor in the Schedule he mentioned that the counting agents had given him the information in question on the basis of any record made by them.

In the affidavit filed by the petitioner in support of his application seeking permission to inspect the ballot papers, he went one step further. Therein he averred that on one of the days when the counting was going on, he acted as one of the counting agents for the congress nominee. Hence he claims to have personal knowledge of the rejection of some valid votes and the acceptance of some invalid votes. No affidavit of either the congress nominee or his election agent or any of the persons who could have had personal knowledge of the matter was filed in support of that application. No oral evidence has been taken in the case file now. The returned candidate has denied the allegations referred to earlier. It is true that some of the defeated candidates in their written statements have lent support to the allegations made by the election petitioner. The reason for the same is obvious. But even they have not filed any affidavit in support of the concerned allegations. Solely on the basis of the averments made in the election petition and the facts sworn to in the affidavit filed by the election petitioner in support of his application seeking scrutiny of the ballot papers, the trial Court had issued the impugned direction.

Before proceeding to consider the material in support of the impugned order, it is necessary to mention that it is not the case of the election petitioner that any written objection had been filed during the counting either to the acceptance or to the rejection of any vote. In the petition, it is averred that "the Returning Officer on being pointed out by the election agent of respondent No. 9, Shri P.C. Malhotra, said his decision was final and can be questioned through Election Petition." Evidently this averment relates to the objections said to have been taken by Shri Malhotra in respect of the orders made by the returning officer as to the validity of some of the votes. Apart from the fact that the allegation in question is very vague and lacking in details, not even an affidavit of Shri Malhotra has been filed in support of that allegation. Admittedly no application was made to the returning officer for recounting the votes. We have to examine the facts of this case bearing in mind these circumstances.

The importance of maintaining the secrecy of ballot papers and the circumstances under which that secrecy can be violated has been considered by this Court in several cases. In particular we may refer to the decisions of this Court in *Ram Sewak Yadav v. Hussain Kamil Kidwai and others*¹ and *Dr. Jagjit Singh v. Giani Kartar Singh*². These and other decisions of this Court and of the High Courts have laid down certain basic requirements to be satisfied before an election tribunal can permit the inspection of ballot papers. They are :

(1) that the petition for setting aside the election must contain an adequate statement of the material facts on which the petitioner relies in support of his case, and (2) the tribunal must be prima facie satisfied that in order to decide the dispute and to do complete justice between the parties, inspection of the ballot papers is necessary.

The trial Court was of the opinion that if an election petitioner in his election petition gives some figures as to the rejection of valid votes and acceptance of invalid votes, the same must be considered as an adequate statement of material facts. In the instant case apart from giving certain figures whether true or imaginary, the petitioner has not disclosed in the petition the basis on which he arrived at those figures. His bald assertion that he got those figures from the counting agents of the congress nominee cannot afford the necessary basis. He did not say in the petition who those workers were and what is the basis of their information. It is not his case that they maintained any notes or that he examined their notes, if there were any. The material facts required to be stated are those facts which can be considered as materials supporting the allegations made. In other words they must be such facts as to afford a basis for the allegations made in the petition. The facts stated in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the election petition and in Schedule 'E' are mere allegations and are not material facts supporting those allegations. This Court in insisting that the election petitioner should state in the petition the material facts was referring to a point of substance and not of mere form. Unfortunately the trial Court has mistaken the form for the substance. The material facts disclosed by the petitioner must afford an adequate basis for the allegations made.

The learned Trial Judge while deciding the point in issue overlooked certain important circumstances. The election petition is silent as regards certain important aspects. This omission has bearing on the point to be decided. The allegation that the returning officer did not permit the appellant more than one counting agent for each counting table is an extremely vague allegation. It is not the election petitioner's case that the congress nominee had appointed more than one counting agent for any counting table but the returning officer did not accept their appointment. Under section 47 of the Representation of People Act, 1951, a contesting candidate or his election agent may appoint in the prescribed manner one or more persons but not exceeding such number as may be prescribed by the rules, to be present as his counting agent or agents at the counting of votes and when any such appointment is made notice of the appointment shall be given in the prescribed manner to the returning officer. Rules framed under that Act prescribe the number of counting agents that a candidate may appoint. The form of the notice required to be given under section 47 of the Act is given in the rules. The appointment of the counting agents is to be made in the prescribed form in duplicate, one copy of which is to be forwarded to the returning officer while the other copy should be made over to the counting agent. Rules also provide that no counting agent shall be admitted into the place fixed for counting unless he has delivered to the returning officer the second copy of the instrument of his appointment after duly completing and signing the declaration contained therein. The petitioner did not state in the election petition that any of the counting agents appointed by the congress candidate or his election agent in accordance with the rules had been refused admission to the place of counting. Hence the allegation that the returning officer did not permit enough number of counting agents to be appointed is not supported by any statement of facts necessary to be stated. In other words the material facts relating to the allegations made have not been stated.

Now coming to the rejection of the votes polled in favour of the congress nominee, under the rules before a vote is rejected the agents of the candidates must be permitted to examine the concerned ballot paper. Therefore it was quite easy for them to note down the serial number of the concerned ballot papers. The election petition is silent as to the inspection of the ballot papers or whether the counting agents had noted down the serial numbers of those ballot papers or whether those agents raised any objection relating to the validity of those ballot papers; if so who those agents are and what are the serial numbers of the ballot papers to which each one of them advanced their objections. These again are the material facts required to be stated.

As seen earlier the allegations made in the election petition are purported to have been founded on the informations given by others. No one takes direct responsibility for those allegations. No oral evidence was given in support of them, not even affidavits were filed in support of the allegations. The scrutiny of ballot papers was sought on the basis of assertions which were neither accompanied by a statement of material facts nor supported by any evidence.

The trial Court correctly came to the conclusion that before an order of inspection of the ballot papers can be made it must be prima facie satisfied that in order to decide the dispute and to do complete justice between the parties, inspection of the ballot papers is necessary. It did say that it was so satisfied but it gave no reasons whatsoever as to how it came to be satisfied. A judge can be satisfied only on the basis of proof and not on the basis of mere allegations. There is absolutely no proof in this case to support the allegations on the basis of which the scrutiny of the ballot papers was prayed for. The trial Court did not mention in its order even a single reason in support of its satisfaction as to the need for inspecting the ballot papers. Every judicial order must be based on reasons and those reasons must be disclosed in the order itself. Unfortunately the learned Trial Judge had overlooked the importance to be attached to the secrecy of the ballot papers.

We have earlier referred to the principles enunciated by this Court to be followed before ordering the scrutiny of ballot papers. The legal position in England is the same as in this country. In fact our election law is patterned on the basis of the English Election Law. In Halsbury's Laws of England (Volume 14 at page 310, paragraph 559), it is observed :

"The usual practice is for an application for a recount to be made by summons to a judge on the rota for the trial of parliamentary election petitions before the trial on an affidavit showing the grounds on which the application is based. A recount is not granted as of right, but on evidence of good grounds for believing that there has been a mistake on the part of the returning officer."

In Rogers on Elections (Vol. II at p. 199), it is observed that an application for recount should be made by summons supported by affidavits showing grounds. Fraser in his Law of Parliamentary Elections and Election Petitions observes at page 222 :

"A strong case must be made on affidavit before an order can be obtained for inspection of ballot papers or counterfoils."

Even before the Representation of the People Act, 1951, was enacted the law in this country relating to inspection of ballot papers was as stated earlier. The election tribunals in this country have refused to permit the scrutiny of ballot papers unless there was prima facie evidence in support of the allegations made in the election petition—see Tanjore, N.M.R.,¹ Punjab North Case,² Karnal Mohammdan Constituency Case,³ Karnal (South) General Constituency Case,⁴ *Chingleput Case*⁵ see also R. Swaminath's case,⁶ *Seshaiiah v. Koti Reddi*⁷ and *Lakshumanayya v. Rajam Aiyar*⁸.

For the reasons mentioned above we allow this appeal and set aside the order made by the learned trial judge. He will now proceed with the trial of the case in accordance with law. The 1st respondent, the election petitioner shall pay the costs of the appellant in this appeal.

Wakfs Act (XXIX of 1954), section 57 (1) and (3)—Scope.

Under the Bengal Wakfs Act the Commissioner has a definite duty to perform in all suits in which the interests of the wakf are involved. Where the Commissioner was made a party to a suit praying for a declaration that a wakf was invalid, inoperative and void, and he contested the suit, it is clear he had notice of the suit. The fact that subsequently the Commissioner was given up as a party and he agreed that his name may be struck off as a defendant and the suit was compromised and a decree of declaration that the wakf was invalid and void was passed, does not mean that the Commissioner had no notice of the suit or decree.

It is no doubt true that sub-section (1) of section 70 of the Act requires that in every suit or proceedings in respect of any wakf property the Court shall issue a notice to the Commissioner. But where the Commissioner is a party defendant in the suit and he has actually appeared in the suit, it is equivalent to a notice under section 70 (1) of the Act. While it is true that the mere fact that the Commissioner had private knowledge in some capacity or other of the proceedings is not enough to constitute notice under section 70 (1), where he has been made a party to the suit and he had knowledge of its compromise, there is no need to give another special notice under the section.

Section 70 (1) enables the Commissioner to have a decree declared void only if he had no notice of the proceedings and he had no prior knowledge of the suit. Where the Commissioner had knowledge of the suit he cannot claim a second knowledge as the start of limitation. The notice contemplated under section 70 (1) may be given better by a letter from the Court or by way of service of summons where he was a party to the suit. The fact that he was later struck off from the suit to which course he did not object and the suit was decreed thereafter cannot entitle the Commissioner to file an application under sub-section (4) to set aside the decree that he had no notice of the compromise petition.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 20th August, 1964, of the Calcutta High Court in Civil Rule No. 1715 of 1961.

D.N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Appellant.

B.C. Mitter and S.C. Majumder, Advocates, for Respondent No. 1.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hidayatullah. C. J.—This is an appeal by Special Leave from the judgment and order of the High Court of Calcutta, 20th August, 1964, in an application under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, reversing the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah. The facts are as follows :

One Haji Abdul Karim, grandfather of respondents 2 to 4 executed a Wakf-al-aulad on 30th March, 1917. He constituted himself as the first Mutwali and named his two sons and widow as Mutwalis after his own death. The Wakf provided for the benefit of the family and after the extinction of all the family a scheme for feeding the poor. On 14th February, 1956, the present appellant Ayesha Bibi filed a suit claiming 1/16th of the property as a sharer after the death of her husband Abdul Hamid. This claim was made against respondents 2 to 4 who were the Mutwalis. Ayesha Bibi joined the Commissioner of Wakfs, West Bengal as a defendant to the suit. The suit was filed in the Court of Munsif, Howrah and reliefs claimed were a declaration that the Wakf was invalid, inoperative and void and that its enrolment in the Wakf Office was wrongly done and was of no avail. She also asked for a permanent injunction restraining the Commissioner of West Bengal and other respondents from interfering with the possession of the property. The Commissioner of Wakfs appeared in answer to the notice of the suit and filed a written statement on 4th April, 1956. He contended that the properties were governed by the Wakf which was valid and also that he was entitled to a notice under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure before the suit was filed. He stated that although he was entitled to a notice under section 70 (1) of the Bengal Wakfs Act, 1934, it was not necessary to add him as a defendant and he denied collusion between himself and the other defendants. He observed that the other defendants were interested in secularising the wakf property for their own selfish ends.

On 15th November, 1957, an application for amendment of the relief against the Wakf Commissioner was made to which the Wakfs Commissioner objected. In his objections, he stated that the suit was of a collusive nature as was apparent from the nature of the pleadings of the plaintiff and defendants other than himself. The petition, however, was allowed. No action was taken by the Commissioner to get that order set aside. On 15th May, 1958 the parties to the suit, other than the Commissioner, filed an application of compromise and 22nd May, 1958, was fixed for decision. On the same day an application for striking off the name of the Commissioner from the array of the defendants was made. This was heard in the presence of the Counsel for the Commissioner and he did not object to the name being struck off. As a result the name of the Commissioner was struck off as a defendant. The suit was also decreed the same day on compromise declaring the Wakf to be invalid and void and granting a perpetual injunction.

On 20th June, 1958, the Commissioner made an application under section 70 (4) of the Act for a declaration that the decree was void as no notice was given to him under section 70 (1) of the Act. The appellant objected but on 20th April, 1960, the Munsif allowed the application and declared the decree to be void. The Commissioner appealed to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah and the appeal was allowed. It was held that the application under section 70 (4) was incompetent as the Commissioner was present in the suit and the compromise decree was passed with the knowledge of the Commissioner and there was no need for a fresh notice to him under section 70 (1) of the Act. The Commissioner then filed a revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and a learned Single Judge of the High Court by order, now under appeal, reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and restored the decree of the Munsif. The order is challenged in this appeal.

Before we consider the question whether the Commissioner's application under section 70 (4) was proper it is necessary to examine the scheme of the Wakf Act. The Act was passed to make provision for proper administration of Wakf properties in Bengal. It applies to all wakfs whether created before or after the commencement of the Act, any property of which is situated in Bengal. By Chapter II a Wakf Board is constituted and a whole-time Officer called the Commissioner of Wakfs is appointed. Chapter III lays down the functions of the Board and the Commissioner and one of the functions under section 34 is the protection of Wakfs-al-al-aulad. Chapter IV deals with the enrolment of the Wakfs for which purpose a register of Wakfs is maintained. Under section 45 the Commissioner has the power to enroll wakfs and also to amend the register from time to time. Under section 46-A the decision of the Commissioner is final subject to a decision of a competent Court. Chapter V deals with wakf accounts and Chapter VI with statements of Wakfs-al-al-aulad. Chapter VII creates a bar to transfer of immovable property of wakfs. Chapter VIII lays down the duties of Mutwalis with other ancillary matters. Chapter IX deals with finance and Chapter X deals with judicial proceedings. Chapters XI, XII and XIII deal with amendment and appeals, rule-making power of the Provincial Government and power of the Board to make bylaws and include some miscellaneous provisions.

We are concerned in this case with Chapter X which deals with judicial proceedings. Section 69 in this Chapter provides as follows :

"69. Bar to compromise of suit or proceeding without sanction of Court. No suit or proceeding by or against a Mutwali as such in any Court shall be compromised without the sanction of the trying Court."

Section 70 then provides :

"70. Notice of suits, etc., be given to the Commissioner.

(1) In every suit or proceeding in respect of any wakf property or of a mutwali as such except a suit or proceeding for the recovery of rent by or on behalf of the mutwali the Court shall issue notice to the Commissioner at the cost of the party instituting such suit or proceeding.

(2) Before any wakf property is notified for sale in execution of a decree, notice shall be given by the Court to the Commissioner.

(3) Before any wakf property is notified for sale for the recovery of any revenue, cess, rates or takes due to the Crown or to local authority notice shall be given the Commissioner by the Court, Collector or other person under whose order the sale is notified.

(4) In the absence of a notice under sub-section (1) any decree or order passed in the suit or proceeding shall be declared void, if the Commissioner, within one month of his coming to know of such suit or proceeding, applies to the Court in this behalf.

(5) In the absence of a notice under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) the sale shall be declared void, if the Commissioner within one month of his coming to know of the sale, applies in this behalf to the Court, or other authority under whose order the sale was held."

Section 71 enables the Commissioner to join as a party in any litigation on his own application and to conduct or defend certain suits or proceedings on behalf of or in the interest of the wakf.

It will be noticed from the analysis of the Act that the Commissioner has a definite duty to perform in all suits in which the interests of the wakf are involved. Sub-section (1) of section 70 requires that in every suit or proceedings in respect of any wakf property the Court shall issue a notice to the Commissioner. This was done here because the Commissioner was a party and a summons had gone to him from the Court. It is contended before us that this was a not notice but only a summons but we think that nothing much turns upon the distinction. The Commissioner had notice of the proceedings. He appeared in the case, defended the wakf, characterised the suit as collusive and he was fully cognizant of all that was happening in the suit. The learned Judge in the High Court also held that there was no need to give the Commissioner another notice under sub-section (1) because the Commissioner had already notice of the suit.

The question, therefore, is whether in the absence of a notice under sub-section (1) the decree could be declared to be void. Here the argument of the Commissioner in the High Court was that he had been removed from the array of the defendants and that he was, therefore, entitled to a special notice of the petition of compromise in the case. It is to be noticed that section 70 speaks of several special notices, such as, in sub-section (2) before any wakf property is notified for sale in execution of a decree, or in sub-section (3) before any wakf property is notified for sale for the recovery of any revenue, cess, rates or taxes, but it does not provide for any special notice of a petition for compromise of a suit except the first notice that a suit had been filed in the Court. It is significant that in section 69 although compromise cannot be made without the sanction of the trying Court, there is no mention of any special notice to the Commissioner. It follows, therefore, that the Commissioner was entitled to a notice of the suit. That may be by a letter from the Court giving him this notice, or, if he was made a party, by a summons to attend the Court. In the present case the second course was followed and a copy of the plaint must have accompanied the summons and in our opinion this was sufficient compliance with the provisions of the first sub-section of section 70. It is to be recalled that the Commissioner did appear, filed a written-statement, contested the suit and also described it as a collusive action between the plaintiff and the other defendants. It is, however, surprising that when an application was made for striking off his name from the array of the defendants the Commissioner agreed to such course. This meant that in spite of notice to him of the collusive nature of the suit he was content to remain outside the suit and to give up all his pleas about the wakf and the collusive nature of the suit. Having so acted it seems difficult to think that the decree could be declared void simply because the Commissioner had no special notice of the compromise. No special notice of compromise petition is required to be issued under the Act. He had notice of whole of the suit and of the claim made by the plaintiff in the case. He was afforded an opportunity to resist the suit and, in fact, resisted it but later gave up the fight and agreed to go out of the suit. In these circumstances, it will be wrong to hold that the decree was void because the Commissioner was not given a notice of the compromise petition.

Learned Counsel for the Commissioner relied strongly upon a decision of the Madras High Court reported in *State Wakf Board, Madras v. Abdul Azeez Sahib and others*¹, in which the decision in the present case was noticed and applied for declaring a decree void. In that case the Counsel for the representatives of Wakf Board, Mr. Sherfuddin was also for some time the Chairman of the Wakf Board and his knowledge of the suit was attributed to the State Wakf Board and it was held that there was notice as required by section 57 (1) of Wakf Act, 1954 (XXIX of 1954), section 57 (1) of that Act read :

“In every suit or proceeding relating to title to wakf property.....the Court shall issue notice to the Board at the cost of the party instituting such suit or proceeding.”

Under section 57 (3) it was further provided :

“In the absence of a notice under sub-section (1), any decree or order passed in the suit or proceeding shall be declared void, if the Board, within one month of its coming to know of such suit or proceeding, applies to the Court in this behalf.”

Under the third sub-section quoted here the application had to be made within one month of the knowledge of the Board and it was held by the trial Judge that knowledge of Mr. Sherfuddin was knowledge of the Board and the application was delayed. Reversing this decision the learned Chief Justice of Madras held that knowledge of Mr. Sherfuddin was not the knowledge of the Chairman of the State Wakf Board and could not be held to constitute knowledge within the section. According to the learned Chief Justice the knowledge which started limitation for the application was official knowledge in his capacity as a Chairman and not in his capacity as Counsel. This case is thus distinguishable. Here the Commissioner of Wakfs Board was made a party and had full notice of the pendency of the suit and that it was a collusive suit between the plaintiff and the Mutwalis. It cannot be said, therefore, that he had no knowledge or that he had no notice of the proceedings. Indeed the learned Chief Justice of Madras while relying upon the decision in the present appeal also said that the facts of the two cases were quite different and the main point involved was also different. He only relied upon a passage that in the judgment of the learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court the private knowledge of the Commissioner did not exonerate the Court from its obligation to give notice to the Board. There is no question here of any private knowledge. The knowledge was provided by the summons to the Commissioner and he did appear in the case. In the other case there was no notice whatever from the Court, nor even summons and it is thus clearly distinguishable.

The learned Counsel further relied upon *Muzafar Ahmed v. Indra Kumar Das and others*². In that case the Commissioner was sent a notice but was not made a party. The suit was dismissed. In the appeal that followed the Commissioner was not made a party and no notice of appeal was served on him. The appeal was allowed. In the second appeal a ground was taken that the appeal below was incompetent, as there was no notice to the Commissioner. Notice of the second appeal was, however, issued to the Commissioner. The decree was held to be not void but voidable and as the Commissioner had not applied within a month, the decree was allowed to stand. The Court also held that the words ‘suit or proceeding’ in section 70 (4) did not include an appeal. There is much in this decision which may require careful consideration. It is sufficient to say that the decision does not support the present contention of the Commissioner.

*Benoy Kumar Acharies Choudhury and others v. Ahamma Ali and another*³, only lays down that under section 70 of the Act, a notice is necessary to be served on the Commissioner in a suit in respect of wakf property even though the wakf may not be admitted. To this proposition no exception can be taken but it does not advance the case of the Commissioner.

1. (1967) 1 M.L.J. 190 : A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 79.

2. (1943) 77 C.L.J. 159.
3. (1942) 46 C.W.N. 339.

On the other hand, in *The Commissioner of Wakfs, Bengal v. Shahbada Mohammed Zahangir Shah*¹, it was held that although a Commissioner was entitled to a notice of a suit, under section 70 of the Wakf Act, but if he actually contested the suit as a party-defendant, he could be treated as an intervener under section 71, even if no notice was given to him and that the suit was not vitiated. This case supports the proposition that joining the Commissioner as a party and his actual appearance in the suit stand equal to a notice under section 70 (1).

None of the cases really supports the proposition now contended for before us. The language of the fourth sub-section of section 70 is quite clear that the Commissioner must not have knowledge previously of the suit. Where the Commissioner has knowledge of the suit he cannot claim a second knowledge as the start of limitation. In other words, his presence as a party in the suit after summons to him must be treated as a notice to him under the first sub-section of section 70. The decision of the Subordinate Judge was thus correct and was wrongly reversed.

The Commissioner attempted to raise the question of a notice under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure but that question could only arise in the original suit and not in these proceedings. In the result the judgment under appeal must be set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah restored with costs against the Commissioner. We regret this result and only hope that some way will be found out of the difficulty created by the foolish action of the Commissioner in leaving the field clear for the compromise of the suit.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J. C. SHAH AND G. K. MITTER, JJ.

Maganti Subrahmanyam (dead) by his legal representatives ... Appellant,*

v.

The State of Andhra Pradesh ... Respondent.

Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Communal Forest and Private Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act (1947) and Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act (XXVI of 1948)—Effect—Later enactment, if repeals the earlier one—Section 2 (b) and section 4 (1) and (3)—Forest land,—Meaning of.

It is no doubt true that the Preamble to the Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Communal Forest and Private Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act, 1947, shows that it was enacted to prevent indiscriminate alienation of communal forest and private lands pending enactment of legislation for acquiring the interests of landholders in such estates and introducing ryotwari settlement therein. No fixed duration of the Act was specified and it is impossible to hold that merely because of the preamble the Act is only a temporary Act. The enactment of the later Act, the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1948 cannot be considered as repealing the earlier Act merely because the later Act has the effect of repealing permanency settlements in the State and the acquisition of the interests of landholders in permanently settled and certain other estates.

The definition of 'forest land' in section 2 (b) of the Act is an inclusive one and it does not mean that before a piece of land could be said to be forest land there would have to be a notification by the Government under the Act. The District Judge is the competent authority under section 4 of the Act to determine disputes as to the nature of the land.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Order dated the 24th March, 1965 of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Civil Revision Petition No. 966 of 1962.

A. V. V. Nair, Advocate, for Appellant.

P. Ram Reddy, Senior Advocate (B. Parthasarathy, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mitter, J.—This appeal by Special Leave is from a common judgment and order of the High Court of Madras disposing of three Revision Applications arising out of O.P. No. 95 of 1948 filed under section 4 (3) and (4) of the Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Communal Forest and Private Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act, 1947 (hereinafter called the 'Act').

The central question in this appeal is, whether certain transfers of lands alleged to be forest lands made by the 6th respondent herein become void and inoperative under section 4 of the Act. The said respondent who was a big landholder granted a patta to his wife, 7th respondent, for Ac. 100-00 of land on 9th November, 1944. Another patta was similarly granted to the appellant in respect of Ac. 90-00 of land on 25th November, 1944. On the same day, respondent No. 6 granted a third patta for Ac. 200-00 of land to respondents 2 to 5. The Act came into force on 25th October, 1947. On 15th October, 1948 Original Petition No. 95 of 1948 was filed in the District Court of Eluru by two ryots for a declaration that the alienations were void and did not confer any rights on the alienees. Thereafter the said petition was split into two parts, O.P. No. 95 of 1948 being directed against respondents 1 to 6 while O.P. No. 95-(a) of 1948 was directed against the 7th respondent. The petitions were disposed of by an order of the District Judge dated 18th July, 1950 holding that lands covered by the pattas were forest lands and all the alienations were void and inoperative. A Civil Revision Petition was filed in the High Court of Madras by respondents 1 to 5 against the order of the District Judge. This was numbered as C.R.P. No. 22 of 1951. Respondent No. 7 filed a Miscellaneous Petition No. 9534 of 1950 in the High Court of Madras. By order dated 6th August, 1962 both the petitions were dismissed by a single Judge of the Madras High Court. This order was however set aside in a Letters Patent Appeal filed by respondents 1 to 5 (No. 261 of 1952) wherein it was held that the petitioners as ryots had no right to get transposed as the petitioner. The State Government thereafter got itself transposed as the petitioner. The District Court however held that the petition was not maintainable by reason of the repeal of the Act by reason of the passing of a subsequent Act (XXVI of 1948) styled the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1948, hereinafter referred to as the Act of 1948. Against this the State Government filed a Revision Petition in the High Court of Andhra Pradesh numbering 1555 of 1955. The High Court held that the dismissal of the petition on the ground of repeal of the Act was improper and that the petition should be disposed of on the merits and remitted the matter to the District Judge. By a judgment dated 30th November, 1960 the District Judge allowed the petition negating the contentions of the respondent but holding that the lands were forest lands and transfers thereof were void. The appellant and others filed Civil Revision Petitions in the High Court of Andhra Pradesh which were disposed of and dismissed by a common judgment dated 24th August, 1965. Hence this appeal.

The points urged before us by learned Counsel for the appellant were: (1) The Act applied only to lands which were admittedly forest lands and the operation thereof could not be extended to lands in respect of which there was a dispute as to the nature thereof. It was argued that any such dispute could only be decided by the Settlement Officer and not by the District Judge. (2) The Act was a temporary Act and all proceedings thereunder came to an end with the repeal of the Act; and (3) A notification by the State Government describing the land as forest land was an essential pre-requisite to the application of the Act.

The purpose of the Act was to prohibit the alienation of communal, forest and private lands in estates in the Province of Madras and the preamble to the Act shows that it was enacted to prevent indiscriminate alienation of communal, forest and private lands in estates in the Province of Madras pending the enactment of legislation for acquiring the interests of landholders in such estates and introducing ryotwari settlement therein. No fixed duration of the Act was specified and it is impossible to hold that merely because of the above preamble the Act became a temporary Act., the definition of 'forest land' is given in section 2 (b) of the Act reading :

“ ‘Forest land’ includes any waste land containing trees and shrubs pasture land and other class of land declared by the State Government to be forest land by notification in the Fort Samy. George Gazette ;”

Sub-section (1) of section 3 prohibited landholders from selling, mortgaging, converting into ryoti land, leasing or otherwise assigning or alienating any communal or forest land in an estate without the previous sanction of the District Collector. on or after the date on which the Ordinance which preceded the Act came into force, namely, the 27th June. 1947. Section 4 (1) provided that :

“ Any transaction of the nature prohibited by section 3 which took place. in the case of any communal or forest land, on or after the 31st day of October, 1939 . . . shall be void and inoperative and shall not confer or take away, or be deemed to have conferred or taken away, any right whatever on or from any party to the transaction :

* * * * *

This sub-section had a proviso with several clauses. Our attention was drawn to clauses (iii), (iv) and (v) of the proviso out in our opinion one of these provisos was applicable to the facts of the case so as to exclude the operation of sub-section 1 of section 4 Under sub-section (3) of section 4.

“ If any dispute arises as to the validity of the claim of any person to any land under clauses (i) to (v) of the proviso to sub-section (1), it shall be open to such person or to any other persons interested in the transaction or to the State Government to apply to the District Judge of the district in which the land is situated, for a decision as to the validity of such claim.”

Under sub-section (4) the District Judge to whom such application is made was to decide whether the claim to the land was valid or not after giving notice to all persons concerned and where the application was not made by the State Government, to the Government itself. and his decision was to be final. Madras Act (XXVI of 1948) was passed on 19th April, 1949 being an Act to provide for the repeal of the Permanent Settlement, the acquisition of the rights of landholders in permanently settled and certain other estates in the Province of Madras, and the introduction of ryotwari settlement in such estates. Apparently because of the preamble to the Act it was contended that with the enactment of the repeal of the Permanent Settlement by the Act of 1948 which also provided for the acquisition of the rights of landholders in permanently settled estates, the Act stood repealed. We fail to see how because of the preamble to the Act it can be said that it stood repealed by the enactment of the later Act unless there were express words to that effect or unless there was necessary implication. It does not stand to reason to hold that the alienation of large blocks of land which were rendered void under the Act became good by reason of the passing of the later Act. Our attention was drawn to section 63 of the later Act which provided that :

“ If any question arises whether any land in an estate is a forest or is situated in a forest, or as to the limits of a forest, it shall be determined by the Settlement Officer, subject to an appeal to the Director within such time as may be prescribed and also to revision by the Board of Revenue.”

In terms the section was only prospective and it did not seek to impeach any transaction which was effected before the Act and was not applicable to transactions anterior to the Act. In our opinion section 56 (1) of the later Act to which our attention was drawn by the learned Counsel does not fall for consideration in this case and the disputes covered by that section do not embrace the question before us.

Madras General Clauses Act (I of 1891), deals with the effect of repeals of statutes. Section 8 sub-section (f) thereof provides that :

“Where any Act, to which this Chapter applies, repeals any other enactment, then the repeal shall not—

(a) to (c)

(f) affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, fine, penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid; and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced, and any such fine, penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed, as if the repealing Act had not been passed.”

This shows that even if there was a repeal any investigation started before the repeal would have to be continued and legal proceedings under the Act could be prosecuted as if the repealing Act had not been passed.

There is also no force in the contention that unless there was a notification under section 2 (b) of the Act declaring a particular land to be forest land, the applicability of the Act would be excluded. The definition of ‘forest land’ in that section is an inclusive one and shows that ‘forest land’ would include not only waste land containing trees, shrubs and pasture lands but also any other class of lands declared by Government to be forest land. This does not mean that before a piece of land could be said to be forest land there would have to be a notification by the Government under the Act.

Lastly, Counsel contended that sub-section (1) of section 20 of the later Act as originally enacted applies to forest lands and therefore the later Act became applicable thereto. The original section was however substituted, for another by section 9 of the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) (Amendment) Act, 1956 which was to be deemed to have come into force on 19th April, 1949, being the date on which the Act of 1948 originally came into force. The section as it now stands did not confer any jurisdiction on the Settlement Officer to determine any question as to whether any land was forest land within the meaning of the Act and consequently the adjudication by the District Judge under sub-section (4) of section 4 was quite competent. Accordingly we dismiss the appeal, but do not think it necessary to make any order for costs relating thereto.

Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act (XLIV of 1957), section 3 and Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules (1959), rule 3—Validity of.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 16—Scope.

Interpretation of Statutes—Provision as exception to general rule—Construction.

Section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act, 1957, in so far as it relates to Telangana and rule 3 of the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules, 1959 are ultra vires the Constitution of India.

Under Article 16 of the Constitution, by the first clause equality of opportunity in employment or appointment to an office is guaranteed. By the second clause, there can be no discrimination, among other things, on the ground of residence. An exception is however made in clause (3) to cover cases where local sentiments have to be respected or to prevent an inroad from more advanced States into less developed States. Parliament is entitled to make law prescribing, in regard to a class or classes of employment, residence within a State or Union territory prior to such employment or appointment. But that clause refers to residence within the State in the sense of the whole State as the venue for residential qualification and not residence in districts, taluks, cities, towns or villages within the State. The words 'any requirement' in the clause cannot be read as to warrant something which could have been said more specifically. These words bear upon the kind of residence or its duration rather than its location within the State.

Clause (3) of Article 16 which is in the nature of an exception to the general rule-making every office or employment open and available to every citizen and offices or employment in one part of India open to citizens in all other parts of India. As such it should be construed in a narrow and strict manner and not in a wide and liberal way.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Hidayatullah, C.J.—The petitioners are persons employed in the ministerial services of the Andhra Pradesh Government. All of them were working in various offices located in the cities of Hyderabad and Secunderabad. On 19th January, 1969, leaders of all political parties in the Legislature of the Andhra Pradesh State appeared to have met and reached the decision that to implement what are called 'Telengana Safeguards', the following measures should be taken :

"All non-domicile persons, who have been appointed either directly, by promotion or by transfer to posts reserved under the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules, 1959 for domiciles of Telengana region will be immediately relieved from service. The posts so rendered vacant will be filled by qualified candidates possessing domicile qualifications and in cases where such candidates are not available the posts shall be left unfilled till qualified domicile candidates become available. Action on the above lines will be taken immediately.

All non-domicile employees so relieved shall be provided employment in the Andhra region without break in service and by creating supernumerary posts, if necessary."

The Government of Andhra Pradesh then passed an order [G.O. Ms. 36, G.A. (S.R.) Dept.] on 21st January, 1969, relieving before 28th February, 1969, all non-domicile persons appointed on or after 1st November, 1956 to certain categories of posts reserved for domiciles of Telengana under the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules, 1959. Names of such incumbents were to be shown in a pro forma and they were to be employed in the Andhra region without break in service by creating supernumerary posts, if necessary. These supernumerary posts were to be treated as temporary addition to the strength of the office concerned and were to be adjusted against future vacancies in corresponding posts as they arose. The action was based upon section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act (XLIV of 1957), which was an Act of Parliament made in pursuance of clause (3) of Article 16 of the Constitution making special provision for requirement as to residence and brought into force on 21st March, 1959. Section 3 of the Act gave the power to make Rules in respect of certain classes of employment in certain areas. It provided :

“3. Power to make rules in respect of certain classes of public employment certain areas,—

(1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules prescribing, in regard to appointments to—

(a) any subordinate service or post under the State Government of Andhra Pradesh, or any requirement as to residence within the Telengana area or the said Union territory as the case may be, prior to such appointment.

*	*	*	*	*
*	*	*	*	*

(2) In this section,—

(a) *	*	*	*	*

(b) “Telengana area” comprises all the territories specified in sub-section (1) of section 3 of the State Reorganisation Act, 1956.”

Under section 4 the Rules had to be laid before each House of Parliament for a period of not less than 30 days and Parliament could make such alterations as it liked. Under section 5 the Rules had a life of 5 years but by subsequent legislation the period was extended to 10 years. It is said that the period is to be extended by another 5 years. The Rules were made on 21st March, 1959. They are called the Andhra Pradesh Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Rules, 1959. Rule 3 provides :

“3. Requirement as a residence Prior to Appointment :

A person shall not be eligible for appointment to a post within the Telengana area under the State Government of Andhra Pradesh or to a post under a local authority (other than a cantonment board) in the said area unless—

(i) he has been continuously residing within the said area for a period of not less than fifteen years immediately preceeding the prescribed date ; and

(ii) he produces before the appointment authority concerned, if so required by it, a certificate of eligibility granted under these rules ;

Provided that in relation to posts in the secretariat Departments and the Offices of the Heads of Departments of the State Government of Andhra Pradesh situated in the cities of Hyderabad and Secunderabad, the requirement as to residence laid down in this rule shall apply to the filling of only the second vacancy in every unit of three vacancies which are to be filled by direct recruitment ;

Provided further that any period of temporary absence from the Telengana area for the purpose of prosecuting his studies or for undergoing medical treatment or any period of such temporary absence not exceeding three months for any other reasons shall not be deemed to constitute a break in the continuity of such residence, but for purpose of calculating the said period of fifteen years any such period of temporary absence shall be excluded.”

The petitioners were appointed between 27th December, 1956, and 4th July, 1968. They challenge the Act, the Rules and the proposed action as ultra vires the Constitution. Their case is that Article 16 (3) under which the Act and the Rules purport to be made has been misunderstood as conferring a power to make a law prescribing requirement as to residence in a part of a State. For this reason section 3 of the Act is challenged as ultra vires the Constitution.

Article 16 on which the Act, the Rules and the present action are all based, reads :

16. Equality of opportunity in matters of public employment.

(1) There shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State.

(2) No citizen shall, on grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, descent place of birth, residence or any of them, be ineligible for, or discriminated against in respect of, any employment or office under the State.

(3) Nothing in this article shall prevent Parliament from making, any law prescribing, in regard to a class or classes of employment or appointment to an office under the Government of, or any local or other authority within, a State or Union territory, any requirement as to residence within the State or Union territory prior to such employment or appointment.

(4)	*	*	*	*	*

The question is one of construction of this article, particularly of the first three clauses, to find out the ambit of the law-making power of Parliament. The first clause emphasises that there shall be in India equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters of employment or appointment to any office under the State. The word 'State' here is to be understood in the extended sense given to it by the definition of that word in Article 12. The second clause then specifies a prohibition against discrimination only on the grounds of religion, race, sex, descent, place of birth, residence or any of them. The intention here is to make every office or employment open and available to every citizen, and inter alia to make offices or employment in one part of India open to citizens in all other parts of India. The third clause then makes an exception. This clause was amended by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956. For the original words of the clause 'under any State specified in the First Schedule or any local or other authority within its territory any requirement as to residence within that State', the present words from 'under the Government' to 'Union territory' have been substituted. Nothing turns upon the amendment which seeks to apply the exception in the clause to Union territory and to remove ambiguity in language.

The clause thus enables Parliament to make a law in a special case prescribing any requirement as to residence within a State or Union territory prior to appointment, as a condition of employment in the State or Union territory. Under Article 35 (a) this power is conferred upon Parliament but is denied to the Legislatures of the States, notwithstanding anything in the Constitution, and under (b) any law in force immediately, before the commencement of the Constitution in respect to the matter shall subject to the terms thereof and subject to such adaptations that may be made under Article 372 is to continue in force until altered or repealed or amended by Parliament.

The legislative power to create residential qualification for employment is thus exclusively conferred on Parliament. Parliament can make any law which prescribes any requirement as to residence within the State or Union territory prior to employment or appointment to an office in that State or Union territory. Two questions arise here. Firstly, whether Parliament, while prescribing the requirement, may prescribe the requirement of residence in a particular part of the State; and, secondly, whether Parliament can delegate this function by making a declaration and leaving the details to be filled in by the rule making power of the Central or State Governments.

Mr. S. V. Gupte, for the petitioners, points out that the Constitution is speaking of State and Union territory. It has already made a declaration that no person shall be disqualified for any office in the territory of India, because of his residence in any particular part of India. The exception, therefore, must be viewed narrowly and not carried to excess by interpretation. The article speaks of residence in a State and means only that. If it chose to speak of residence in parts of State such as Districts, Taluqas, cities, towns, etc., more appropriate and specific language could have been used such as 'any requirement as to residence within that State or Union territory or part of that State or Union territory.' Having used the word State, the unit State is only meant and not any part thereof. Reference is made to the history of the drafting of the Article and the debates in the Constituent Assembly which bear out this contention.

On the other hand, Mr. Satalvad bases his argument on two things. He contends that the power is given to Parliament to make any law and, therefore, Parliament is supreme and can make any law on the subject as the article says. He very ingeniously shifts the emphasis to the words 'any requirement' and contends that the requirement may be as to residence in the State or any particular part of State.

The claim for supremacy of Parliament is misconceived. Parliament in this, as in other matters, is supreme only in so far as the Constitution makes it. Where the Constitution does not concede supremacy, Parliament must act within its appointed functions and not transgress them. What the Constitution says is a matter for construction of the language of the Constitution. Which is the proper construction of the two suggested? By the first clause equality of opportunity in employment or appointment to an office is guaranteed. By the second clause, there can be no discrimination, among other things, on the ground of residence. Realising, however, that sometimes local sentiments may have to be respected or sometimes an inroad from more advanced States into less developed States may have to be prevented and a residential qualification may, therefore, have to be prescribed, the exception in clause (3) was made. Even so, that clause spoke of residence within the State. The claim of Mr. Satalvad that Parliament can make a provision regarding residence in any particular part of a State would render the general prohibition lose all its meaning. The words 'any requirement' cannot be read to warrant something which could have been said more specifically. These words bear upon the kind of residence or its duration rather than its location within the State. We accept the argument of Mr. Gupte that the Constitution, as it stands, speaks of a whole State as the venue for residential qualification and it is impossible to think that the Constituent Assembly was thinking of residence in Districts, Taluqas, cities, towns or villages. The fact that this clause is an exception and came as an amendment must dictate that a narrow construction upon the exception should be placed as indeed the debates in the Constituent Assembly also seem to indicate. We accordingly reject the contention of Mr. Satalvad seeking to put a very wide and liberal construction upon the words 'any law' and 'any requirement.' These words are obviously controlled by the words 'residence within the State or Union territory' which words mean what they say, neither more nor less. It follows, therefore, that section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act, 1957, in so far as it relates to Telangana (and we say nothing about the other parts) and rule 3 of the Rules under it are ultra vires the Constitution.

In view of our conclusion on this point it is not necessary to express any opinion whether delegation to the Central and/or State Governments to provide by rules for the further implementing of the law made by Parliament is valid or not.

It was argued that the Mulki Rules existing in the former Hyderabad State must continue to operate by virtue of Article 35 (b) in this area. This point is not raised by the petitions under consideration and no expression of opinion by us is desirable.

For the reasons given above we quash the orders passed and declare section 3 of the Public Employment (Requirement as to Residence) Act, 1957 as also rule 3 of the Rules ultra vires the Constitution. The petitions shall be allowed but there shall be no order about costs.

Constitution of India (1950), Article 30—Right of minorities to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice—Scope —If available only to citizens of India.

The guarantee of protection under Article 30 of the Constitution of India is not restricted to educational institutions established after the commencement of the Constitution. Even institutions which had been established before the Constitution and continued to be administered by minorities, either based on religion or language qualify for the protection of the right of minorities declared by Article 30.

In re The Kerala Education Bill, 1957, (1959) S.C.J. 321 : (1959) S.C.R. 995, referred.

It is true that only persons residing in India will be competent to claim the protection under the Article and foreigners, not resident in India, cannot claim the right to set up educational institutions of their choice. But that does not however mean that the protection may be availed of only in respect of an institution established before the Constitution of India by persons born and resident in British India. While the protection under Article 29 may be claimed only by Indian citizens, Article 30 does not expressly refer to citizenship as a qualification for the members of the minorities. The language of Article 30 is wide and must receive its full meaning and its scope cannot be cut down by considerations of Article 23 or 29 of the Constitution. The fact that funds were obtained from the United Kingdom for assisting in setting up and developing a school by the minorities or that the management of the school was carried on by some persons who may not have been born in India is not a ground for denying the protection of Article 30.

Rev. Father W. Proost and others v. The State of Bihar and others, (1969) 1 S.C.J. 700 ; Rev. Sidhajibhai Sabhai and others v. State of Bombay and another, (1963) 3 S.C.R. 837, referred.

Prior to the enactment of the Constitution there was no settled concept of Indian citizenship, independently of citizenship of British Empire, and such concepts cannot be incorporated in the interpretation of Article 30.

Appeal from the Judgment and Order, dated the 10th September, 1968 of the Patna High Court in Civil Writ Jurisdiction Case No. 503 of 1967 and Petition under Article 32 of the Constitution of India for enforcement of the Fundamental Rights.

M. C. Setalvad, Senior Advocate (R. Gopalakrishnan, Advocate, with him), for Appellants (In C. A. No. 2346 of 1968).

R. Gopalakrishnan, Advocate, for Petitioners (In W. P. Nos. 430 and 431 of 1968).

D. Goburdhun, Advocate, for Respondents (In C. A. No. 2346 of 1968).

B. P. Jha, Advocate, for Respondents (In W. Ps. Nos. 430 and 431 of 1968).
The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—A primary school started in 1854 at Bhagalpur was later converted into a Higher Secondary School.

The Legislature of the State of Bihar enacted the Bihar High Schools (Control and Regulation of Administration) Act XIII of 1960 which by section 8 invested the State Government with power to frame rules. Section 8 (1) provides :

“The State Government may, after previous publication and subject to the provisions of Articles 29, 30 and 337 of the Constitution of India, make rules not inconsistent with this Act for carrying out the purposes of this Act.”

In 1964 rules were framed under the Act by the State Government of Bihar, Rule 41 provides :

“These rules shall not apply to the schools established and administered by the minorities whether based on religion or language.”

By order dated 4th September, 1963, the President of the Board of Secondary Education approved the election of Bishop Parmar as President and Rev. Chest as Secretary of the Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School. This order was set aside by the Secretary to the Government, Education Department, by order dated 22nd May, 1967. On 21st June, 1967, the Regional Deputy Director of Education, Bhagalpur, addressed a letter to the Secretary, Church Missionary Society School, Bhagalpur, inviting his attention to the order dated 22nd May, 1967, and requested him to take steps to constitute a Managing Committee of the School “in accordance with that order.”

A petition was then filed in the High Court of Patna by four petitioners (who are appellants in Appeal No. 2346 of 1968) for a writ quashing the order 22nd May, 1967, and for an order restraining the respondents—the State of Bihar, the Secretary to the Government of Bihar, Department of Education and the educational authorities of the State—from interfering with the right of the petitioners to control, administer and manage the affairs of the School. The High Court of Patna dismissed the petition. The High Court held that the primary School at Bhagalpur was established by the Church Missionary Society of London ; that the School had developed into the present Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School ; and that the School was administered in recent times by the Church Missionary Society of the Bhagalpur Diocese ; and that the School not being an education institution established by a minority, protection was not afforded thereto by Article 30 of the Constitution. Against the order dismissing the petition, Civil Appeal No. 2346 of 1968 has been filed in this Court.

Two other petitions are filed in this Court claiming relief on the footing that by the order dated 22nd May, 1967, of the Government of Bihar the fundamental right of the Christian minority to maintain an educational institution of its choice and guaranteed by Article 30 (1) is infringed. Writ Petition No. 430 of 1968 is filed by the Principal, Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School, Bhagalpur, the Secretary, Bihar Christian Council, Gaya, the Secretary, Santhalia Christian Council, Bhagalpur, and the Secretary, National Christian Council of India, Nagpur. Writ Petition No. 431 of 1968 has been filed by Rev. M. P. Hembrom, Parish Priest, Church Missionary Society, Bhagalpur, two of whose children are being educated at the School. These petitions are heard with Civil Appeal No. 2346 of 1968.

The High Court found on a consideration of the evidence that the Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School is a “denominational institution”, that “scripture classes are held in the School and lessons on the life and teaching of Lord Jesus Christ are taught” and examinations are held in the subject for all students. that every morning, before the classes begin, the prayers from the prescribed Church Books are offered by the students and the members of the staff, and each meeting of the Managing Committee of the School begins and closes with prayers from the “Book of Common Prayer”. Correctness of the finding recorded by the High Court is not challenged before us. The finding recorded by the High Court that the School originally started in the year 1854 as a primary school had since developed into the present Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School is also not challenged before us.

The only question which falls to be determined is whether the petitioners in the two writ petitions and the appellants in appeal No. 2346 of 1968 are entitled to claim the protection of Article 30 of the Constitution on the ground that the Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School at Bhagalpur is an educational institution of their choice established by a minority.

Article 30 of the Constitution by clause (1) provides :

“All minorities whether based on religion or language, shall have the right to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice.”

The guarantee of protection under Article 30 is not restricted to educational institutions established after the Constitution : institutions which had been established before the Constitution and continued to be administered by minorities, either based on religion or language qualify for the protection of the right of minorities declared by Article 30 of the Constitution. In In re The Kerala Education Bill, 1957.¹ Das, C. J., observed at page 1051 :

“There is no reason why the benefit of Article 30 (1) should be limited only to educational institutions established after the commencement of the Constitution. The language employed in Article 30 (1) is wide enough to cover both pre-Constitution and post-Constitution institutions. It must not be overlooked that Article 30 (1) gives the minorities two rights, namely (a) to establish, and (b) to administer, educational institutions of their choice. The second right clearly covers pre-Constitution schools just as Article 26 covers the right to maintain pre-Constitution religious institutions.”

It was the case of the State and the parties intervening in the writ petition before the High Court that the School was established by the Church Missionary Society, London, which they claimed was a Corporation with an alien domicile and “such a Society was not a minority based on religion or language” within the meaning of Article 30 of the Constitution. On behalf of the appellants in the appeal and the petitioners in the two writ petitions filed in this Court it is claimed that the School was started in 1854 by the local Christian residents of Bhagalpur. They concede that the Church Missionary Society of London did extend financial aid in the establishment of the School, but they contend that on that account, the School did not cease to be an educational institution established by a religious minority in India.

There is on the record important evidence about establishment in 1854 of the Lower Primary School at Bhagalpur. It is unfortunate that sufficient attention was not directed to that part of the evidence in the High Court. The “Record Book” of the Church Missionary Association at Bhagalpur which is Annexure ‘D’ to writ Petition No. 430 of 1968 furnishes evidence of vital importance having a bearing on the establishment of the School. It contains copies of letters written from Bhagalpur and minutes of meetings held and the resolutions passed by the Local Council of Bhagalpur. On 1st June, 1948, Rev. Vaux informed the Calcutta Corresponding Committee of the Church Missionary Society by a letter that if the Calcutta Society were to establish a School at Champanagar, “local assistance shall not be wanting to the extent of 1,000 or 1,200 rupees a year, besides providing a school house and residence for the master” and that “At first, for breaking up the fallow ground and setting the school a going the presence of a Missionary of tact and experience may be necessary”. On 26th June, 1948, Rev. Vaux by another letter informed the Calcutta Corresponding Committee that a special service was held in the Church on 22nd June, 1848, and thereafter on Friday 23rd June, 1848, a meeting was held and contributions were invited from persons present including Indian residents, that monthly subscriptions of Rs. 202 for the “salary of masters” and other expenses were promised, and that an amount of Rs. 1,647 was donated for building the school and residence for the master ; that the general impression made was so favourable to the cause that he felt justified in assuring the Calcutta Committee that the local Committee were in a position to guarantee certain requisites for making a commencement such as payment of the salary of the School Master and Mistress and the building of a house for their accommodation which may afterwards be enlarged so as to form a suitable residence for a Mission.

By letter dated 10th July, 1848, the Secretary, Calcutta Corresponding Committee, informed Rev. Vaux that they were looking out for a prominent person to commence missionary operations by opening a School "which is indeed a common way of beginning a Mission." In a letter dated 22nd December, 1848, written from Bhagalpur it was stated :

"The Society will provide for the Missionary's salary and trust that local funds will provide a residence for him of a suitable kind. All other Mission requirements, such as school teachers, etc., should be left to be provided on the spot."

Then there are minutes of the resolutions passed at a meeting held on 24th October, 1849 by the Parent Committee and another resolution dated 25th October, 1851, of the Local Committee, to raise funds, and to determine upon disbursements with the advice of the Missionary to promote the objects of the Mission. In the minutes of the meeting dated 25th October, 1851, it is recorded that a statement of account of receipts and disbursements upto 30th September, 1851 including expenses of a boys' school and salary of masters, "hire of school rooms and furniture" and expenses of a girls' school "including cost of working materials up to date" was submitted.

In a letter from the Treasurer of the Committee dated 10th May, 1852, it was stated :

"One of the conditions on which the Church Missionary Society consented to send a Missionary to this station was that he should be provided by local friends with a suitable residence. As this appeared to be a sine qua non, subscriptions were raised for the purpose of building a Mission house ; * * *

* * * To this end I propose, that as soon as the balance in hand amounts to Rs. 11,000 that sum be transferred by me as your Treasurer to the Calcutta Corresponding Committee of the C.M.S. ; to be held by them in trust as the "Bhagalpur Mission Fund." The interest of this sum will be more than sufficient to pay the rent of the present Mission premises, viz., Rs. 45 per month ; and accordingly, as soon as the transfer is effected responsibility. The whole of our remaining local funds and future collections can then be devoted to the support of schools, orphanage and we shall be better able to regulate our expenditure by our means, and increase our efforts in proportion to our wants."

At a meeting of the Local Committee held on 22nd March, 1853, it was resolved that the Committee expresses their satisfaction at the progress made by Mr. Droese in building the Bungalow and that the Treasurer be authorised to pay to Mr. Droese out of the Reserve Fund the further sum of Rs. 3,500 required to complete the building.

At a meeting of the Local Committee held on 23rd August, 1856, it was recorded that on an area of 21 bighas of land for which a perpetual lease was obtained on 26th November, 1853, the Association had built a Bungalow and offices for the Missionary, houses for native Christians and an orphanage. At a meeting held on 17th October, 1856, it was resolved that the Committee desired sincerely to thank Mr. Brown for "kind, active and liberal interest he had taken in the Mission from the first and particularly for making over to the Society mission property which his own exertions had in great measure secured."

It appears from this correspondence and the resolutions and the discussions at the meetings that a permanent home for the Boys' School was set up in 1854 on property acquired by local Christians and in buildings erected from funds collected by them. The institution along with the land on which it was built and the balance of money from the local fund were handed over to the Church Missionary Society in 1856. It is also true that substantial assistance was obtained from the Church Missionary Society, London. But on that account it cannot be said that the School was not established by the local Christians with their own efforts and was not an educational institution established by a minority.

The Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School is an educational institution administered by a minority ; that was so found by the High Court and is not now in controversy.

The High Court held that the primary school started in the year 1854 was started by the Church Missionary Society, London, and such a Society cannot be said to be a citizen of India and that in any event the persons who constituted the Society were aliens and on that account it cannot be said that the Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School is an educational institution established by a minority. It is unnecessary to dilate upon these matters at length, for, in our judgment, the conclusion that the School was established not by the local Christians of Bhagalpur, but by the Church Missionary Society, London, is not justified on the evidence. The extracts from the Record Book clearly show that the local residents of Bhagalpur had taken a leading role in establishing and maintaining the school. Assistance was undoubtedly obtained from other bodies including the Church Missionary Society, London. But the School was set up by the Christian Missionaries and the local residents of Bhagalpur with the aid of funds part of which were contributed by them.

It is unnecessary to enter upon an enquiry whether all the persons who took part in establishing the School in 1854 were "Indian citizens." Prior to the enactment of the Constitution there was no settled concept of Indian citizenship, and it cannot be said that Christian Missionaries who had settled in India and the local Christian residents of Bhagalpur did not form a minority community. It is true that the minority competent to claim the protection of Article 30 (1) and on that account the privilege of establishing and maintaining educational institutions of its choice must be a minority of persons residing in India. It does not confer upon foreigners not resident in India the right to set up educational institutions of their choice. Persons setting up educational institutions must be resident in India and they must form a well-defined religious or linguistic minority. It is not however predicated that protection of the right guaranteed under Article 30 may be availed only in respect of an institution established before the Constitution by persons born and resident in British India.

It is necessary to bear in mind the difference in the phraseology used in Articles 29 and 30 of the Constitution. By Article 29 (1) any section of the citizens residing in the territory of India or any part thereof having a distinct language, script or culture of its own shall have the right to conserve the same, and clause (2) guarantees that no citizen shall be denied admission into any educational institution maintained by the State or receiving aid out of State funds on grounds only of religion, race, caste, language or any of them. The protection of the rights under Article 29 may be claimed only by Indian citizens. Article 30 guarantees the right of minorities to establish and administer educational institutions : the article does not expressly refer to citizenship as a qualification for the members of the minorities. In *Rev. Father W. Proost and others v. The State of Bihar and others*¹, this Court observed :

"In our opinion the width of Article 30 (1) cannot be cut down by introducing in it considerations on which Article 23 (1) is based. The latter article is a general protection which is given to minorities to conserve their language, script or culture."
* * * The two articles created two separate rights, although it is possible that they may meet in a given case."

The Court then observed, after referring to the judgment in *Rev. Sidhajibhai Sabhai and others v. State of Bombay and another*² that :

".....the language of Article 30 (1) is wide and must receive full meaning. We are dealing with protection of minorities and attempts to whittle down the protection cannot be allowed. We need not enlarge the protection but we may not reduce a protection naturally flowing from the words. Here the protection clearly flows from the words and there is nothing on the basis of which aid can be sought from Article 29 (1)."

The fact that funds were obtained from the United Kingdom for assisting in setting up and developing the School or that the management of the institution was carried on by some persons who may not have been born in India is not a ground for denying the protection of Article 30 (1).

We are also unable to agree with the High Court that before any protection can be claimed under Article 30 (1) in respect of the Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School it was required to be proved that all persons or a majority of them who established the institution were "Indian citizens" in the year 1854. There being no Indian citizenship in the year 1854 independently of the citizenship of the British Empire, to incorporate in the interpretation of Article 30 in respect of an institution established by a minority the condition that it must in addition be proved to have been established by persons who would, if the institution had been set up after the Constitution, have claimed Indian citizenship, is to whittle down the protection of Article 30 in a manner not warranted by the provisions of the Constitution.

The order passed by the Educational authorities requiring the Secretary of the Church Missionary Society Higher Secondary School to take steps to constitute a Managing Committee in accordance with the order dated 22nd May, 1967, is, declared invalid.

The appeal is allowed and the rule in the two writ petitions is made absolute. There will be no order as to costs in the two writ petitions. Since it appears that all the requisite materials were not placed prominently before the High Court in the writ petition out of which Appeal No. 2346 of 1968 has arisen, we direct that in the appeal the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

THE SUPREME COURT OF INDIA.

(Civil Appellate Jurisdiction.)

PRESENT :—J. C. SHAH AND C. A. VAIDIALINGAM. JJ.

The State of Orissa

v.

Chandrasekhara Singh Bhoi, etc.

... Respondents.

Orissa Land Reforms Act (XVI of 1960) and Orissa Land Reforms (Amendment) Act (XV of 1965) Chapter IV and Constitution of India (1950), Articles 31 (2) 31 (2-A) and 31-A—Validity of Chapter IV of Amendment Act.

By the amendments made in the Constitution by the 17th Amendment Act the Principal Act is incorporated in the Ninth Schedule to the Constitution with effect from 20th June, 1964. The Act is therefore not liable to be attacked on the plea that it is inconsistent with or takes away or abridges any of the fundamental rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution. But the power of the competent Legislature to repeal or amend the Act incorporated in the Ninth Schedule is not thereby taken away. The amending Act passed after the enactment of the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964 does not therefore qualify for the protection of Article 31-B.

By Article 31 (2) read with Article 31 (2-A) property may be compulsorily acquired only for a public purpose and by authority of a law which provides for compensation for the property so acquired and either fixed the amount of the compensation or specifies the principles on which, and the manner in which, the compensation is to be determined and given. In order that property may be validly acquired compulsorily the law must provide for the transfer of ownership or right to possession of any property to the State or to a corporation owned or controlled by the State.

(After referring to section 45 of the Act), this is clearly compulsory acquisition of land within the meaning of Article 31 (2) of the Constitution and the compensation determined merely at fifteen times the fair and equitable rent may not, prima facie be regarded as determination of compensation according to the principles specified by the Act. The Principal Act (XVI of 1960) and the amending Act (XIII of 1965) were both Acts enacted for ensuing agrarian reform, and the lands held by the petitioners were 'estate' within the meaning of Article 31-A. By section 45 the rights of the land holders were sought to be extinguished or modified. But to the operative part of Article 31-A, by section 2 of the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964, the second proviso was added by the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964, it was clearly enacted that under any law which provides for the acquisition of any land in an estate under the personal cultivation of the holder, compensation shall not be less than the market value of the land if such land be within the ceiling limit applicable to the holder under any law for the time being in force.

The right to compensation which is not less than the market value under any law providing for the acquisition by the State of any land in an estate in the personal cultivation of a person is guaranteed by the second proviso only where the land is within the ceiling limit applicable to him under any law for the time being in force. A law cannot be said to be in force unless it is brought into operation by legislative enactment, or by the exercise of authority by a delegate empowered to bring it into operation. The theory of a statute being "in operation in a constitutional sense" though it is not in fact in operation has no validity.

Chapter IV of the Principal Act was repealed by the Amending Act XV of 1965, on the plain words of the proviso 2 to Article 31-A the law prescribing the ceiling limit must be in force at the date of acquisition. In the present case the law relating to the ceiling limit, viz., Chapter IV of the Principal Act was never made operative by a notification, and was repealed by Act (XV of 1965). The ceiling limit under section 47 of the Principal Act was on that account inapplicable to the landholders who challenged the validity of section 45 of the amending Act.

Held, section 1 (3) of Act (XVI of 1960) is undoubtedly a law in force but until the power is exercised by the State Government to issue an appropriate notification, the provisions of Chapter IV could not be deemed to be law in force, and since, no notification was issued before Chapter IV of the Principal Act was repealed, there was no ceiling limit applicable to the landholders under any law for the time being in force which attracted the application of the Second Proviso to Article 31-A.

Appeals from the Judgment and Order dated the 30th January, 1967 of the Orissa High Court in O.J.Cs. Nos. 329 of 1965, etc.

C. B. Agarwala, Senior Advocate (R. N. Sachthey, Advocate, with him), for Appellant (In all the Appeals).

H. R. Gokhale, Senior Advocate (Santosh Chatterjee, Advocate and G.S. Chatterjee, Advocate of M/s. Kshatriya and Chatterjee, with him), for Respondent (In all the Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—The State of Orissa has appealed to this Court against the judgment of the State High Court declaring "unconstitutional and invalid" Chapter IV of the Orissa Land Reforms (Amendment) Act XV of 1965.

The Orissa Land Reforms Act (XVI of 1960) (hereinafter called the principal Act) received the assent of the President on 17th October, 1960. By section 1 (3) of the principal Act it was provided that the Act shall come into force in whole or in part, on such date or dates as the Government may from time to time by notification appoint and different dates may be appointed for different provisions of the Act. By a notification issued on 25th September, 1968 certain provisions of the principal Act other than those contained in Chapters III and IV were brought into force. By a notification dated 9th December, 1965, Chapter III (sections 24 to 37 dealing with resumption for personal cultivation of any land held by a tenant and related matters) was brought into force. But Chapter IV (sections 38 to 52 dealing with ceiling of holdings of land and disposal of excess land) was not brought into operation. The Legislature of the State of Orissa amended the principal Act by Act XIII of 1965. By Act XIII of 1965 amendments were made in the principal Act : the expressions "ceiling area" and "privileged raiyat" were defined by clauses (5) and 24 of section 24 and the expression "classes of land" was defined in section 2 (5-a). The original Chapters III and IV of the principal Act were deleted and were substituted by fresh provisions. Nothing need be said about the amendments made in Chapter III because in these groups of appeals the validity of these provisions is not in issue. It may suffice to say that Chapter III (sections 24 to 36) as amended deals with the right of the landlord to resume land for personal cultivation, the extent of that right, and the proceedings for resumption of land. Chapter IV as amended deals with ceiling and disposal of excess land. By section 37 it is provided :

"(1) No person shall hold after the commencement of this Act lands as landholder or *raiya*t under personal cultivation in excess of the ceiling area determined in the manner hereinafter provided.

* * * * *

By section 38 the Government is authorised to grant exemption from the operation of the ceiling in respect of certain classes of land. Section 39 deals with the principles for determining the ceiling area. Sections 40, 41 and 42 deal with the filing of returns in respect of lands in excess of the ceiling area on the date of commencement of the Act and the consequences of failure to submit the return. Section 43 provides for the preparation and publication of draft statements showing ceiling and surplus lands by the Revenue Officer and section 44 provides for the publication of the final statement of ceiling and surplus lands after hearing objections, if any, received and after making enquiries as the Revenue Officer may deem necessary. Section 45 provides that :

"With effect from the beginning of the year next following the date of the final statement referred to in sub-section (3) of section 44 the interests of the person to whom the surplus lands relate and of all landholders mediately or immediately under whom the surplus lands were being held shall stand extinguished and the said lands shall vest absolutely in the Government free from all encumbrances."

Section 46 provides for determination of compensation. Section 47 sets out the principles for determining compensation. It provides that the compensation in respect of the interest of the landholders mediately or immediately under whom the surplus lands are being held as a landholder or *raiya*t shall be fifteen times the fair and equitable rent. It also provides for payment of market value of tanks, wells and of structures of a permanent nature situate in the land, determined on the basis of fair rent in the manner prescribed therein. Sections 48 and 49 deal with the preparation and publication of draft compensation assessment roll and the final compensation assessment roll. By section 51 provision was made for settlement of surplus lands vested in the Government under section 45 with persons as *raiya*ts in the order of priority mentioned therein and section 52 imposes a ceiling on future acquisitions. It is provided thereby :

"The foregoing provisions of this Chapter shall, mutatis mutandis, apply where lands acquired and held under personal cultivation subsequent to the commencement of this Act by any person through inheritance, bequest, gift, family settlement, purchase lease or otherwise, together with the lands in his personal cultivation at the time of such acquisition exceeds his ceiling limit.

* * * * *

By the amendments made in the Constitution by the 17th Amendment Act the principal Act is incorporated in the Ninth Schedule to the Constitution with effect from 20th June, 1964. The Act is therefore not liable to be attacked on the plea that it is inconsistent with or takes away or abridges any of the fundamental rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution. But the power of the competent Legislature to repeal or amend the Act incorporated in the Ninth Schedule is not thereby taken away. The amending Act passed after the enactment of the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964 does not therefore qualify for the protection of Article 31-B. See *Ramanlal Gulabchand Shah, etc. v. State of Gujarat and Others*¹, *Sri Ram Ram Narain Medhi v. The State of Bombay*². This position is not disputed.

Chapter IV incorporated in the principal Act by Orissa Act XIII of 1965 when brought into force is liable to be challenged on the ground that it is inconsistent with or taken away or abridges any of the fundamental rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution. It was urged however, and that plea has found favour with the High Court, that section 47 incorporated by Act XIII of 1965 which provided for compensation not based on the market value of the land but at fifteen times the fair and equitable rent is inconsistent with Article 31-A, proviso 2, and is on that account void. To appreciate the contention the constitutional provisions relating to protection guaranteed by the Constitution against compulsory acquisition of property may be noticed. By Article 31 (2) as amended by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955, insofar as it is material, it is provided :

“No property shall be compulsorily acquired or requisitioned save for a public purpose and save by authority of a law which provides for compensation for the property so acquired or requisitioned and either fixes the amount of the compensation or specifies the principles on which, and the manner in which, the compensation is to be determined and given ;

* * * * *

Clause (2-A) of Article 31 which in substance defines the expression “law” providing for compulsory acquisition enacts that :

“Where a law does not provide for the transfer of the ownership or right to possession of any property to the State or to a corporation owned or controlled by the State, it shall not be deemed to provide for the compulsory acquisition or requisitioning of property, notwithstanding that it deprives any person of his property.”

By Article 31 (2) read with Article 31 (2-A) property may be compulsorily acquired only for a public purpose and by authority of a law which provides for compensation for the property so acquired and either fixes the amount of the compensation or specifies the principles on which, and the manner in which, the compensation is to be determined and given. In order that property may be validly acquired compulsorily the law must provide for the transfer of ownership or right to possession of any property to the State or to a corporation owned or controlled by the State.

By virtue of section 45 of the principal Act “the interests of person to whom the surplus lands relate and of all land-holders mediately or immediately under whom the surplus lands were being held.....stand extinguished and the lands.....vest absolutely in the Government free from all encumbrances”. This is clearly compulsory acquisition of land within the meaning of Article 31 (2) of the Constitution and the compensation determined merely at fifteen times the fair and equitable rent may not, prima facie, be regarded as determination of compensation according to the principles specified by the Act. But Article 31-A which applies to the statute in question provides by the first clause :

“Notwithstanding anything contained in Article 13 no law providing for—

(a) the acquisition by the State of any estate or of any rights therein or the extinguishment or modification of any such rights, or shall be deemed to be void on the ground that it is inconsistent with, or takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by Article 14, article 19 or Article 31 :

* * * * *

The principal Act XVI of 1960 and the amending Act XIII of 1965 were both Acts enacted for ensuing agrarian reform, and the lands held by the petitioners were “estates” within the meaning of Article 31-A. By section 45 the rights of the landholders were sought to be extinguished or modified. But to the operative part of Article 31-A by section 2 of the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964, the second proviso was added. The second proviso enacts :

“Provided further that there where any law makes any provision for the acquisition by the State of any estate and where any land comprised therein is held by a person under his personal cultivation, it shall not be lawful for the State to acquire any portion of such land as is within the ceiling limit applicable to him under any law for the time being in force or any building or structure standing thereon or appurtenant thereto, unless the law relating to the acquisition of such land, building or structure, provides for payment of compensation at a rate which shall not be less than the market value thereof.”

By the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964, it was clearly enacted that under any law which provides for the acquisition of any land in an estate under the personal cultivation of the holder, compensation shall not be less than the market value of the land if such land be within the ceiling limit applicable to the holder under any law for the time being in force.

Before the High Court it was urged on behalf of the landholders that when the principal Act was enacted it became law in force, and the ceiling limit prescribed thereby became effective, even though Chapter IV was not extended by a notification under section 1 (3) of the Act, and since the subsequent legislation seeks to restrict the ceiling limit and to vest the surplus land in the Government under section 45 as amended, there is compulsory acquisition of land which may be valid only if the law provides for payment to the landholder for extinction of his interest, the market value of that part of the surplus land which is within the ceiling limit under the principal Act. This argument found favour with the High Court. In their view the expression “law in force” must be “construed only in the constitutional sense and not in the sense of its actual operativeness”, and on that account it must be held that there was a ceiling limit already provided by the principal Act as it was ‘law in force’ within the meaning of that expression as used in the second proviso to Article 31-A. They proceeded then to hold that section 47 of the Act as amended provided for payment of compensation at a rate which is less than the market value of the land falling within the ceiling limit as originally fixed under Act XVI of 1960, and the guarantee of the second proviso to Article 31-A of the Constitution is on that account infringed. We are unable to accept this process of reasoning. The right to compensation which is not less than the market value under any law providing for the acquisition by the State of any land in an estate in the personal cultivation of a person is guaranteed by the second proviso only where the land is within the ceiling limit applicable to him under any law for the time being in force. A law cannot be said to be in force unless it is brought into operation by legislative enactment, or by the exercise of authority by a delegate empowered to bring it into operation. The theory of a statute being 'in operation in a constitutional sense' though it is not in fact in operation has, in our judgment, no validity.

Again Chapter IV of the principal Act was repealed by the Amending Act XV of 1965. Article 31-A, proviso 2 guarantees to a person, for compulsory acquisition of his land, the right to compensation which is not less than the market value, when the land is within the ceiling limit applicable to him under a law for the time being in force. On the plain words of the proviso the law prescribing the ceiling limit must be in force at the date of acquisition. In the present case the law relating to the ceiling limit viz., Chapter IV of the principal Act was never made operative by a notification, and was repealed by Act XV of 1965. The ceiling limit under section 47 of the principal Act was on that account inapplicable to the landholders who challenged the validity of section 45 of the amending Act.

The decision of this Court *A. Thangal Kunju Mudaliar v. M. Venkitachalam Potti and another*¹ on which the High Court relied lends no support to the views expressed by them. In that case the Travancore State Legislature enacted Act XIV of 1124 (M.E.) to provide for investigating cases of evasion of tax. The Act was to come into force by section 1 (3) on the date appointed by the State Government by notification. The States of Travancore and Cochin merged on 1st July, 1949 and formed the United State of Travancore and Cochin. By Ordinance I of 1124 M.E. all existing laws of the Travancore State were to continue in force in the United State. By a notification the Government of the United State brought the Travancore Act XIV of 1124 (M.E.) into force, and referred cases of certain tax-payers for investigation to the Commission appointed in that behalf. The tax-payers challenged the authority of the Commission to investigate the cases. They contended that the Travancore Act XIV of 1124 (M.E.) not being a law in force when the United State was formed, the notification bringing the Act into force was ineffective. The Court rejected that plea. Section 1 (3) of Travancore Act XIV of 1124 (M.E.) was existing law on 1st July, 1949, and continued to remain in force by virtue of Ordinance I of 1124 (M.E.). The notification issued in exercise of the power under section 1 (3) of the Travancore Act XIV of 1124 (M.E.), the reference of the cases of the petitioners, the appointment of the authorised officials and the proceedings under the Act could not be questioned because section 1 (3) was existing law on 1st July, 1949.

In *A. Thangal Kunju Mudaliar's case*¹, the contention that Travancore Act XIV of 1124 (M.E.) was not law in force until a notification was issued bringing into operation the provisions of the Act, authorising the appointment of a Commission, and referring the cases of tax-payers to the Commission, was rejected. The Court held that section 1 (3) was in operation on 1st July, 1949 and the power to bring into force the provisions of the Travancore Act was exercisable by the successor State. It was not held that the other provisions of the Act were in force even before an appropriate notification was issued. In the case in hand section 1 (3) of the principal Act was in force, but Chapter IV of the Act was not brought into force. The argument that provisions of the Act which by a notification could have been but were not brought into force, must still be deemed to be law in force, derives no support from the case relied upon.

Section 1 (3) of Act XVI of 1960 is undoubtedly a law in force, but until the power is exercised by the State Government to issue an appropriate notification, the provisions of Chapter IV could not be deemed to be law in force, and since no notification was issued before Chapter IV of the principal Act was repealed, there was no ceiling limit applicable to the landholders under any law for the time being in force which attracted the applications of the second proviso to Article 31-A.

The appeals must, therefore, be allowed, and the order passed by the High Court declaring Chapter IV of Act XIII of 1965 amending Act XVI of 1960 ultra vires, be set aside. The State will get its costs in this Court from the respondents. There will be one hearing fee. There will be no order as to costs in the High Court.

All India Services Act (LXI of 1951), section 3 and rule 4 of the Indian Forest Service (Recruitment) Rules, 1966 framed thereunder, and Indian Forest Service (Initial Recruitment) Regulations (V of 1966)—Constitution of India (1950), Articles 14 and 16—Nature of the power, conferred on the selection board—Whether quasi-judicial or administrative—Difference between quasi-judicial and administrative power—One of the members of the selection board himself a candidate for selection—Effect of his presence in the Board in selecting others—Natural Justice—Aim of—Applicability of to administrative proceedings.

The dividing line between an administrative power and a quasi-judicial power is quite there and is being gradually obliterated. For determining whether a power is an administrative power or a quasi-judicial power one has to look to the nature of the power conferred, the person or persons on whom it is conferred, the framework of the laws conferring that power, the consequences ensuing from the exercise of that power and the manner in which that power is executed to be exercised. In a welfare state like ours it is inevitable that the organ of the State under our Constitution is regulated and controlled by the rule of law. In a welfare state like ours it is inevitable that the jurisdiction of the administrative bodies is increasing at a rapid rate. The concept of rule of law would lose its vitality if the instrumentalities of the State are not charged with the duty of discharging their functions in a fair and just manner. The requirement of acting judicially in essence is nothing but a requirement to act justly and fairly and not arbitrarily or capriciously. The procedures which are considered inherent in the exercise of a judicial power are merely those which facilitate if not ensure a just and fair decision. In recent years the concept of quasi-judicial power has been undergoing a radical change, what was considered as an administrative power some years back is now being considered as a quasi-judicial power with the increase of the power of the administrative bodies it has become necessary to provide guidelines for the just exercise of their power. To prevent the abuse of that power and to see that it does not become a new despotism, Courts are gradually evolving the principles to be observed while exercising such powers. In matters like these, public good is not advanced by a rigid adherence to precedents. Now problems call for new solutions. It is neither possible nor desirable to fix the limits of a quasi-judicial power.

On facts, held, it was improper to have included Naquishbund as a member of the selection board. He was one of the persons to be considered for selection. It is against all canons of justice to make a man Judge of his own cause. It is true that he did not participate in the deliberations of the committee when his name was considered. But then the very fact that he was a member of the selection board must have had its own impact on the decision of the selection board. Further admittedly he participated in the deliberations of his selection board when the claims of his rivals particularly that of Basu was considered. He was also a party to the preparation of the list of selected candidates in order of preference. At every stage of his participation in the deliberations of the selection board there tions of eligibility. That Regulation contemplates the formation of a service in the senior scale and a service in the junior scale. Regulation 5 is important for our present purpose. It deals with the preparation of the list of suitable candidates. It reads :

“(1) The Board shall prepare, in the order of preference, a list of such officers of State Forest Service who satisfy the conditions specified in regulation 4 and who are adjudged by the Board suitable for appointment to posts in the senior and junior scales of the Service.

(2) The list prepared in accordance with sub-regulation (1) shall then be referred to the Commission for advice, by the Central Government along with :—

(a) the records of all officers of State Forest Service included in the list ;

(b) the records of all other eligible officers of the State Forest Service who are not adjudged suitable for inclusion in the list, together with the reasons as recorded by the Board for their non-inclusion in the list ; and

(c) the observations, if any, of the Ministry of Home Affairs on the recommendations of the Board.

(3) On receipt of the list, along with the other documents received from the Central Government the Commission shall forward its recommendations to that Government.”

Regulation 6 stipulates that the officers recommended by the Commission under sub-rule (3) of Regulation 5 shall be appointed to the service by the Central Government subject to the availability of vacancies in the State cadre concerned.

In pursuance of the Regulation mentioned above, the Central Government constituted a special selection board for selecting officers to the Indian Forest Service in the senior scale as well as in the junior scale from those serving in the forest department of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. The nominee of the Chairman of the Union Public Service Commission, one M. A. Venkataraman was the Chairman of the board. The other members of the board were the Inspector-General of Forests of the Government of India, one of the Joint Secretaries in the Government of India, the Chief Secretary to the State Government of Jammu and Kashmir and Naquishbund, the Acting Chief Conservator of Forests of Jammu and Kashmir.

The selection board met at Srinagar in May, 1967 and selected respondent 7 to 31 in Writ Petition No. 173 of 1967. The cases of respondents Nos. 32 to 37 were reserved for further consideration. The selections in question are said to have been made solely on the basis of the records of officers. Their suitability was not tested by any examination, written or oral. Nor were they interviewed. For several years before that selection the adverse entries made in the character rolls of the officers had not been communicated to them and their explanation called for. In doing so quite clearly the authorities concerned had contravened the instructions issued by the Chief Secretary of the State. Sometime after the afore-mentioned selections were made, at the instance of the Government of India, the adverse remarks made in the course of years against those officers who had not been selected were communicated to them and their explanations called for. Those explanations were considered by the State Government and on the basis of the same, some of the adverse remarks made against some of the officers were removed. Thereafter the selection board reviewed the cases of officers not selected earlier as a result of which a few more officers were selected. The selections as finally made by the board were accepted by the Commission. On the basis of the recommendations of the Commission, the impugned list was published. Even after the review Basu, Baig and Kaul were not selected. It may also be noted that Naquishbund's name is placed at the top of the list of selected officers.

Naquishbund had been promoted as Chief Conservator of Forests in the year 1964. He is not yet confirmed in that post. G. H. Basu, Conservator of Forests in the Kashmir Forest Service who is admittedly senior to Naquishbund had appealed to the State Government against his supersession and that appeal was pending with the State Government at the time the impugned selections were made. M. I. Baig and A. N. Kaul, Conservators of Forests also claim that they are seniors to Naqishbund but that fact is denied by Naqishbund. Kaul had also appealed against his alleged supersession but it is alleged that appeal had been rejected by the State Government.

Naqishbund was also one of the candidates seeking to be selected to the All India Forest Service. We were told and we take it to be correct that he did not sit in the selection board at the time his name was considered for selection but admittedly he did sit in the board and participate in its deliberations when the names of Basu, Baig and Kaul, his rivals, were considered for selection. It is further admitted that he did participate in the deliberations of the board while preparing the list of selected candidates in order of preference, as required by Regulation 5.

The selection board was undoubtedly a high powered body. That much was conceded by the learned Attorney-General who appeared for the Union Government as well as the State Government. It is true that the list prepared by the selection board was not the last word in the matter of the selection in question. That list along with the records of the officers in the concerned cadre selected as well as not selected had to be sent to the Ministry of Home Affairs. We shall assume that as required by Regulation 5, the Ministry of Home Affairs had forwarded that list with its observations to the Commission and the Commission had examined the records of all the officers afresh before making its recommendation. But it is obvious that the recommendations made by the selection board should have weighed with the Commission. Undoubtedly the adjudging of the merits of the candidates by the selection board was an extremely important step in the process.

It was contended before us that section 3 of the All India Services Act, rule 4 of the rules framed thereunder and Regulation 5 of the Indian Forest Service (Initial Recruitment) Regulations 1966 are void as those provisions confer unguided, uncontrolled and uncanalised power on the concerned delegates. So far as the vires of section 3 of the Indian Administrative Act is concerned, the question is no more res integra. It is concluded by the decision of this Court in *D. S. Garewal v. The State of Punjab and another*¹. We have not thought it necessary to go into the question of the vires of rule 4 and Regulation 5 as we have come to the conclusion that the impugned selections must be struck down for the reasons to be presently stated.

There was considerable controversy before us as to the nature of the power conferred on the selection board under rule 4 read with Regulation 5. It was contended on behalf of the petitioners that that power was a quasi-judicial power whereas the case for the contesting respondents was that it was a purely administrative power. In support of the contention that the power in question was a quasi-judicial power emphasis was laid on the language of rule 4 as well as Regulation 5 which prescribe that the selections should be made after adjudging the suitability of the officers belonging to the State service. The word 'adjudge' we were told means "to judge or decide." It was contended that such a power is essentially a judicial power and the same had to be exercised in accordance with the well accepted rules relating to the exercise of such a power. Emphasis was also laid on the fact that the power in question was exercised by a statutory body and a wrong exercise of that power is likely to affect adversely the careers of the officers not selected. On the other hand it was contended by the learned Attorney-General that though the selection board was a statutory body, as it was not required to decide about any right, the proceedings before it cannot be considered quasi-judicial; its duty was merely to select officers who in its opinion were suitable for being absorbed in the Indian Forest Service. According to him the word 'adjudge' in rule 4 as well as Regulation 5 means "found worthy of selection."

The dividing line between an administrative power and a quasi-judicial power is quite thin and is being gradually obliterated. For determining whether a power is an administrative power or a quasi-judicial power one has to look to the nature of the power conferred, the person or persons on whom it is conferred, the framework of the law conferring that power, the consequences ensuing from the exercise of that power and the manner in which that power is expected to be exercised. The organ of the State under our Constitution is regulated and controlled by the rule of law. In a welfare State like ours it is inevitable that the jurisdiction of the administrative bodies is increasing at a rapid rate. The concept of rule of law would lose its vitality if the instrumentalities of the State are not charged with the duty of discharging their functions in a fair and just manner. The requirement of acting judicially in essence is nothing but a requirement to act justly and fairly and not arbitrarily or capriciously. The procedures which are considered inherent in the exercise of a judicial power are merely those which facilitate if not ensure a just and fair decision. In recent years the concept of quasi-judicial power has been undergoing a radical change. What was considered as an administrative power some years back is now being considered as a quasi-judicial power. The following observations of Lord Parker, C. J., in *Ragina v. Criminal Inquiries Compensation Board, Ex parte Lain*¹, are instructive.

"With regard to Mr. Bridge's second point I cannot think that Atkin, L.J., intended to confine his principle to cases in which the determination affected rights in the sense of enforceable rights. Indeed, in the Electricity Commissioners case, the rights determined were at any rate not immediately enforceable rights since the scheme laid down by the commissioners had to be approved by the Minister of Transport and by resolutions of Parliament. The commissioners nevertheless were held amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court. Moreover, as can be seen from Rex v. Postmaster-General, Ex parte Carmichael,² and Rex v. Boycott Ex parte Keasley,³ the remedy is available even though the decision is merely a step as a result of which legally enforceable rights may be affected.

The position as I see it is that the exact limits of the ancient remedy by way of certiorari have never been and ought not to be specifically defined. They have varied from time to time being extended to meet changing conditions. At one time the writ only went to an inferior Court. Later its ambit was extended to statutory tribunals determining a lis inter parties. Later again it extended to cases where there was no lis in the strict sense of the word but where immediate or subsequent rights of citizen were affected. The only constant limits throughout were that it was performing a public duty. Private or domestic tribunals have always been outside the scope of certiorari since their authority is derived solely from contract, that is from the agreement of the parties concerned.

Finally, it is to be observed that the remedy has now been extended, see *Reg v. Manchester Legal Aid Committee, Ex parte R.A. Brand & Co. Ltd.*⁴, to cases in which the decision of an administrative officer is only arrived at after an inquiry or process of a judicial or quasi-judicial character. In such a case this Court has jurisdiction to supervise that process.

We have as it seems to me reached the position when the ambit of certiorari can be said to cover every case in which a body of persons of a public as opposed to a purely private or domestic character has to determine matters affecting subjects provided always that it has a duty to act judicially. Looked at in this way the board in my judgment comes fairly and squarely, within the jurisdiction of this Court. It is, as Mr. Bridge said, 'a servant of the Crown charged by the Crown, by executive instruction, with the duty of distributing the bounty of the Crown.' It is clearly, therefore performing public duties."

Court in *The Purtabpore Co., Ltd. v. Cane Commissioner of Bihar and others*¹, held that the power to alter the area reserved under the Sugar Cane (Control) Order, 1966 is a quasi-judicial power. With the increase of the power of the administrative bodies it has become necessary to provide guidelines for the just exercise of their power. To prevent the abuse of that power and to see that it does not become a new despotism, Courts are gradually evolving the principles to be observed while exercising such powers. In matters like these, public good is not advanced by a rigid adherence to precedents. New problems call for new solutions. It is neither possible nor desirable to fix the limits of a quasi-judicial power. But for the purpose of the present case we shall assume that the power exercised by the selection board was an administrative power and test the validity of the impugned selections on that basis.

It is unfortunate that Naqishbund was appointed as one of the members of the selection board. It is true that ordinarily the Chief Conservator of Forests in a State should be considered as the most appropriate person to be in the selection board. He must be expected to know his officers thoroughly, their weaknesses as well as their strength. His opinion as regards their suitability for selection to the All India Service is entitled to great weight. But then under the circumstances it was improper to have included Naqishbund as a member of the selection board. He was one of the persons to be considered for selection. It is against all canons of justice to make a man judge in his own cause. It is true that he did not participate in the deliberations of the committee when his name was considered. But then the very fact that he was a member of the selection board must have had its own impact on the decision of the selection board. Further admittedly he participated in the deliberations of the selection board when the claims of his rivals particularly that of Basu was considered. He was also party to the preparation of the list of selected candidates in order of preference. At every stage of his participation in the deliberations of the selection board there was a conflict between his interest and duty. Under those circumstances it is difficult to believe that he could have been impartial. The real question is not whether he was biased. It is difficult to prove the State of mind of a person. Therefore what we have to see is whether there is reasonable ground for believing that he was likely to have been biased. We agree with the learned Attorney-General that a mere suspicion of bias not sufficient. There must be a reasonable likelihood of bias. In deciding the question of bias we have to take into consideration human probabilities and ordinary course of human conduct. It was in the interest of Naqishbund to keep out his rivals in order to secure his position from further challenge. Naturally he was also interested in safeguarding his position while preparing the list of selected candidates.

The members of the selection board other than Naqishbund, each one of them separately, have filed affidavits in this Court swearing that Naqishbund in no manner influenced their decision in making the selection. In a group deliberation each member of the group is bound to influence the others, more so, if the member concerned is a person with special knowledge. His bias is likely to operate in a subtle manner. It is no wonder that the other members of the selection board are unaware of the extent to which his opinion influenced their conclusions. We are unable to accept the contention that in adjudging the suitability of the candidates the members of the board did not have any mutual discussion. It is not as if the records spoke of themselves. We are unable to believe that the members of selection board functioned like computers. At this stage it may also be noted that at the time the selections were made, the members of the selection board other than Naqishbund were not likely to have known that Basu had appealed against his supersession and that his appeal was pending before the State Government. Therefore there was no occasion for them to distrust the opinion expressed by Naqishbund. Hence the board in making the selections must necessarily have given weight to the opinion expressed by Naqishbund.

This takes us to the question whether the principles of natural justice apply to administrative proceedings similar to that with which we are concerned in these cases. According to the learned Attorney-General those principles have to bearing in determining the validity of the impugned selections. In support of his contention he read to us several decisions. It is not necessary to examine those decisions as there is a great deal of fresh thinking on the subject. The horizon of natural justice is constantly expanding. The question how far the principles of natural justice govern administrative enquiries came up for consideration before the Queens Bench Division in *re, H.K. (An Infant)*¹. Therein the validity of the action taken by an Immigration Officer came up for consideration. In the course of his judgment Lord Parker, C.J., observed thus :

"But at the same time, I myself think that even if an immigration officer is not in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity, he must at any rate give the immigrant an opportunity of satisfying him of the matters in the sub-section, and for that purpose let the immigrant know what his immediate impression is so that the immigrant can disabuse him. That is not, as I see it, a question of acting or being required to act judicially, but of being required to act fairly. Good administration and an honest or bona fide decision must, as it seems to me, require not merely impartiality, nor merely bringing one's mind to bear on the problem, but acting fairly ; and to the limited extent that the circumstances of any particular case allow, and within the legislative framework under which the administrator is working, only to that limited extent do the so-called rules of natural justice apply, which in a case such as this is merely a duty to act fairly. I appreciate that in saying that it may be said that one is going further than is permitted on the decided cases because heretofore at any rate the decisions of the Courts do seem to have drawn a strict line in these matters according to whether there is or is not a duty to act judicially or quasi-judicially."

In the same case Blain, J., observed thus :

"I would only say that an immigration officer having assumed the jurisdiction granted by those provisions is in a position where it is his duty to exercise that assumed jurisdiction whether it be administrative, executive or quasi-judicial, fairly, by which I mean applying his mind dispassionately to a fair analysis of the particular problem and the information available to him in analysing it. If any hypothetical case, and in any real case, this Court was satisfied that an immigration officer was not so doing, then in my view mandamus would lie."

In *State of Orissa v. Dr. (Miss) Binapani Dei and others*², Shah, J., speaking for the Court, dealing with an enquiry made as regards the correct age of a Government servant, observed thus :

"We think that such an enquiry and decision were contrary to the basic concept of justice and cannot have any value. It is true that the order is administrative in character, but even an administrative order which involves civil consequences as already stated, must be made consistently with the rules of natural justice after informing the first respondent of the case of the State....."

The aim of the rules of natural justice is to secure justice of to put it negatively to prevent miscarriage of justice. These rules can operate only in areas not covered by any law validly made. In other words they do not supplant the law of the land but supplement it. The concept of natural justice has undergone a great deal of change in recent years. In the past it was thought that it included just two rules, namely (1) no one shall be a judge in his own case (Nemo debet esse iudex propria causa), and (2) no decision shall be given against a party without affording him a reasonable hearing (audi alteram partem). Very soon thereafter a third rule was envisaged and that is that quasi-judicial enquiries must be held in good faith, without bias and not arbitrarily or unreasonably. But in the course of years many more subsidiary rules came to be added to the rules of natural justice. Till very recently it was the opinion of the Courts that unless the authority concerned was required by the law under which it functioned to act judicially there was no room for the application of the rules of natural justice. The validity of that limitation is now questioned. If the purpose of the rules of natural justice is to prevent miscarriage of justice one fails to see why those rules should be made inapplicable to administrative enquiries. Often times it is not easy to draw the line that demarcates administrative enquiries from quasi-judicial enquiries. Enquiries which were considered administrative at one time are now being considered as quasi-judicial in character. Arriving at a just decision is the aim of both quasi-judicial enquiries as well as administrative enquiries. An unjust decision in an administrative enquiry may have more far reaching effect than a decision in a quasi-judicial enquiry. As observed by this Court in *Suresh Koshy George v. The University of Kerala and others*¹, the rules of natural justice are not embodied rules. What particular rule of natural justice should apply to a given case must depend to a great extent on the facts and circumstances of that case, the framework of the law under which the enquiry is held and the constitution of the Tribunal or body of persons appointed for that purpose. Whenever a complaint is made before a Court that some principle of natural justice had been contravened the Court has to decide whether the observance of that rule was necessary for a just decision on the facts of that case.

1. (1967) 2 Q.B. 617 at 630.

2. (1967) 2 S.C.R. 625 : (1967) 2 S.C.J. 339.

It was next urged by the learned Attorney-General that after all the selection board was only a recommendatory body. Its recommendations had first to be considered by the Home Ministry and thereafter by the U.P.S.C. The final recommendations were made by the U.P.S.C. Hence grievances of the petitioners have no real basis. According to him while considering the validity of administrative actions taken, all that we have to see is whether the ultimate decision is just or not. We are unable to agree with the learned Attorney-General that the recommendations made by the selection board were of little consequence. Looking at the composition of the board and the nature of the duties entrusted to it we have no doubt that its recommendations should have carried considerable weight with the U.P.S.C. If the decision of the selection board is held to have been vitiated, it is clear to our mind that the final recommendation made by the Commission must also be held to have been vitiated. The recommendations made by the Union Public Service Commission cannot be dissociated from the selections made by the selection board which is the foundation for the recommendations of the Union Public Service Commission. In this connection reference may be usefully made to the decision in Regina v. Criminal Injuries Compensation Board Ex Parte Lain.²

It was next urged by the learned Attorney-General that the mere fact that one of the members of the Board was biased against some of the petitioners cannot vitiate the entire proceedings. In this connection he invited our attention to the decision of this Court in *Sumar Chand Jain v. Union of India and another*³. Therein the Court repelled the contention that the proceedings of a departmental promotion committee were vitiated as one of the members of that committee was favourably disposed towards one of the selected candidates. The question before the Court was whether the plea of mala fides was established. The Court came to the conclusion that on the material on record it was unable to uphold that plea. In that case there was no question of any conflict between duty and interest nor any member of the departmental promotion committee was a judge in his own case. The only thing complained of was that one of the members of the promotion committee was favourably disposed towards one of the competitors. As mentioned earlier in this case we are essentially concerned with the question whether the decision taken by the board can be considered as having been taken fairly and justly.

One more argument of the learned Attorney-General remains to be considered. He urged that even if we are to hold that Naqishbund should not have participated in the deliberations of the selection board while it considered the suitability of Basu, Baig and Kaul, there is no ground to set aside the selection of other officers.

1. (1969) 1 S.C.J. 543.

2. (1967) 2 Q.B. 864.

3. W.P. No. 237 of 1966 decided on 4-5-67.

According to him it will be sufficient in the interest of justice if we direct that the cases of Basu, Baig and Kaul be reconsidered by a Board of which Naqishbund is not a member. Proceeding further he urged that under any circumstance no case is made out for disturbing the election of the Officers in the junior scale. We are unable to accept either of these contentions. As seen earlier Naqishbund was a party to the preparation of the select list in order of preference and that he is shown as No. 1 in the list. To that extent he was undoubtedly a judge in his own case, a circumstance which is abhorrent to our concept of justice. Now coming to the selection of the officers in the junior scale service, the selections to both the senior scale service as well as junior scale service were made from the same pool. Every officer who had put in a service of 8 years or more, even if he was holding the post of an Assistant Conservator of Forests was eligible for being selected for the senior scale service. In fact some Assistant Conservators have been selected for the senior scale service. At the same time some of the officers who had put in more than eight years of service had been selected for the junior scale service. Hence it is not possible to separate the two sets of officers.

For the reasons mentioned above these petitions are allowed and the impugned selections set aside. The Union Government and the State Government shall pay the costs of the petitioners.

v.

M/S. Sudarsanam Iyengar & Sons ... Respondent.

Travancore Cochin General Sales Tax rules (1950), Rule 33—Interpretation—Assessment of escaped turnover of business—"Determine"—Meaning of—Assessment, if denotes the entirety of proceedings or the final order of assessment.

It is well established that assessment proceedings under the Sales Tax Act must be held to be pending from the time the proceedings are initiated until they are terminated by a final order of assessment. In the context of Sales Tax legislation the use of the words "proceed to assess" and "determine" would not lead to different consequences or result. In this connection the words which follow the word "determine" in rule 33 of the Travancore Cochin General Sales Tax Rules, 1950 must be accorded their due signification. The words "assess the tax payable" cannot be ignored and it is clearly meant that the assessment has to be made within the period prescribed. Assessment is a comprehensive word and can denote the entirety of proceedings which are taken with regard to it. It cannot and does not mean a final order of assessment alone unless there is something in the context of a particular provision which compels such a meaning being attributed to it.

Appeal by Special Leave from the Judgment and Decree dated the 18th June, 1968 of the Kerala High Court in Writ Appeal No. 46 of 1967.

M.R.K. Pillai, Advocate, for Appellant.

T.A. Ramachandran, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Grover, J.—This is an appeal by Special Leave from a judgment of the Kerala High Court. The facts may be firstly stated : The respondent was a non-resident dealer carrying on business in Quilon, Ernakulam and Calicut in the State of Kerala. When the assessment in respect of sales tax for the assessment years 1961-62 and 1962-63 was pending the respondent had applied for a bifurcation of the assessment by treating his business at three places mentioned above as separate units. This request was acceded to by the Board of Revenue. The orders of assessment relating to the two years were made in April, 1964 and March, 1964 respectively.

The Sales Tax Officer issued notices in December, 1965 for reopening the original assessments on the ground that certain turnover had escaped assessment. The objections of the respondent to these notices having failed a writ petition seeking to quash the orders made by the Sales Tax authorities was filed. A learned Single-Judge held that in respect of the assessment year 1961-62 the Sales Tax Officer had no jurisdiction or authority to proceed under Rule 33 of the Travancore Cochin General Sales Tax Rules, 1950 which were in force at the material time. It was found that the notice served in December, 1965 relating to that assessment year was beyond the time limit of three years prescribed by the rule. As regards the assessment year 1962-63 the learned judge held that the time-limit would expire on 31st March, 1966. Owing to the writ petition and the stay orders which had been made the assessment could not be completed. The learned judge felt that it was owing to the orders of the Court that the Sales Tax authorities had been prevented from completing the assessment within the time. While disposing of the writ petition it was observed that the Sales Tax authorities would be at liberty to complete the proceedings initiated by the notice within the period of 59 days at the expiry of which the period prescribed by Rule 33 was to expire. The respondent preferred an appeal to a division bench which set aside the direction granting 59 days extension for completing the assessment on the ground that the same was not justified under the law.

Counsel for the appellant has confined the appeal only to the proceedings relating to the assessment year 1962-63. It is admitted that with regard to the other year 1961-62 the proceedings became barred. It is contended before us that on a true construction of Rule 33 it should be held that the proceedings under that Rule have to commence within three years next succeeding to that to which the tax relates and that it is not necessary that the entire proceedings relating to the escaped assessment should be completed within that period. In other words if such proceedings under Rule 33 have been commenced within the period prescribed by the rule they can be continued even beyond the period of three years till a final order of assessment is made. Reliance has been placed on a number of decisions of this Court some of which may be noticed. In *The State of Punjab and others v. Tara Chand Lajpat Rai*¹, the question which came up for consideration was that where the Sales Tax Authority issued a notice under section 11 (2) of the Punjab General Sales Tax Act, 1948 before the expiry of three years from the termination of the period for furnishing returns but finalised the assessment order after three years from the aforesaid date, whether such an assessment could be said to be barred by time. It was held that assessment proceedings commenced in the case of a registered dealer either when he furnished a return or when a notice was issued to him under section 11 (2) of the Punjab Act and if such proceedings were taken within the prescribed time, though the assessment was finalised subsequently even after the expiry of the prescriber period no question of limitation would arise. In *The State of Punjab and another v. Murlidhar Mahabir Prasad*², the question of laws was whether on a proper interpretation of sub-sections (4) and (5) of section 11 of the Punjab Act the period of limitation was three years for making the assessment from the last date on which the return was to be filed or whether the order of assessment was valid even after it was made after a period of three years provided the necessary notice had been issued within that period. The aforesaid provision of the Punjab Act may be read :

“ 11. (4) If a registered dealer, having furnished returns in respect of a period fails to comply with the terms of a notice issued under sub-section (2) the Assessing Authority shall within three years after the expiry of such period, proceed to assess to the best of his judgment the amount of the tax due from the dealer.

1. (1967) 19 S.T.C. 493 : (1967) 3 S.C.R. 1408.
10 : (1967) 2 S.C.J. 404 : A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 2. (1968) 21 S.T.C. 29.

(5) If a registered dealer does not furnish returns in respect of any period by the prescribed date, the Assessing Authority shall within three years after the expiry of such period, after giving the dealer a reasonable opportunity of being heard, proceed to assess to the best of his judgment, the amount of tax, if any, due from the dealer."

Relying mainly on the observation in *Ghanshyam Das v. Regional Assistant Commissioner of Sales Tax, Nagpur*¹, this Court held that the proceedings for assessment were valid because the same had been initiated within the period prescribed under section 11 (5). The principle laid down in *Tara Chand Lajpat Rai's*², case was followed.

Rule 33 of the relevant rules is in these terms :

Rule 33 (1) "If for any reason the whole or any part of the turnover of business of a dealer or licensee has escaped assessment to tax in any year or if the licence fee has escaped levy in any year, the assessing authority or licensing authority as the case may be, subject to the provisions of sub-rule (2) may at any time within three years next succeeding that to which the tax or licence fee relates determine to the best of his judgment the turnover which has escaped assessment and assess the tax payable or levy the licence fee in such turnover after issuing a notice to the dealer or licensee and after making such enquiry as he considers necessary."

Now in view of the previous decisions the principle is firmly established that assessment proceedings under the Sales Tax Act must be held to be pending from the time the proceedings are initiated until they are terminated by a final order of assessment. The distinguishing feature on which emphasis has been laid by the Counsel for the respondent is that the language employed in rule 33 is such as to lead to only one conclusion that the final determination of the turnover which has escaped assessment and the assessment of the tax have to be done within three years. It is pointed out that in the other Sales Tax provisions which came up for consideration in the cases mentioned above the words employed were "proceed to assess" e.g., sub-sections (4) and (5) of section 11 of the Punjab General Sales Tax Act. Our attention has been invited to the appropriate dictionary meaning of the word "determine" which is "to settle or decide"—to come to a judicial decision—(Shorter Oxford English Dictionary). It is suggested that the word "determine" was employed in Rule 33 with a definite intention to set the limit within which the final order in the matter of assessment should be made, the limit being three years. We find it difficult to accept that in the context of Sales Tax legislation the use of the words "proceed to assess" and "determine" would lead to different consequences or result. In this connection the words which follow the word "determine" in Rule 33 must be accorded their due signification. The words "assess the tax payable" cannot be ignored and it is clearly meant that the assessment has to be made within the period prescribed. Assessment is a comprehensive word and can denote the entirety of proceedings which are taken with regard to it. It cannot and does not mean a final order of assessment alone unless there is something in the context of a particular provision which compels such a meaning being attributed to it. In our judgment despite the phraseology employed in Rule 33 the principle which has been laid in other cases relating to analogous provisions in Sales Tax statute must be followed as otherwise the purpose of a provision like Rule 33 can be completely defeated by taking certain collateral proceedings and obtaining a stay order as was done in the present case or by unduly delaying assessment proceedings beyond a period of three years.

It is undoubtedly open to the Legislature or the rule making authority to make its intention quite clear that on the expiry of a specified period no final order of assessment can be made. Then the taxing authorities would certainly be debarred from completing the assessment beyond the period prescribed as was the case in sub-section (3) of section 34 of the Income-tax Act, 1922; but such is not the case here and we would hold that the assessment proceedings relating to the year 1962-63 were within time.

1. (1964) 4 S.C.R. 436; (1964) 1 I.T.J. 74; 2. (1967) 19 S.T.C. 493; (1967) 3 S.C.R. (1964) 1 S.C.J. 121; 51 I.T.R. 557. 10; (1967) 2 S.C.J. 404; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1408.

The appeal is allowed and the judgment of the High Court is set aside. The case shall go back to the High Court for disposal of such points as were previously not decided. In terms of the previous order dated 3rd April, 1969, the respondents shall be entitled to costs in this Court.

... *Appellant

v.

... Respondent.

Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules (1955), Proviso to Rule 12-A—Interpretation—Requirement of warranty in writing about “the nature, substance and quality” of the article of food as demanded by the vender—“Quality is up to the mark” if could be interpreted to have same effect as certifying “the nature, substance and quality” of an article of food.

When the proviso to rule 12-A of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, expressly says that no warranty in such form (Form VI-A) shall be necessary in certain eventualities it would be rewriting the rule to hold that nevertheless the things must exist in the label or the cash memo. It seems that if the words in the warranty can reasonably be interpreted to have the same effect as certifying “the nature, substance and quality” of an article of food, the warranty will fall within the proviso. The Prevention of Food Adulteration Act is of wide application and millions of small traders have to comply with the provisions of the Act and the Rules.

The words “quality is up to the mark” in the cash memo means that the quality of the article is up to the standard required by the Act and the vendee. Quality in this context would include nature and substance because the name of the article is given in the cash memo. It must be remembered that it is not a document drafted by a solicitor; it is a document using the language of a tradesman. Any tradesman, when he is assured that the quality of the article is up to the mark will readily conclude that he is being assured that the article is not adulterated. The offence, if any, has been committed by the seller and not the appellant.

Appeal from the Judgment and Order dated the 21st July, 1967 of the Kerala High Court in Criminal Appeal No. 109 of 1966.

A. S. R. Chari, Senior Advocate (A. S. Nambiar and K.R. Nambiar, Advocates, within him), for Appellant.

V. K. Krishna Menon, Senior Advocate (M. R. K. Pillai, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sikri, J.—In this appeal by certificate the only point that arises is whether the cash memo. Exhibit D-1, issued by the seller to the appellant contains a warranty within rule 12-A of the rules framed under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (XXXVII of 1954), hereinafter referred to as the Act. The Magistrate who tried the complaint, held that Exhibit D-1 was a proper warranty and it fell within the proviso to rule 12-A. The High Court on appeal held to the contrary.

The relevant facts are these. The appellant is a Rice and General Merchant and holds a wholesaler's licence. It was alleged in the complaint that the appellant had stored and exposed for sale and sold compounded Asafoetida which was found to have been adulterated by wheat starch and tapioca starch and that non-permitted orange coal tar dye was present. The report of the Public Analyst to Government, Trivandrum, was relied on in this connection.

The appellant appeared as a witness and he stated that he purchased Asafoetida from L. T. Alakesan and Brothers, received it in enclosed packets in bags and sold it in bags. He received invoice which reads as follows :

"L.T. Alakesan & Brothers,

He further stated that "it is written on the packet as "Extra Superior" in English and as "Compounded miskey full of quality and flavour" in Tamil."

The relevant statutory provisions are :

The Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954.

"Section 14. Manufacturers, distributors and dealers to give warranty :—

No manufacturer, distributor or dealer of any article of food shall sell such article to any vendor unless he also gives a warranty in writing in the prescribed form about the nature and quality of such article to the vendor."

Section 19 (2). A vendor shall not be deemed to have committed an offence pertaining to the sale of any adulterated or misbranded article of food if he proved:—

(a) that he purchased the article of food—

(i) in a case where a licence is prescribed for the sale thereof, from a duly licensed manufacturer, distributor or dealer,

(ii) in any other case, from any manufacturer, distributor or dealer, with a written warranty in the prescribed form ; and

(b) that the article of food while in his possession was properly stored and that he sold it in the same state as he purchased it".

The Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955.

"Rule 12-A, Warranty—Every trader selling an article of food to a vendor shall, if the vendor so requires, deliver to the vendor a warranty in Form VI-A :

Provided that no warranty in such form shall be necessary if the label on the article of food or the cash memo. delivered by the trader to the vendor in respect of that article contains a warranty certifying that the food contained in the package or container or mentioned in the cash memo. is the same in nature, substance and quality as demanded by the vendor.

Explanation.—The term 'trader' shall mean an importer, manufacturer, wholesale dealer or an authorised agent of such importer, manufacturer or wholesale dealer."

[1] We are not concerned with the question whether rule 12-A is contrary to the provisions of the Act. We take it that it is valid and if the appellant's case falls within the proviso he is entitled to acquittal.

It was contended before us on behalf of the respondent that the warranty must state expressly that the food mentioned in the cash memo. was the same in nature, substance and quality as demanded by the vendor, and if these words did not exist in the cash memo., the proviso would not apply. We are unable to accede to this contention. It may be that if the warranty is not contained in a label or cash memo the warranty must be in Form VI-A, which uses these words :

"We hereby certify that the food/foods mentioned in this invoice is/are warranted to be the same in nature, substance and quality as that demanded by the vendor."

But we do not decide this as it is not necessary to do so. In our view when the proviso expressly says that no warranty in such form shall be necessary in certain eventualities it would be rewriting the rule to hold that nevertheless the same things must exist in the label or the cash memo. It seems to us that if the words in the warranty can reasonably be interpreted to have the same effect as certifying "the nature, substance and quality" of an article of food, the warranty will fall within the proviso. The Act is of wide application and millions of small traders have to comply with the provisions of the Act and the Rules. The learned Counsel for the State says that if they are not able to comply with the provisions they should stop carrying on their trade. But if the object underlying the Act can be achieved, without disorganising the trade, by giving a reasonable interpretation to rule 12-A, it is our duty to do so.

A number of English cases were referred to us, but we do find it necessary to refer to them as they interpret the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and the later Food and Drugs Act, 1955. The language of the relevant sections dealing with defences is different and warranties employing different words have been interpreted. But they do at least show this that trade can be carried on and the object of the Act is not defeated even if traders use ordinary language of the trade or popular language in warranties.

Coming now to the language used in the cash memo. it seems to us that the words "quality is up to the mark" mean that the quality of the article is up to the standard required by the Act and the vendee. Quality in this context would include nature and substance because the name of the article is given in the cash memo. It must be remembered that it is not a document drafted by a solicitor, it is a document using the language of a tradesman. Any tradesman, when he is assured that the quality of the article is up to the mark will readily conclude that he is being assured that the article is not adulterated. The offence, if any, has been committed by the seller and not the appellant.

There was some argument before us as to the difference in the meaning of the words "nature, substance and quality." It was pointed out that section 14 only uses two words "nature and quality" and not substance. But it is not necessary to express our views on this point. Reference was made to the case of Baburally v. Corporation of Calcutta.¹ This Court held that the words on the label and the so-called cash memo in that case did not contain the requisite warranty. But we are unable to see how that case assists either the appellant or the State.

In the result the appeal is allowed, judgment of the High Court set aside and that of the Magistrate restored. The appellant's bail bond shall be treated as cancelled.

Jothi Timber Mart, etc.

... Appellants*

v.

The Corporation of Calicut and another

... Respondents.

Calicut City Municipal Act (XXX of 1961), Proviso to section 126 (1)—Interpretation—Levy of tax on timber on entry—No tax on timber brought into the city in the course of transit to any place outside the city and directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water—Proviso if exempts from taxation timber brought into the city in the course of transit even when not directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water.

By virtue of Article 246 read with Schedule VII, Item 52, List II, of the Constitution, the State may legislate in the matter of "tax on the entry of goods into a local area for consumption, use or sale therein." The municipality derives its power to tax from the State Legislature and can obviously not have authority more extensive than the authority of the State Legislature. Section 126 of the Calicut City Municipal Act, 1961 (XXX of 1961), declares a charge of tax on timber brought into the city. The proviso to section 126 (1) says that no tax shall be levied on any timber brought into the city in the course of transit to any place outside the city and directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water. The proviso does not exempt from taxation timber brought into the city in the course of transit even when it is not directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water. It is difficult to hold that the proviso is enacted with the object of bringing to tax all (entry of timber which is not brought into the city in the course of transit to any) place outside the city and directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water.

D. P. Singh and M. R. K. Pillai, Advocates, for Respondent No. 2 (In all the Appeals).

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Shah, J.—In a group of petitions presented before the High Court of Kerala the appellants challenged the validity of the levy of "timber-tax" by the Corporation of Calicut on the grounds, inter alia, that the State Legislature is incompetent to impose that tax under the Kerala Act (XXX of 1961). Govindan Nair, J., declared that the Legislature was incompetent to enact section 126 of the Calicut City Municipal Act, 1961 (XXX of 1961). The decision of Govindan Nair, J., was reversed in appeal by a Division Bench of the High Court and the petitions were dismissed.

By virtue of Article 246 read with Schedule VII, Item 52, List II of the Constitution, the State may legislate in the matter of "tax on the entry of goods into a local area for consumption, use or sale therein." The appellants contend that section 126 conferring authority to impose timber tax violates the restrictions upon the legislative power imposed by the Constitution and on that account is void.

Section 98 of the Act enumerates the taxes and duties which the Municipality may levy and one of the taxes described in clause (e) is "tax on timber brought into the city". Section 126 of declares a charge of tax on timber brought into the city : it provides, (insofar as it is material):

" (1) If the Council by a resolution determine that a tax shall be levied on timber brought into the city, such tax shall be levied at such rates, not exceeding five rupees per ton, and in such manner as may be determined by the Council:

Provided that no tax shall be levied on any timber brought into the city in the course of transit to any place outside the city and directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water.

(2) No timber shall, except in the case referred to in the proviso to sub-section (1) be brought into the city unless the tax due thereon has been paid.

(3) The tax shall be levied on timber kept within the city for sale if the Commissioner has reason to believe that the tax, if any, due thereon has not been paid :

* * * * *

Power to make bye-laws for sale and seizure of timber in respect of which tax is not paid and for carrying out the provisions relating to the levy of tax is conferred by section 126 (6) and section 369 (1) of the Act. The Corporation of Calicut has framed bye-laws relating to the levy and collection of timber tax. It is provided by clause 3 that the tax on timber shall be paid immediately on timber being brought into the City. Bye-law 7 provides :

" (1) If timber is brought into the city and it is claimed that it is in the course of transit to a place outside the city and not for consumption, use or sale within the city and if in the opinion of the authority or officer authorised to collect the tax on timber, such timber brought into the city is not for the purpose of transit but for the purpose of consumption, use or sale therein, such authority or officer may demand from the person claiming exemption an amount equal to the tax leviable for such timber as security.

(2) If the person, who has paid the security satisfies the Commissioner within 14 days from the date of payment that the timber in respect of which the amount was paid was brought into the city in the course of transit and not for consumption, use or sale therein the Commissioner shall refund the amount to such person. Otherwise the same shall be appropriated towards tax due on such timber.

(3) * * * * *

(4) * * * * *

The High Court held that timber may be imported within the limits of the Corporation for four purposes—(1) for consumption in the city; (2) for use in the city; (3) for sale in the city; and (4) for transit through the city, and since all the four purposes were within the enacting part of the section and the proviso to section 126 (1) having eliminated the right of the Municipality to levy tax for transit through the city, "the taxing power conferred by Entry 52, List II of the Seventh Schedule was ensured and its constitutional strength and validity upheld" thereby.

Counsel for the appellants contends that the High Court was in error in holding that entry of timber into the Municipal area may be only for consumption, use, or sale within the Municipality or in the course of transit through the limits of the municipality. He says that the entry may for instance be merely for storage of the goods within the limits of the municipality and a provision levying tax on goods entering the limits of the municipality without a specification of the purpose is beyond the legislative power of the State.

Entry of goods within the local area for consumption, use or sale therein is made taxable by the State Legislature : authority to impose a general levy of tax on entry of goods into a local area is not conferred on the State Legislature by item 52 of List II of Schedule VII of the Constitution. The Municipality derives its power to tax from the State Legislature and can obviously not have authority more extensive than the authority of the State Legislature. If the State Legislature is competent to levy a tax only on the entry of goods for consumption, use or sale into a local area, the Municipality cannot under a legislation enacted in exercise of the power conferred by item 52, List II have power to levy tax in respect of goods brought into the local area for purposes other than consumption, use or sale. The authority, of the State Legislature itself being subject to a restriction in that behalf, section 126 may reasonably be read as subject to the same limitations. When the power of the Legislature with limited authority is exercised in respect of a subject-matter, but words of wide and general import are used, it may reasonably be presumed that the Legislature was using the words in regard to that activity in respect of which it is competent to legislate and to no other ; and that the Legislature did not intend to transgress the limits imposed by the Constitution ; see *In re Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937*¹. To interpret the expression "brought into the city" used in section 126 (1) as meaning brought into the city for any purpose and without any limitations would, in our judgment, amount to attributing to the Legislature an intention to ignore the constitutional limitations. The expression "brought into the city" in section 126 was therefore rightly interpreted by the High Court as meaning brought into the municipal limits for purposes of consumption, use or sale and not for any other purpose.

While we agree with the ultimate conclusion of the High Court we may observe that we do not agree with the assumption made by the High Court that the entry of goods into the city may be only for the four purposes mentioned by the High Court ; nor do we hold that the proviso exempts from taxation timber brought into the city in the course of transit even when it is not directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water. The proviso in our judgment has a limited operation. It merely provides that the municipality shall not be entitled to levy a tax on timber brought into the city in the course of transit to any place outside the city and directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water. But on that account we are unable to hold that the proviso is enacted with the object of bringing to tax all entry of timber which is not brought into the city in the course of transit to any place outside the city and directly removed out of the city by rail, road or water.

The appeals fail and are dismissed. There will be no order as to costs in these appeals.

Preventive Detention Act (IV of 1950), section 3—Scope—Detenu and his associates using deadly weapons, acid bulbs, iron rods, lathis etc., indiscriminately and thus endangering human lives in the locality—Detenu and his associates also preventing the police constables from discharging their lawful duties—Grounds of detention if have reference merely to maintenance of order.

The detenu in each of the cases (as indicated in the grounds of detention) acted along with associates who were armed with lathis, iron rods, acid bulbs, etc. It is clearly said in ground No. 1 that he committed a riot and in discriminately used acid bulbs, iron rods, lathis, etc., endangering human lives. This ground cannot be said to have reference merely to maintenance of order because it affects the locality and everybody who lives in the locality. Similarly, in the second ground, he along with his associates prevented the police constables from discharging their lawful duties and thus affected everybody living in the locality. In ground No. 3, again the whole locality was in danger as the detenu and his associates were armed with deadly weapons and these were in fact used indiscriminately endangering human lives in the locality. The object of the detenu seems to have been to terrorise the locality and bring the whole machinery of law and order to a halt. Therefore, it cannot be said that the grounds do not have any relation to the maintenance of public order. There has been no breach of the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950. The fact that public order is affected by an act which was also an offence under the Indian Penal Code seems to be irrelevant.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sikri, J.—This is a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution by Shyamal Chakraborty who has been detained under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). Three grounds have been urged by the learned Counsel why we should issue a writ of habeas corpus directing his release : (1) that the detenu's representation was not considered by the Government, (2) that the grounds furnished to the detenu mentioned offences under the Indian Penal Code and cannot be used for the purpose of detaining the detenu except in emergencies, and (3) that the grounds do not have any relation to the maintenance of public order. Following are the facts as they emerge from the affidavits on record.

The detenu was detained by an order No. 3846-D-D. (S), dated 13th November, 1968, passed by the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta in exercise of powers conferred on him by section 3 (2) of the Act. The detenu was arrested on 13th November, 1968 and was served with the grounds of detention both in English and in vernacular on the same day. On 15th November, 1968, the Commissioner of Police reported the fact of such detention of the petitioner together with the grounds and other particulars having bearing on the necessity of the order to the State Government. On 19th November, 1968, the Governor was pleased to approve the said order of detention under section 3 (3) of the Act and on the same day the Governor submitted the report to the Central Government under section 3 (4) of the Act together with grounds and other particulars having bearing on the necessity of the order. On 7th December, 1968, his case was placed before the Advisory Board under section 9 of the Act. On 6th January, 1969, the Advisory Board after consideration of the materials placed before it was of the opinion that there was sufficient cause for detention of the petitioner. The petitioner had not submitted any representation to the State Government till then. By an order dated 8th January, 1969, the Governor was pleased to confirm the order of detention. It appears that on the 13th January, 1969 and 16th January, 1969, the detenu made representations. After the receipt of these representations the same were sent by the Home Department to the Commissioner of Police for his report. On 1st April, 1969, the Commissioner of Police informed the Home Department that he did not recommend the release of the petitioner. But the representations of the petitioner were not received back from the Commissioner of Police with his letter of the 1st April, 1969. Later on the Commissioner of Police sent back the representation dated 13th January, 1969 to the Home Department. This Court on 28th March, 1969, issued a notice under Article 32 of the Constitution to the Commissioner of Police and to the State Government to show cause why Rule Nisi should not be issued made returnable three weeks hence.

On receipt of this notice the State Government refrained from passing any order on the representation dated 13th January, 1969. The representation dated 16th January, 1969 is untraceable, but effort is being made to trace it. According to the Commissioner of Police it was on the same lines as the representation dated 13th January, 1969.

It is necessary to reproduce the grounds of detention served on the detenu and they are in the following terms :

“ You are being detained in pursuance of a detention order made under sub-section (2) of section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV of 1950) on the following grounds :

You have been acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order by the commission of offences of rioting, assault etc., as detailed below :

(1) That on 28th June, 1968, at about 6 P.M. you along with your associates being armed with lathis, iron rods, acid bulbs, etc., committed a riot in Kumartuli Park in course of which you severely assaulted Shri Amal Krishna Roy of 20-A Abhoy Mitra Street and iron rods, acid bulbs etc., were indiscriminately used endangering human lives.

(2) That on 23rd July, 1968, at about 6.10 P.M. you along with your associates being armed with lathis, iron rod, hockey sticks, etc., attacked constables Sankar Lal Bose and Jagdish Singh both of Shyampukur P.S. on Kaliprosad Chakraborty Street near the Gaudiya Math who went there to discharge their lawful duties, as a result of which constable Sankar Lal Bose sustained bleeding injuries on his person.

(3) That in the night of 3rd October, 1968, between 11.50 P.M. and 1.30 A.M. you along with your associates being armed with deadly weapons took part in a riot at Rabindra Sarani from Bug Bazar Street crossing to Kumartuli Street crossing in course of which bombs, brickbats and soda water bottles were indiscriminately hurled endangering human lives.

You are hereby informed that you may make a representation to the State Government against the detention order and that such representation should be addressed to the Assistant Secretary to the Government of West Bengal, Home Department, Special Section, Writers' Buildings, Calcutta and forwarded through the Superintendent of the Jail in which you are detained as early as possible.

You are also informed that under section 10 of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV of 1950) the Advisory Board, shall, if you desire to be heard, hear you in person and that if you desire to be so heard by the Advisory Board you should intimate such desire in your representation to the State Government.”

Coming now to the first point raised by the learned Counsel it seems to us that there has been no breach of the provisions of the Act. This Court has held that it is obligatory on the Government to deal with the representations made by the detenu, but the facts recited above show that the detenu did not choose to make a representation before the Advisory Board dealt with the matter, and further the State Government was in the process of dealing with the representation when this Court issued the notice. Moreover, in the representation dated 13th January, 1969, the detenu barely stated that the grounds were false and that the detenu was a poor man and the family conditions were miserable and he was living peacefully in the town and had never committed any act which was manifestly prejudicial to the maintenance of public order or communal harmony. He prayed that “ under the circumstances, I am to request you to kindly produce me before the Advisory Board and release me.” At that stage it was impossible to produce him before the Advisory Board. The Advisory Board had already dealt with the matter. Under these circumstances we are unable to say that there has been a breach of section 7. We trust that the State Government will now immediately deal with the representation or representations and pass a suitable order.
